MANASSES' PRAYER.—I bow the knee of my heart—that is I approach Thee with the deepest humility and reverence. This highly figurative and beautiful expression is very common among the peasantry of some counties in Ireland. Bishop ANDREWS is the only English writer in whose works I recollect having met it.—Booker's Obsolete Words.

THE eloquence of the pulpit should be pre-eminently the eloquence of elevated thought, uttered through that various structure of discourse and style of expression in which a versatile mind will convey such thought. It should be the eloquence of real life, and of great occasion. It should be the eloquence of manly purpose in great exigencies. In its best forms it will resemble, and yet surpass, the best eloquence of senates, in the emergencies of nations.—Phelps.

THE LONDON CREMATION AND URN SOCIETY.—From one of our foreign exchanges we learn that there was organized in London, on the fourteenth ultimo, with a capital of £50,000 in £1 shares, what is known as the Cremation and Urn Society. The objects in contemplation are set forth as follows:

To provide suitable means for the rapid decomposition of dead human bodies by cremation or burning, in place of producing the same result by the slow process of burial, and for that pupose to purchase land in convenient localities, or to make arrangements for carrying out the objects in existing cemeteries or burial-places, or adjacent thereto, and to erect and maintain suitable buildings and appliances, by means of which the objects may be carried out with propriety and decorum, and with such religious observances as may be usual and proper. Also to erect and maintain suitable buildings for the reception and preservation of the remains in urns or other receptacles, either on such land to be so purchased, or in existing cemeteries or burial places.

MANY a young aspirant after a philosophical faith trusts himself to the trackless ocean of rationalism in the spirit of the too confident apostle: "Lord, bid me come unto thee on the water.' And for awhile he knows not how deep he sinks, till the treacherous surface on which he treads is yielding on every side, and the dark abyss of utter unbelief is yawning to swallow him up. Well is it indeed with those who, even in that last fearful hour, can yet cry, "Lord, save me!" and can feel that supporting hand stretched out to grasp them, and hear that voice, so warning, yet so comforting, "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt!"—Monsel.

RALEIGH, N. C. JULY 22, 1874.

The Editor of this paper left last week with his excellent lady and two promising boys for Cleaveland White Sulphur Springs, where we suppose they are safely located for a few weeks, enjoying the rustic quiet and health-giving air of the 'hill-country.' The health of the Editor has been for some months impaired, and no one who is acquainted with the hard and confining work he has performed, could, with any safety to conscience, deny him the right and privilege of 'escaping as for his life' and seeking a mountain refuge, where no printer calls for 'copy' and visions of 'bad proof' do not haunt and disturb the serenity of his dreams;—where the rumbling of Bald Mountain may be heard, but not the grumbling of some subscriber whose paper has been prematurely crossed, and where the pursuit of health is more pleasant than a hot and perplexing needle-in-the-hay-stack chase through a mail-list of many thousand names after the whereabouts of some innocent subscriber who renews his subscription without stating his post-office.

But, seriously, the recreation the Editor is taking is needed, and we trust that he will derive much benefit from his sojourn at the Springs. He will not be long absent, and therefore, if the bona fides should fail, like Phaeton, to keep his chariot wheels "in media via," but deflect to the right or left, they will not get so far out of the track that the experienced hand and eye of the returning Apollo may not guide them to their accustomed path.

Rev. W. H. Bobbitt, Presiding Elder of the Raleigh District, has employed on the Granville circuit Rev. Joseph W. Shackford, a young minister from Virginia, who, we learn, is giving great satisfaction to the people of his charge. He is the son of a Methodist minister, a graduate of the University of Virginia, and a good scholar;—modest in his deportment, talented in preaching, and above all, devoted to his church and the work of the ministry, and possessed of marked spirituality. The latter quality is an essential element in a true and successful minister, and without it talents and all things else are of no avail. We are glad to learn that Mr. Shackford gives promise of great usefulness to the church, and is apt to fulfill it. We welcome him to our bounds, and trust his relations with our people may be both profitable and pleasant.

Says the Statesville Landmark:—"We have had the pleasure this week of a visit from Rev. B. B. Culbreth. He is an old friend—and one of those open, whole-soul'd Methodist preachers we love to know. He is now among us, attending the District Conference, as the Agent of Trinity College. He is doing noble work for Trinity, and meeting with all the success he could reasonably expect, considering the scarcity of money.

We can say as much for that good man, Rev. T. J. Gattis, who is also attending the Conference as the Agent of Davenport Female College.

We call attention to the notice which Prof. W. C. Doub gives of his purpose to furnish those who may desire them with portraits of his late father, Rev. Peter Doub, D. D., whose memory is so sacred and dear to all Methodists in North Carolina. The object contemplated by Prof. Doub is a laudable one, and should receive encouragement.

It was a kind and commendable act, that of some members of Tryon Street M. E. Church, South, at Charlotte, who presented a handsome set of pulpit and altar furniture to the new Methodist Church at Monroe. Such practical illustrations of love among the brethren are refreshing.

Rev. W. C. Norman, in charge of Wentworth circuit, says, in a note of the 13th inst: "I am happy to state that a gracious revival of religion is now in progress at Ruffin. There have been up to this time 16 or 18 conversions, and still there are many penitents at the altar."

Rev. M. M. Marshall, late of Warrenton, has, in obedience to the 'call' made some time since by the congregation of Christ Church (Episcopal) of this city, taken charge of the church and is giving great satisfaction to the charge.

Rev. A. W. Mangum, Pastor of Edenton Street Church, contemplates spending the sultry month of August in the mountains of Western Carolina. His arduous, devoted and successful work entitles him to a season of rest.

Elective Judiciary.

We are interested in good government, and in having good laws faithfully and strictly executed, and bad ones cautiously administered so as not to afford a handle to oppression and wrong. Good government is so intimately connected with the happiness of men, progress and purity of society and the well-being of the church, that all who desire the increase and reign of morality and religion, must feel and evince an interest in the characters of those who make, construe and execute our laws. To make laws requires wisdom—to execute them, firmness, but to construe them when made, and to direct their execution, requires not only wisdom and firmness, but sobriety, goodness, impartiality and prudence. Despite the safe-guards with which the bench is hedged about, the watchful eye of counsel and the right of appeal that lies from a lower court, there is nevertheless an almost immeasurable power for good or evil lodged in the hands of the Judge—and countless opportunities to promote or defeat justice, to preserve or destroy the rights and happiness of men.

It is then a matter of the last importance that Judges should be selected with care, with regard wholly to their fitness in every respect and with no concern at all for their past services to party or their present or future strength and influence with the people. It is to be regretted that our time-honored custom of selecting our judiciary which placed upon the Bench men to whom our State points with pride, and others looked with envy, was abandoned for the more dangerous and palpably unwise method which now obtains. All professions and attempts to the contrary, the judicial elections cannot be separated from the influences of politics and the intrigues of party. When men offer themselves or are offered by nominating conventions for the suffrages of the masses, they or their friends and adherents will solicit and plot for success and compromise the dignity and endanger the purity of the position by making it a prize for the hardest worker and shrewdest demagogue.

Heated political contests necessarily create asperities, make enemies and introduce prejudices into the breast of an elected Judge where freedom and impartiality should alone reign, and it is not surprising that men thus elected should at times show favor to those who have befriended them and indifference, if not bitterness, to those whose opposition they have encountered.

It is almost as necessary, too, that citizens and suitors should feel satisfied with the administration of the courts as that they be properly administered. Confidence in the integrity of a Judge will make men whose rights are passed upon, peaceable and law-abiding, who would rebel and inveigh against a judgment, however just it be, passed by one whom they believe to be himself unjust.

The contest now going on in several of our Judicial Districts is any thing but gratifying, and likely to result in anything but good. In one or two it has become intensely bitter and personal and is illustrating the unwisdom of the elective system of judiciary. If men must offer or be nominated let them not prochaim with a trumpet their own excellencies and deserts, and above all let them abstain from touching "the unclean thing" of politics.

Queer Pluck.

The Methodist Protestant commends Gen. Grant for his "pluck" in having the marriage ceremony of his daughter performed by a Methodist minister. Pluck, indeed, where is there a call for a display of pluck in employing the pastor of one's own church to perform the sacred rite for one's daughter? Why should one be ashamed of his preference for, or connection with, the largest and most influential church in christendom?

Yet, the Protestant is about half-right—there are Methodists (to their shame be it said) who have not the pluck, because they haven't the religion, to openly avow, in certain circles, their Methodist proclivities and alliances,—as if it left a stain to be in the bosom of a church whose origin is as high as the highest, whose founders were holy and consecrated men—whose ministers are pure and able and have illustrated in their lives and works the beauty of holiness and the power of pulpit logic and eloquence, whose progress has been unceasing and whose triumphs may well be considered as the tokens of Heaven's love and favor.

There are men whom Methodism has literally made who have been elevated by her teachings and lifted up to place and honor by her support (ingrand and then puffed up with pride, have turned and looked down upon her—ashamed of the stepping-stones by which they have risen,—ashamed of the brown and toil—worn hand that led and supported them—ashamed of plain unpretending Methodism in whose arms they were fondled and from whose full breasts they drank life-giving nourishment and strength. We are glad when such men leave the Methodist church to seek association with others, because they find no congeniality in ours, for we would be ashamed of our nature if we thought it was in sympathy with theirs. We have no patience with men who have to exercise pluck in order to love, revere and defend their mothers.

Colleges and High Schools.

We are glad to see that the subject of popular education and the interests of our Colleges and High Schools are receiving so much attention at the hands

The Educational Convention which met in Raleigh, recently will, we think, be productive of much practical good. The essays and discussions were practical, and gave evidence of careful thought upon the subjects thereof, and while the attendance was not as large, perhaps, as it ought to have been, yet that fact can be ascribed to no cause other than a lack of interest on the part of our people in a matter of such vital moment to the State.

Intelligence is the basis of good and lasting government, and of well regulated society. An intelligent people is not to be a true people, demanding and ready to support a free and well conducted government. Tyranny feeds and fattens upon the ignorance of the governed and chicanery and dishonesty flourish, and anarchy reigns where men's minds are benighted. Schools are the salt of society and the State, and without the savor of that salt, corruption and ruin are almost inevitable. Legislators must see to it that schools are provided whence intelligence may issue to make men understand, revere and obey the laws under which they live. If law-makers were as watchful of the interests of schools and education as they are to provide ways and means for the success and supremacy of their political parties, our colleges would be clothed with prosperity instead of languishing as they do, and school-houses that are now unused and falling in silent decay, would be filled with teachers and the taught.

Despite the energetic and heroic efforts that the authorities of our colleges have made, our institutions do not rejoice in the patronage and support which they deserve. What they are, they owe to themselves, and have received nothing from the State whose children and wards they are, and from which they should have some life nourishment. It is true our State is and has been impoverished and unable to do much for our Institutions, but something could be done, and to omit all effort is criminal.

In the Educational Convention, Hon. W. N. H. Smith, one of the ablest, purest and most devoted sons of the State, read a most admirable essay on the "Duty of the State to her Children," in which he advanced a plan of his own devising, we believe, and which our legislature would do well to consider with care, and if feasible to adopt. He said:

"Let the General Assembly declare their determination and support it by a pledge of public faith, to provide punctually for the payment of the semi-annual interest on so much of the public debt, and not exceeding a prescribed maximum, as shall bona fide become the property of these institutions, and to this end bonds of unquestioned validity thus acquired shall be surrendered and certificates issued in place of them for the perpetual payment of the interest on the principal money thereof, so long as such institution shall exist and such certificates shall not be assignable. These bonds are now rated in the Northern markets at some 20 cents on the dollar, but when ever by gift or otherwise any such become the property of such institution, it would become by the process suggested, connected with an interest bearing fund of par values for purposes of education within the State. Thus every dollar in value bestowed by the liberal and generous contributor, is augmented in useful results, five fold, without adding a single dollar to the aggregate of the public debt. If such are to be the consequences, more liberal subscriptions will be given, because each contributor knows that the loss of a single dollar to him is the gift of five to the charity. Could not the proposed $100,000 now sought to be raised by the friends of Wake Forest for the endowment of that college be much more readily raised if it then became a fund yielding annually 30,000 dollars? And can we well estimate the benefits to our people of an endowment so liberal and so safely and permanently invested? The State loses not a dollar by the operation, she escapes the obligation of raising money by public taxes, for purposes attainable through these endowments. She in return may secure by a provision in the law, a free tuition in such college to a large number of her meritorious and indigent youth, and thus the State and the College are harmoniously co-operating in a great public work whose useful results will be extended down the time of untold generations to come. Build up and establish your colleges and you build up and establish a permanent and healthy system of popular education."

The movements toward consolidation and re-organization of the Methodist forces of the Dominion of Canada have at last culminated in the union of the Wesleyan of the eastern and western provinces, and the New Connection Methodist. The name of the united body is to be, "The United Wesleyan Methodist Church of Canada," and in case of further union with other bodies of the Methodist family, "The Methodist Church of Canada."

— The Methodist Episcopal church has in the South 21 Conferences, 1,889 traveling ministers, 340, 479 members. The church property is valued at $7,212,671.

District Conferences.

We are in the midst of the District Conference season—a time when ministers and laymen meet together to "report progress" and attend to the interests of the church. Two of our Districts hold their Conferences this week, Raleigh and Shelby, and we trust a profitable and pleasant session will characterize each. We attended the last session of the Raleigh District Conference, and can wish our people nothing better than that the approaching session at Franklinton may be as profitable to the church and as pleasant to those attending as the Conference held last year at the pleasant little town of Cary. We have never seen a more decided success crown a meeting than was enjoyed then, and never were so impressed and convinced of the practical wisdom and efficacy of that part of our church polity which provides for District Conferences. It was a success in every regard. The entertainers were pleased—the ministers, lay-delegates and visitors none the less so and the church was greatly benefited and strengthened.

If rightly attended and conducted the District Conference is a great power for good. Just as statesmen encourage the frequent meetings and consultation of the people and advise "a frequent recurrence to first principles" in order to the preservation and enlargement of civil liberty and the strengthening of government; in like manner, it is of the greatest moment to the progress of the church and the upbuilding of the cause of Christ, that its members and advocates should frequently meet and confer together, return to first principles, thus ensuring a healthy conservatism and beating back dangerous heresies and hurtful innovations. It stimulates exertion, produces a generous rivalry among the different charges, fans the flame of church devotion, warms cold hearts and fires them with christian zeal.

We consider a District Conference of equal if not far more practical importance than the annual Conference. At the latter only a general, or bird's-eye-view can be taken of the field of operations—at the former a special view can be had of details, and the points of attack and defence, and the forces can therefore be disposed to better advantage. From the former, the artillery fires at long range, from the latter it is short—almost hand to hand with and destructive to, the enemies of the church. Each District knows its peculiar difficulties and wants and has time and opportunity to attend to and provide against them in a way and to an extent which the annual Conference cannot do.

Let every interest of the church receive careful and exhaustive consideration: let difficulties be frankly stated and discussed so that remedies may be suggested and applied: let the success which has attended one charge be held up for the encouragement of the others. When committees are appointed let them remember that their duty does not consist in simply making a report, full of platitudes and rhetoric, but that their province is to meet and consider what has been referred to them, and to make reports in which plans are suggested and which will excite discussion. It may be stated as a general rule, that a committee report which excites no opposition, and discussion but is adopted immediately and as a whole, is commonplace and a failure. It may do no harm but it will as certainly do no good We hope to have full and favorable reports of all our District Conferences and trust they will be largely attended.

An Important Suit.

The questions growing out of the Plan of Separation of the Methodist Church, North and South, have not yet been definitely and finally settled. The church property complications still engage the attention of the civil courts, and a case has been recently tried in Jonesboro, Tennessee, in which the counsel made exhaustive reviews of the difficulties between the two churches and the legal bearing of the plan agreed upon by them for their separation. So that the reference made by our late General Conference to the Plan, was not so unwise and ungracious as many persons, in both jurisdictions, have seemed to think it was. The last issue of the Methodist Advocate (Northern church) contains a full report of the argument made by Hon. N. A. Patterson for the Trustees of the M. E. Church. The following is a succinct statement of the case:

"The property in dispute was the Brush Creek camp-ground property—some four acres of land, on which there is a parsonage building. The property is in the suburbs of Johnson City, and is of itself valuable. The land was deeded in 1811 to the Methodist Episcopal Church for a camp-ground. It passed to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as this Church claims, by the Plan of Separation of 1844, from which time, until the close of the war, that Church held it, having in the meantime erected on it a parsonage. In 1865, some of the Trustees of the Church, South, having gone to the Church, North, put the property into the possession of the latter, which created a Board of Trustees to hold the property. The suit was decided in favor of the Trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and rents allowed from the date of the filing of the bill. This is the only Church suit between these Churches, yet tried, in which the property was deeded before the separation of 1844, and hence is important, as the final decision of it will determine a whole class of suits.—The Trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church prayed an appeal to the Supreme Court, and signify their intention, if they lose it in that court, if possible, to carry the cause to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Editorial Notes.

Unbending—a camp-meeting is being talked of by the Episcopalians of Chicago.

The Methodist Advocate, Atlanta, Ga., had a leading editorial last week on the subject of "Slavery," and with the aid of an Encyclopedia, a Bible Dictionary, and several Commentaries, managed to get through a column with great self satisfaction.—St. Louis Advocate.

The above is copied by the Raleigh Advocate. We trust that these brethren are equally "satisfied." Their opinions on slavery will certainly change in the other world if they do not in this.—Methodist Advocate.

That may be so, Brother Fuller, but one comfortable reflection is, we will have no such editorials to read when we get there.

A California paper reports that a Baptist minister's wife in that State 'offers to give all her husband's wedding fees," which, of course, fall to her, during June and July, as the beginning of an endowment for a chair of instruction in California College, to be filled by the wives of Baptist ministers She proposes to all the other ladies happy enough to have preachers as husbands, to unite in the effort.

It will take a long time to endow the chair.—ED.

A case of child-stealing is exciting the New York people and affording employment to wily detectives. A ten year old son of a prominent merchant in the city was caught on the street and abducted by some parties who demand, through anonymous letters, a large sum of money as a ransom.—The distressed father has offered to comply with the demands to the extent of his ability, but the brutal abductors will yield to nothing less than a full concession to what they require. Child-stealing is common in England, and other parts of Europe, and is practiced as a lucre-making profession by some hardened wretches. Victor Hugo, in his novel L'Homme Qui Rit, bases his story upon that trade plied by the villains of whose atrocities his hero 'Gwynplane' was a suffering subject.

New York City has been called the 'Modern Sodom' from the distressing wickedness that is rampant among the inhabitants of the great city. The festering vice which fills the lower strata oozes up and taints the upper and more refined classes of society; or rather it is the 'refined wickedness' of the 'upper tendom' that distills the deadly poison and drips and gathers its dregs below. Vice in the higher circles, sugar-coated with a pseudo-refinement and education, looks respectable and becomes fashionable, but when it is practiced below it appears in the hideousness which before was concealed. One of the most prevalent vices practiced by all classes is the violation of the Sabbath. In utter contempt of the laws of God, of nature and man, houses of business are kept open, trades plied, amusements patronized and indulged in, and as if six days were not enough to satisfy and surfeit its appetite, dissipation of all kinds holds its highest carnival on what should be the quiet and holy day. It is calculated that about 5,000 persons attend public balls or entertainments of one sort or another on Sunday evenings in New York City, while during the winter season at least that number attend additionally the public concerts and entertainments at the various gardens, &c. During the summer it is calculated that at least 100,000 go on "Sunday excursions" to the parks, suburban towns of various spots along the rivers, &c., while the number of establishments in the city of New York which "do business" on a Sunday, including the bar rooms, the cigar shops, the news stands, the Chatham street stores, the barbers in the morning, the East side shops, &c., exceed 7,000.

Salisbury District Conference.

The Salisbury District Conference convened in Statesville, N. C., July 9th, 1874—Rev. M. L. Wood, P. E. presiding.

The following ministers and delegates were present:

Salisbury Station—Rev. L. W. Crawford, Rev. A. K. Murchison, R. R. Crawford and J. F. Ross.

Salisbury Circuit—Rev. T. L. Triplett, Rev. Paul Kistler, and A. L. Coburn.

Mt. Zion Circuit—Rev. T. A. Coon, Rev. D. Brown, J. R. Cornelius, L. C. Perry, D. D. Ledwell, J. W. Jones and B. F. Sumrow, W. A. Black and J. A. Brown.

Statesville Station—Rev. Jas. W. Wheeler, H. P. Dwire, P. Tomlin, T. C. Anderson, J. B. Connelley.

Statesville Circuit G. A. Eagle, M. M. Mayes, J. H. Scroggs.

Mocksville Circuit—Rev. L. Shell, Rev. W. C. Wilson, Rev. V. Walker, B. I James.

Iredell Circuit—Rev. T. P. Ricaud, R. L. Weaver, T. M. Gill, W. Turner, W. I. Colvert.

Alexander Circuit—Rev. N. G. Whittington, Rev. A. Carson, W. H. Connor, J. Beckham, H. W. Mayes, J. B. King.

Yadkinville Circuit—Rev. R. T. N. Stephenson, Rev. T. S. Whittington, Bev. J. D. Buie, Rev. T. A. Nicholson, W. O. Smith.

Surry Circuit—Rev. N. S. Horton.

Suwanoon Mission—Rev. A. M. Long.

Wilkes Circuit—R. L. Hix.

Mountain Mission was not represented. The Pastors of Statesville Circuit and Mt. Airy Station were not present most of the District was pretty well represented.

The following persons were elected delegates to the next session of the N. C. Annual Conference, Rev. T. A. Nicholson, H. W. Mayes, T. C. Anderson, and R. R. Crawford. Rev. A. Carson, J. B. Connelly, B F Sumrow and J. F. Ross were elected alternates.

Among the visitors were Rev. L. L. Hendren, Agent Greensboro Female College, Rev. B. B. Culbreth, Agent Trinity College, Rev. T. J. Gattis, Agent and Rev W. M. Roby, President Davenport Female College, Rev. A. A. Boshamer, Henderson Circuit and Rev. M. V. Sherrill of Monroe Station.

The Committee on Education recommended the establishment of male and Female Schools of high grade, under the Control of the District Conference. Upon the recommendation of Yadkinville Circuit, Jonesville High School under the management of Rev. T. S. Whittington, was adopted as the male school of the Conference. A special committee was appointed to take into consideration the adoption of some similar institution for females, to report at the next session of the Conference.

The Conference was a decided success,—productive of much good. We had not the pleasure of attending the religious exercises, but learn that the preaching was of the first order, and attended with much interest. We believe all that attended the Conference were more or less benefited, feeling that it was good to be there, in that the Lord of Hosts was with them, and that the God of Jacob was their counsellor. We never attended a more interesting or a more harmonious session of any kind. The bond of christian union was greatly strengthened, and the name of God glorified. The different reports show a marked improvement, and manifest a spirit of energy, which indicate that the old Salisbury district is advancing upon higher ground, and that the day is not far distant when she will compare favorably with any of her sisters. We are more than ever favorably impressed with the utility of District Conferences.

The Conference requested the publication of reports and resolution which are not yet ready for the press.

A. K. MURCHISON, Secretary.

A COLLECTION OF HYMNS AND TUNES FOR PUBLIC, SOCIAL, AND DOMESTIC WORSHIP. Nashville, Tenn: Published by A. H. Redford, Agent, for the M. E. Church, South. Single copies, Muslin, $2.00 Boards $1,50. Per Dozen; Muslin, $18,00; Boards, $15,00. For sale by J. W. Burke & Co., Macon and Atlanta.

We render thanks to our good brother Dr. Redford, Agent &c., for the above publication which he has recently forwarded to our office. While we have not thoroughly examined the collection or seen its merits tested by use as yet, still a cursory examination leads us to commend it heartily and unreservedly to our church. The service of song is no inconsiderable part of divine worship and in order to be good it must be rightly directed. Untutored singing of a congregation is irregular and harsh, while the monopoly of a service by a choir is improper and imdequate. The use of the Collection of Hymns and tunes under notice, will tend to educate and improve congregational singing which is an acknowledge power in Methodism. Bishop Wightman in a recent issue of the Nashville ADVOCATE commends the work highly, and among other things says:

"The publication of this book of hymns and tunes will, it is hoped, not only be acceptable to the great body of our congregations, but the means of directing general attention to this part of the public and family worship of God. Its form makes it convenient for general use. It should be in every Methodist pulpit and in every Methodist family, a companion to the Bible and the Book of Discipline."

LETTERS TO THE CHILDREN, by "Uncle Bob," of the WESTERN METHODIST, with an Introduction by B. A. Young D. D. Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville Tenn.

This is a publication, in book form, of the letters to children that appeared in the Western Methodist, and were so interesting, instructive and popular that it was determined to put them in a permanent form and give them a wide circulation. We have read a few, and find them sprightly, simple in style, and just the thing to enlist the interest of children.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE. We have so often commended this publication as among the first literary periodicals of the day, that it becomes unnecessary to repeat our opinion of it.

Published weekly by Littell & Gay Boston, $8 PER ANNUM.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE. The August number of this first class magazine is already on our table. It sustains the reputation that it has borne for a long number of years.

Published by Harper & Bro. New York, $4 PER ANNUM.

THE FOUNDERS AND PIONEERS OF METHODISM, being a Group of 500 pictures, by Rev. C. C. Goss. Published by United States Publishing Co. for the Christian Age Association, New York.

This picture has been received by us and for it our thanks are due. It is the premium offered by the publishers to subscribers to the CHRISTIAN AGE, Rev. Dr. Deems' weekly. The picture is described by the publishers to be "a work of art, in India Ink, designed for the walls of the drawing-room. It is composed of portraits of the early historic Methodists of both hemispheres, with a few surviving Patriarchs. These portraits are drawn on a tablet in concentric ellipses, around a common center enlarging chronologically to the outer rim. Their fine steel tints, and sharply-cut features render them exceedingly life like; and intermingling with the ornamental scrolls of the design, produce a happy effect."

DEATH OF GOV. CALDWELL.—Last week we made a simple announcement of the calamity which has recently befallen North Carolina in the loss of her Chief Magistrate. This is the second Governor of North Carolina who has died during his term of office,—Gov. Ellis having died in 1861. Governor Tod Robinson Caldwell died at Hillsboro' where he had gone to attend a meeting of the Stockholders of the N. C. R. R. Co. He left Raleigh in apparently perfect health, was ill only two days, and died an hour or two before his distressed lady, who had been summoned by telegraph, reached Hillsboro. The announcement of his death was received in Raleigh as doubtless throughout the State, with unfeigned grief, for as an honest public officer and upright gentleman, he commanded great respect and esteem. His remains were brought to this city by a Guard of Honor from Hillsboro, lay in State in the Senate chamber on Monday and received during the whole day the respectful tributes of a large number of visitors. The interior and exterior of the Capitol, as well as many places of business in the city, were draped in mourning and the bells of the city were tolling almost continuously from the announcement of his death until the departure of the train that carried the finacral cortege to Morganton. Meetings of State officers, Agricultural Society and of the citizens of Raleigh were held at which resolutions appropriate to the occasion were passed and eulogiums paid the dead Governor.

Committees were appointed to accompany the remains to Morganton where the deceased was buried with the simple ritual of the Methodist Church. Rev. J. S. Erwin conducted the burial ceremonies, and it is mentioned that he performed the same sad rites for the father of the Governor, 17 years ago.

Youth's Department.

Beyond The Storm.

The sun goes down with crimson pride
In hazy depths of purple hid;
Bright rose and gold along the land,
And all in comes night.

The wild hawk hies with shrill and biting sighs
And wildly roars the wind in pine,
As sweeping by from spangled climes,
Down pours the rain

In leafless skies the black branch'd trees
Sway to and fro like witches' arms
Working their spells and weaving weird
Fantastic charms.

In wild wind land the long lush grass
Lies low upon the sodden down,
And in hedge corners wither'd leaves
Whirl round and round

The apples dip from orchard trees,
The willows trembling kiss no more
And little birds with highest glee
Do cuddle their nest

The village streets are empty all,
The lady's step is heard no more,
But swinging sign, and clattering slate,
And creaking door.

In chamber dull of lonely lover
The sick man lists with deep drawn breath,
The wild confusion deems to be
The wings of Death

About the edges of the tombs
The hardy ivy scrapes and creaks,
And on church spires the weather-cock
Veers round with shrieks.

The rivers fill with yellow foam
Swift eddying through their rocky course,
And add to the tumultuous tune
Their chorus hoarse.

The samphires on the crevic'd cliff
The sea pinks on the hoary crag,
Bend down a shudder as they meet
The spray's swift drag.

Along the cold gray, broken shore
The surges thunder up amain,
Then backward from the ruggèd rocks
They retire by drain.

Upon black seas the tumbling ships
Drive on but to the driving gale,
With bows deep plunged in mumbled waves,
And rent, wet sail.

Blow, blowing winds! beyond the clouds
Glimpses of heaven's clear vaults are seen;
And there the steadfast planets burn
In calm serene.

And so above this stormy world,
Its gusty sighs, its showering tears,
And like a land where birds calm,
And free from fears.

And one day so the promise speaks—
All cloudy storms shall surely cease
And those who trust and wait shall win
Eternal Peace.

What Some Birds Said.

A SWALLOW'S nest fell from the eaves of a farm-house, and the barn-yard poultry and the hedge-birds gathered about the ruins, and went into committee on them.

"I knew it was going to fall; I felt sure it must be, the last time I went on the roof," chirped a sparrow.

"Stupid thing! building its nest up there," hissed a goose.

"I could have taught her how to lay her eggs without getting smashed, if she had only come to me," quacked a duck.

"And I could have taught her how to hatch them—I have had to hatch yours, neighbor duck," clucked a hen.

"Gobble, gobble, gobble; if people choose to be fools, they must take the consequences," said a strutting turkey-cock, puffing out his feathers.

"My friends, you are very kind to take so much interest in my affairs," twittered the poor swallow; "but if you were so sure that my house was going to fall, isn't it a pity that you didn't tell me so a little sooner?"—Good Things.

Johnny's Confession.

AT night Johnny climbed up into his mother's lap, and, laying his head on her shoulder, said in a low, sorry tone:

'I took that glass marble, mamma."

'Took it from whom?" asked his mother, 'I took it from the ground,' said Johnny.

'Did it belong to the ground?' asked his mother. 'Did the ground go to the shop and buy it?'

'I saw it on the ground,' said he.

'What little boy had it before?'

'It is Asa May's I guess,' whispered Johnny.

"When you put out your hand to take it, did you forget, 'Thou God seest me?' asked his mother. 'Did you not hear a voice saying, 'Don't, Johnny; don't, Johnny'?'

'I didn't hear it," said the little boy, sobbing. 'I grabbed quick!'

"If Thy Presence go with Me"

BY HELEN E. PHILLIPS.

In my public I say, "I will obey,
But my strength is small, and my footsteps stray,
And my heart is sad for its sinning;
"Teach me, Lord," I pray, "how to obey,
Guide thou the feet that go astray;
Keep me dear Lord, in the narrow way,"
Where he leads I follow, and all the while
From under the cloud I catch his smile!
O! the joy that comes in the winding.

A Pleasant Use for Pennies

A LITTLE ragged boy stood with his face pressed close to a pane of glass, gazing earnestly at the toys displayed in the window. His hands were loosely clasped behind his back with the palms turned upward. A lady noticed the little, earnest face as she, too passed a moment before the tempting show. Then quietly dropping several pennies into the little hand, she passed on.

The moment the boy felt the touch he turned and caught sight of the pocketbook in the hand of the retreating lady. Running after her, he looked up anxiously in her face, and said, 'Oh! ma'am! did you know it was me?'

'Yes,' said the lady, smiling, 'I knew it was you.' And the child bounded away with a face radiant with happiness.

This lady is in the habit of dropping small change here and there, as the daily walks through the poorer streets of the city. Many a sad face has bright ened as the money fell into its lap, and a pleasant, smiling face looked down and said, 'There, run and buy a stick of candy or a cookie.' Think of such a course persevered in year after year. How many a sad child's heart has been warmed by the loving thoughtfulness, even more than by the unexpected gift. Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me.—American Messenger.

Philosophy of Churning.

Mr. L. B. Arnold, of Rochester, New York, read a paper on the above topic. He described the structure of milk and its proper condition for the churn. Cream consists of globules of fat inclosed in a pellicle of albuminous matter. They float in the milk. There are several varieties of these cells, and all the herbage that cows eat contains some essential oil. It is these that give the nutty flavor to butter and cheese. When the cows eat peppermint or onions the smell is distinctly imparted to the milk. He thought that animal odor was a volatile oil, and one which affects butter-making. The main bulk of butter consists of olein and margarin, the former yellow and the latter white. The fat globules are small in the milk of cows thin in flesh, and they are larger when she is fat. The size of the globules varies in different breeds. There is at least one, and perhaps two, envelopes of every globule. The business of churning is to get off this sack, and there are two ways to do it—one to work it off by friction, as with a crank churn, and the other by pressure, as in a dash churn. The fat globules are of different sizes, and the sacks of the larger ones wear off first. The smaller lie between the larger, and are often unbroken by friction. These sacks have a cheesy nature, and by souring the cream they shrink and break off, but souring should not be carried too far, since, if alcohol is formed, the fat will be eaten.

He preferred the old fashioned dash churn, the dash cross-shaped, and the crosses nearly filling the circle of the churn, except at the corners of the cross. This form of dashes gives most pressure with least friction, and hence the best result is obtained. It reaches all the globules, breaks off the pellicle or sack without breaking the grain of the fat, which escapes in elongated form up through the corners of the cross shaped dash. The barred churn, with cross sections, he regarded as next best to the dash.

The temperature of the cream is important: when slightly acid, from fifty five to sixty-two degrees is best. Sweet cream will bear a higher temperature, and whole milk still higher. The quality of milk and cream is injured by sudden changes of temperature. A steady temperature is better maintained by the use of water. Over churning should be avoided, as it makes the butter salvy. He preferred washing out the buttermilk with water rather than working it out. Cream and milk should not be covered; the animal odor should be allowed to pass off, or it will injuriously affect the butter.

In answer to questions from Dr. Hoskins he said that, as margarin is harder than olein, light colored butter is harder than yellow butter. If the color of butter is altered by the action of light, its keeping qualities will be affected injuriously. In reply to the question why it takes longer to churn in July and August than at other seasons, he said there were several causes, one being that the globules are not possessed of so strong pellicles, unless the cows are kept very cool, and the butter becomes salvy in consequence. Another cause is that milk is not so well cared for then as it should be.—Vermont Dairyman's Convention.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

A Brilliant Record of Cures.

An American humorist thinks that it would have been money in his pocket if he had been born without a stomach, and then proposes to share up the cost of a chronic dyspepsia, to which he is a martyr, and which he says if he is possible to cure. On this point, Hoofland's Bitters," (for he is the party referred to) is unbroken. Unless his stomach differs from all other dyspeptic stomachs, Hoofland's Bitters will cure him in less than three months. That it would be safe to guarantee under any penalty. There are a few, a very few, secret specifics for disease in existence, and Hoofland's Stomach Bitters may be set down as one of them. In cases of indigestion it never fails. Persons who had suffered for many years almost every conceivable species of torture from this agonizing complaint, have been permanently cured with the Bitters in six weeks. Hundred of such instances are unreservedly authenticated by the testimony of prominent men in every walk of life, and it is perhaps among the most singular, but 100 celebrated vegetable preparation is something more than a mere alcoholic tonic. It is also an alternative of wonder working power. It cures complaints of a bowel or blood origin, and for more sanitary, and in all diseased conditions of the bowels, nobility in cases of constipation, dyspepsia, or liver complaint, in the highest degree advisable. Two more refreshing tonic cannot be used during the prevalence of country intoxicated with miasmatic exhalations, so fruitful at this season, of the various types of intermittent fevers, should be always well stocked with this beneficent antagonist, which will carry off the poisonous elements, which will carry off the poisonous elements, which will carry off the poisonous elements

A Helping Hand.

Oh! if it be that sweet success has crowned
Thine efforts, and that fame
Has traced upon her consecrated ground
The record of thy name,

Be not unmindful of the cheerless fate
Of those who, toiling still,
Have missed the path, or found it all too late,
To hope they can befill

The promise of their cold wadays of youth
When all seemed fair and bright,
And naught was wanting—save the ray of truth
To guide their footsteps right.

And when thou canst a wandering brother guide,
Or help him on his way,
Let nothing turn the noble act aside
Or cause thee to delay.
For toil is hard, and perseverance rare,
And failure frequent, too;
And those who would succeed have much to dare
As well as much to do

And help from those who stand aloft, secure,
Is ever doubly blest,
Enabling those who fail, to endure,
And leave to God the rest.

Thoughts on Education.

The ocean's thundering tramp may be heard for many miles around, but no one seems to live in dread of its approach: for the mandate has gone out all along the coast. "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther." This great law in the physical universe is no more implicitly obeyed than the law in High Schools and Colleges made by custom, cost and caste to deter the poorer classes, which, as a general rule, are the more hopeful, from receiving a good and an accomplished education. It reminds me of seeing a horse "touched up," as if it were meant that he should go forward and at the same time he is checked violently by the reins.

Much has been said of the more general diffusion of education among all classes in our country, and men of thought who have taken pains to inform themselves upon this subject have had much to deplore when forced to the conclusion that

"Many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its fragance on the desert air."

Despite common school money and Peabody Funds, it is to my mind a difficult question to determine as to whether education, say in North Carolina, is much in advance, if any, of what it might have been had there never been a dollar collected by taxation, or a Peabody had never lived. Since State authorities and benevolent hearts have been aroused upon this subject, the subject of a more general diffusion of knowledge, there may be fewer persons who cannot read and write, but this is not the point I wish to make, nor is it that which should the more deeply concern us. It has been said that "a little learning is a dangerous thing." A complete education afforded for more of our boys and girls is the desideratum. Let us carefully look at some of the facts in the case.

In doing this I solicit all to keep cool. If, however, the blood should boil a little, not too long, I hope no one's days will be shortened much thereby.

The course of study pursued in our best male colleges is what girls and boys of this day should be directed to accomplish. The law now in force, especially in male schools, permitting students to select their studies is detrimental to the cause of higher education. It originated in the idea that it might draw patronage. Boys are naturally impatient. They want to be free and to be engaged in some honorable, and especially some remunerative or lucrative business. But a large per cent of our young men had better obtain a finished education before they select a profession or avocation. With but one exception, viz: the ministry, our young men are incapable of deciding, in ordinary providences, what line of business they will be best qualified to pursue after life, previously to receiving a thorough education. Seeking office and running to shady places made for others is not backed with much credit. Neither is running to where others pass money freely through their fingers an evidence that it would be equally fortunate in passing through their own. The benefit of Primary Schools depends mainly upon the literary character of their teachers. But few persons teach now in our State whose morals are objectionable. Yet it cannot be denied that many teach who have good minds, but have been denied the privilege of a better education because of exorbitant prices in our High Schools.—The knowledge imparted by a teacher cannot transcend that which he has acquired no more than can the stream rise higher than the fountain. Incompetency in teachers places many upon the same level.

The fact is patent, the cause should not be concealed. Our best Schools should furnish educated men and women for any and every calling to which they by nature are adopted and no mistake. Educators say this is our work, object and aim. But will it not take a long time at the process by which it is being done? Where lies the difficulty? It is in this—inability to procure means. Now cannot schools be conducted on a cheaper plan? And will not the increase in numbers resulting from a diminution in prices be equally or more remunerative? Few will dare to say positively that they have not room, even if this were argued as an objection. That schools are sometimes said to be crowded is a bid for more students. I have never known of but few High Schools that could not accommodate twice their number, and be healthy still. There are a great many boys and girls not many miles from where superior education is offered to the few, of as good pluck, mind and morals as the more highly favored ones, who would hail with unfeigned gladness the cheering intelligence that they could pay their way also. It is a dim light and ought to be extinguished in every school, the practice of allowing persons to go in debt for board and tuition. It demoralizes all concerned. When the practice is carried to any great extent it will cripple, if not destroy, the best schools in Christendom. A young man can see how he can raise money when once he receives his A. B. and settle all accounts in a short time, but about the time money is raised he can see just as clearly how he can spend it in another direction. Now the remedy is a reduction of prices. Why do not our Boarding Schools rely more upon patronage near home? Because it is in the mind that those at a distance are better able to pay, and sometimes the terms are calculated upon this fact as a basis. I know men who fill responsible places as educators who advocate a high rate of board at our colleges but the few whom they teach will save me the mortification of giving their reasons. Did you ever hear a man of sense who had a son to educate, advocate high board? Talk of high board drawing patronage! It may and not the more hopeful either, but the misfortune is it drives more than it draws. There is a difference between good board and expensive board: substantial food and plenty of it is best for students. It is presumption to suppose a boy or girl because from a distance has always lived on pound cake. And if they have it should be a part of their education to be taught what is better. Self interest lies near our plans and schemes and yet there is nothing surer than that we may be mistaken as to what may be to our interest. So after all my cherished desire may not soon be realized, for there are still breakers ahead. None of them, however are insurmountable. They appear more formidable than they really are.

That undueprominence is given to studies not absolutely necessary is, I think, clearly perceived by every close observer of our Female Schools. I will not be so devoid of proper feelings toward others as to say these studies are encouraged because the more remunerative. Good rules ought to work both ways. So no one will charge me with being only

"Fit for treason stratagems and spoils."

I am fond of music too and much can not well be bestowed upon the human voice. Instrumental music is of secondary importance to that of vocal and should be in relation to other sciences.

I do not ignore instrumental music but must be allowed to say the attention given it in our schools and the cost of acquiring a knowledge of the art is greatly in the way of acquiring a superb and finished education. I know it is a popular study, but popularity should not be courted for its sake alone, especially when it is done against the grain and at the expense of what is more useful. There are certain rounds of duties in life that are essential and from these there are but few that are at all times exempt. That these be done in a creditable way is desirable: but there is another class of duties of a different order requiring a good knowledge of our vernacular and a clear, precise insight into mathematics. Oh how many are deficient here! There are, however, many that can be found who perform well on instruments of music but well almost vilify the mathematics and in doing so make it clearly manifest that they have but very little regard for the finer feelings of our noble English tongue.

D. C.

Hickory Slope, July 29 1874.

An enterprising superintendent of one of the Sunday schools at St Albans, Vt., was engaged one Sunday in catechizing the scholars, varying the usual form by beginning at the end of the catechism. After asking what were the prerequisites of the holy communion and confirmation, and receiving satisfactory replies, he askee. "And now, boys, tell me what must precede baptism?" Whereupon a lively urchin shouted out, "A baby, sir."

Posthumous Influence,

A SERMON BY BISHOP SIMPSON.

"And by it he, being dead, yet speaketh."—Heb. xi, 4.

These words are spoken of Abel, the first who left earth and went up to glory; the first of human beings whose lips were sealed in death; and yet it is said of him that he yet speaketh. "By it." is, by faith; for it was said in a previous part of the verse: "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous. God testifying of his gifts, and by it (faith) he being dead yet speaketh."

Faith, as used in this connection, signifies not merely justifying faith; but, in its wider signification, embraces all subjects of knowledge. We know by faith that the worlds were framed: it reaches to the distant past: it takes hold of the unseen: it is the evidence of things not seen: it reaches far into the future: "the substance of things hoped for." In this wide range faith signifies a confidence which we have in things not present, and that we act as in full view of the distant past, the coming future, and the unseen all around us. It was through this that Abel offered a more excellent sacrifice, in that he looked not merely to the services, the gifts, the immediate results, but he listened to the voice of an unseen God, who had commanded the services; he looked forward to an unseen though coming Saviour, who was typified in those services, and he joined in adoration and praise with the unseen company of the hosts above, that he know were lauding and magnifying the great Creator. In his case, too, he looked not merely at the lamb which he sacrificed, but to Him who should come as the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" to take away the sin of the world; and standing by that altar he seemed to point from it away into the distant future and to say in the language of one who came long ages after him: "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world!"

Strange is it how long a word may ring out in the world's hearing: how long a thought may breathe through the annals of eternity. There have been many sounds in this world—sounds of war that have filled the ages with lamentation and woe: sounds of strife and discord, where nations have been arrayed against nations; sounds of triumphant joy, that have issued from the victors' lips, and of lamentation and sorrow that have gone up from widows' and from orphans' hearts. The world has been full of strange sounds, babbling sounds—the voice of the orator and the voice of the statesman: the voice of the poet and the voice of the historian: and yet, in the midst of all the sounds that have been ringing through our world, each coming like the waves, seeming to succeed the other, bending as we do, we listen to the sound which comes from the first lips that ever were closed on earth, and we hear the voice of Abel yet speaking.

And what say the words of which he speaks, the thoughts that seem to escape from his lips? You will observe there is not on record a single word that Abel ever spoke. The words of Cain are given to us, but not one word of Abel's is recorded, not a single utterance has divine inspiration left us upon record; and yet it is said he speaks. The speech must be by his action. We behold him then, as speaking to us, first, of worship: of what true worship consists in. Heaven has photographed to us two scenes in Abel's being. One, he stands by the altar; a lamb is on the altar; he stands in adoration, in praise, in hope; the other scene, he lies in his blood, slain by a brother's hand. These are the two scenes which are thus photographed by Heaven's own light. And as he stands in the first, the idea is Christian worship. He had doubtless learned what worship should be: for in the text it is said, "God testified of his gifts that they were righteous;" that is, that they were in harmony with law. Our Saviour said, as if taking up this thought, when he was baptized, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness:" to perform God's commands: and Abel, having received the testimony that his gifts were righteous, intimates very clearly to us that they were in harmony with what had been commanded; and although we have not on record the command, yet from the whole tenor of Scripture we have the right to presume that God had commanded a sacrifice to be offered whose shed blood should be typical of the blood of the Saviour, that was to be shed for the remission of sins. And doubtless Abel had learned this lesson from mother Eve. Think of his boyhood. The promise had been given to Eve that her seed should bruise the serpent's head; and as she went dejected and sorrowful from Eden this hope sustained her—there should come one of her offspring who should conquer evil; and she saw, as she left Eden, its gates closing upon her, its beautiful scenery was gone: outside, amid thorns and thistles, in sorrow she was to pass her life; and yet the promise that one should come that should open its gates, that should restore the flowers, that should crush the thistles under his feet, that should defeat the plans of the enemy, and send joy and triumph through the world, instead of sorrow and woe; and when she first took in her arms her first born son, probably as she gazed upon him in his innocence and loveliness, she said, "This is the seed to bruise the serpent's head," and she named him Cain, for, said she, "I have gotten a man from the Lord;" or, as the passage might be read, "I have gotten a man, the Lord." Probably she expected him to be the coming One, the Hero, the Lion who should be victorious: but as he grew, she saw in him the traits of sin and sadness, and when her second son was given her she named him Abel, a word said to mean mourning, as when Joseph died, and Jacob, the lamentation was said by the Canaanites to be Abel, or Abel-Mizraim, the sorrow or lamentation of the Egyptians. She was sad because she knew not when that seed should come. And yet, how diligently, doubtless, did she educate that child. In the summer's eve, as the shadows of twilight began to fall, and as he stood by her knee, would she not tell him of Eden's roseate bowers; of how happy she was when she looked into its placid streams and they mirrored back her own beauty, just received from heaven? How she told him of the sad hour (and the tear dropped from her eye and sadness veiled her face,) when she was tempted and when she was persuaded to take the forbidden fruit, and tasted and gave to her husband to eat; and of all the sadness that came upon her heart—her blighted joys, her fears, how sin came into the world with all its woe; and then, of the promise given in mercy, the promise given in hope; and she turned with beautiful eyes as if to gaze on that grand picture of the Child that should come, and she saw the vision which Isaiah saw when he cried out in rapture, "Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, he Prince of peace." She told of sacrifice of blood that should be shed, and how that blood should wash away guilt. Possibly as the tear dropped she turned her eyes toward heaven and the bow of hope threw its brightness across those tears, and looking away forward to the coming Seed she saw the avenues to the upper glory, the higher Eden, the New Jerusalem. Possibly she was able to read her title to mansions in that promised land. With what interest Abel must have listened! how he hung on those lips: thought of that coming promised! and his heart was stirred up within him, and he obeyed the teachings of his mother. She taught him that obedience was worship, that it was disobedience that destroyed her, that closed the gates of Eden, that brought sin and sorrow; that obedience to God's word was the only mode of restoration, of hope, and of triumph. And under this teaching, having learned fully and thoroughly that grand lesson, he was prepared to obey.

To human reason it would seem strange that a lamb must be sacrificed, that blood must be shed. I fancy Cain reasoned thus, and said: "There is no use in taking the life of a lamb; there is no beauty in the offering of blood; much more beautiful is the altar covered with fruits and flowers, signifying the perfection of beauty. What is there that God has made that is so beautiful as the fruits of the ground, the flowers of the garden, the beautiful shrubs with which God has covered this world of ours." And reason might lead Cain to say: "Let me take these first fruits; let me adorn the altar with the garlands; let me bring the most costly products of the soil, odorous perfumes, colors beautifully, artistically wreathed together, and offer them as an offering of thanksgiving unto God who hath carpeted the earth with verdure and covered the plains with his beauty, who gives indications of his skill and kindness and love to man by all these mercies strewed abroad." It would seem to be rather reasonable that such an offering would be received. I have no right to suppose that Cain presented the kind of offering he did because he was parsimonious. I can fancy that his offering was more costly than Abel's. It was simply in this that it was defective: it was not what God had commanded. It was substituting his own judgment for God's command. And as he gazed I have sometimes thought it was partly because of the great care he had taken, the great arrangements he had made, the time he had spent, and the skill he had shown in bringing what would be possibly considered the grandest offering that could be arranged that he was made to feel disappointed when God had no respect to his offering, and passing by it had respect to Abel's lamb, which had cost him but little time or care, and on which he had spent no skill and no taste, and the secret was his disobedience to God's command; his unwillingness to do what God required.

Now there is one element in Cain's offering that is all right. There was the offering of thanksgiving: the presenting the fruits of the ground: the coming with gifts to God. It is but right that man should offer something of what God had given him back to God, and in the Jewish dispensation there was the offering of the first fruits. When the harvest was to be gathered the first ripened heads of corn were cut by a sickle, carried up to Jerusalem, offered as a thanksgiving, and there remained until the great harvest was gathered, and then the people were made to shout the harvest-home the feast of weeks, in which they rejoiced in the abundant harvest God had given them.

Religion in Business.

The Northern Christian Advocate makes a fervid appeal, enforcing the idea that the "true Christian man has religion in his business, and business in his religion," from which we make some extracts:

Active business men are among our most efficient church workers. We know of brethren full of worldly cares and enterprises, taxed incessantly with business pressure, yet they have time for a hour in the weekly prayer meeting: Such men bring life, and power, and energy into the work of the church. The sacrifice they make for the cause of Christ is seen and felt. It carries conviction to men. * *

The world almost altogether overlooks the fact that wealth is one of God's great provisions for men. He meant it for a blessing. The gospel of His Son is calculated to increase its facilities and multiply its benefits. He has put its growth and development under positive law. The true attainment of wealth is not a grab game. It is a grand business process under a great practical law, which, if observed, brings its general results. Fortune-building may be a religious work; more it should be such. Consecration to God entire is no drawback to a business man; it may be the means of his more rapid success. The prayer-meeting brings no danger to a business man. True Christians will find time in the pressure of daily life to honor God and help His cause. * *

Consecrated business life is one of the great needs of the church. It is an age of business. The business man is really the prince of our times. From business ranks come most of our public men. They make good Congressmen and Senators. Our practical age has need of them everywhere. So the Church needs her business talent brought into earnest consecration to Jesus. We need our business men at our altars, we need them in our Sabbath School teachers' meetings; at our missionary gatherings, and in every place where strong hands, vigorous brains and warm hearts may give help to our Christian work.

JONAH OVERBOARD

Last week the Brooklyn Tabernacle excommunicated a member for conduct disgaceful of the Christian profession. He had long been warned and admonished; but failing to cease his evil practices, he was by a unanimous vote cut off, and his excommunication as publicly announced as his reception five years before had been published. Brethren of the Churches, is it not time that our religious societies be cleaned of their unfaithful members? Will not the world have more respect for the Church when it is understood that there is such a thing as Christian discipline, and that a man can not live an obnoxious life and yet sit at the communion table? Let this cleansing process go on kindly but firmly, and the Church will mean more than it does now. The greatest dangers to Christianity to day are not those who are writing against it, but the professors of religion who carry around contribution plates and communion cups, and stand prominent at prayer meetings, while they are known as defrauders, slanderers, or inebriates. You wonder why the old Gospel ship has such rough weather. It is because you have a Jonah on board. Pick him up and let him leap over the sides very gently, and the sea will cease its raging. It is very hard to do so, but better Jonah go to the bottom than the entire vessel. One rotten apple will spoil the whole barrel.—Talmage, in Christian at work.

Music by Telegraph.

A wonderful invention in telegraphy has been made recently by Mr. Elisha Gray, of Chicago, by which musical sounds and tunes may be clearly transmitted for a distance of 2,400 miles. A writer in the New York Times has seen Mr. Gray's instrument at work, and has heard music played on a small melodeon, or piano key-braod, transmitted through an unbroken circuit of 2,400 miles, and reproduced on a violin attached to the receiving end of the wire. Mr. Gray played "Hail Columbia," "The Star Spangled Banner," "God Save the Queen," "Yankee Doodle," and other well-known airs, and they were unmistakably repeated, note for note, on the violin, which lay on the table near at hand. Even an accidental false note was immediately detected on the violin. The writer says: Mr. Gray exhibited many other experiments with tin cans, small paper drums, &c., which were attached to the receiving end of the wire in the place of the violin. The paper drum gave the musical sounds just that peculiar buzzing twang which is produced by boys placing a piece of thin paper over a hair comb and then blowing on it. What this will all lead to, or where it will all end, is one of the most extraordinary problems of the day.

The apparatus, by means of which this extraordinary feat in telegraphy is accomplished, has been named by Mr. Gray the telephone, or, an instrument designed for the purpose of transmitting sound to a distance. It consists of three general parts; first, the transmitting instrument; second, the conducting wire, running to a distance point; and third, the apparatus for receiving the sound at that distant. The transmitting apparatus consists of a key-board having a number of electromagnets corresponding with the number of keys on the board, to which are attached vibrating tongues or reeds, tuned, to a musical scale. Any one of these tongues can be separately set in motion by depressing the key corresponding to it. Thus a tune may be played by manipulating the keys in the same way as those of an ordinary piano or melodeon. The music, produced entirely by electricity, of these notes is so distinctly audible in the next room that, in spite of much talking, there is no difficulty in determining what tune the manipulator is playing. To this transmitting instrument the conducting wire is attached, the other end being attached to the receiving apparatus, which may be anything that is sonorous so long as it is in some degree a conductor of electricity.

A violin with a thin strip of metal stretched between the strings at a point where the bridge of the instrument is ordinarily placed, will, on receiving the sound transmitted through the conducting wire from the piano, give out a tone very similar in quality to that of an ordinary violin. If then the metallic strip is electrically connected with a wire, say, 500 or 1,000 miles long, which has its distant end properly connected with the transmitting instrument, any one at the receiving end can distinctly hear, without the aid of electro-magnetism, the tune or air which is being played 500 or 1,000 miles away from him, if he properly manipulate the receiving apparatus. The length of the wire connecting the transmitting with the receiving apparatus may be one mile or 10,000 miles, provided that the insulation is sufficiently good to prevent the escape of the electric current before it reaches its destination. In fact, there seems to be no limit to the distance to which sound, of any desired pitch, may be thus conveyed with from two to five cells of battery, all the connections being proper. The quality or timbre of the tones depends upon the character of the receiving apparatus, which may be a violin prepared as described above, a tin hoop, with foil paper stretched over it, after the fashion of a baby's rattle, a nickel five cent. A sound, sufficiently loud to read Morse telegraphic characters, made by interrupting, with the common telegraphic key, one sustained note, has been obtained, under favorable circumstances, at the receiving end of the wire without any more scientific sounding apparatus than that of a piece of common tissue paper.

Deposed!

Bishop Cummins is deposed!

The charge against him was that "he had abandoned the communion of the church." No notice was taken of his perfectly courteous resignation; no recognition was made of his right of withdrawal from the church, which our civil law secures to every man. He was thrust out, and, as far as could be by a form of words, degraded.

The parties to the act were Benjamin Bosworth Smith, who signs himself "bishop of the diocese of Kentucky, and senior bishop of the Protestant Episcopal church in the United States," and more than thirty other bishops. The act is done as is ostentatiously declared: "In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost."

Christian people of the United States will consider that the sacred name of the Trinity is here profaned, as it always is when used to cover a breach of charity. Bishop Cummins has not consorted with base or ungodly men; he has not apostatized from the true faith as it is in Jesus Christ. He has not perverted the gospel or handled it deceitfully. Following his Christian impulses, he has sought a wider Christian fellowship. He has proceeded in such a manner as to secure the good opinion of reasonable men. Whatever may be thought, by those who dissent from him, of the expediency of his proceedings, his right to leave the communion to which he has belonged is unquestionable.

It may be said that the "canons" do not admit of resignation, but require deposition. So much the worse, then, for the canons. They may thrust out a bishop, with attempted circumstances of ignominy, but only to make his fellowship with Christians generally closer and firmer. They cannot alter, by a particle, the judgment of the Christian world. We are of opinion that this act will not benefit the chief actors in it.—N. Y. Methodist.

The Pope Expelled From the Free Masons.

At the semi-annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of Masons, Scottish rite of the Orient of Palermo, Italy, on the 27th of March last, Pope Pius IX was expelled from the Order. The decree of expulsion was published in the official Masonic paper at Cologne, Germany, and is preceded by the minutes of the Lodge in which he was initiated, and is as follows:

"A man named Mastai Ferretti, who received the baptism of Free Masony, solemnly pledged his love and fellowship, and who afterwards was crowned Pope and King, under the title of Pio Nono, has now cursed his former brethren and excommunicated all members of the Order of Free Masons. Therefore, said Mastai Frretti is here with, by decree of the Grand Lodge of the Orient, Palermo, expelled from the order for perjury."

The charges against him were first preferred at his Lodge at Palermo, in 1865, and notification and copy thereof sent to him, with a request to attend the Lodge for the purpose of answering the same. To this he made no reply, and, for divers reasons, the charges were not pressed until he urged the Bishops of Brazil to act aggressively toward the Free Masons. Then they were pressed, and, after a regular trial, a decree of expulsion was entered and published, and the same being signed by Victor Emmanuel, King of Italy, and Grand Master of the Orient of Italy.—Voice of Masonry.

Not Ashamed.—Justice McLean, of Ohio, heard a minister preach. He had been a skeptic, and their minister spoke to him in such a way as convinced him of the truth of the Christian religion. He was led to see how Jesus had died for him, and he was born again. He went home. He had hardly got there before he said: "We are going to have family prayer; let us go into the drawing-room and pray together." "But" said his wife, "there are four lawyers in there; they have come to attend court. Let us go to the kitchen to have prayers.' Judge McLean replied: "It's the first time I ever invited the Lord to my house, and I don't propose to invite him to the kitchen by any means." He went into those lawyers and said; "My friends, I have found out that Jesus died on the cross for me, I have given myself to him, and now propose to invite him to my house You may do as you please; stay or go. But I am now to make my first prayer in my own house." They said they would like very much to stay, and did stay. From that day Judge McLean lived a consistent Christian life, and died a happy death.—Hammond.

Hang on Like a Beaver.

When our Tom was six years old he went into the forest one afternoon to meet the hired man, who was coming home with a load of wood. The man placed Master Tommy on the top of the load, and drove homeward. Just before reaching the farm, the team went pretty briskly down a steep hill. When Tommy entered the house his mother said:

"Tommy, my dear, were you not frightened when the horses went trotting so swiftly down Crow Hill?"

"Yes, mother, a little," replied Tom, honestly: "but I asked the Lord to help me, and hung on like a beaver."

Sensible Tom! Why sensible? Because he joined working to praying. Let his words teach this life-lesson: In all troubles, pray and hang on like a beaver: by which I mean, that while you ask God to help you, you must help yourself with all your might.—Young Pilgrim.

Landlady (fiercely)—"You must not occupy that bed with your boots on!" Boarder.—"O, never mind, they're only an old pair. The bed-bugs can't hurt 'em. I'll risk it, anyhow.'

Schoolmistress—"Johnny, I'm ashamed of you. When I was your age I could read as well as I can now." "Aw, but you'd a different teacher to what we've got."

It is said that a human being has seven millions of pores through which perspiration and exhausted particles of the system escape. We are all pore creatures.

Types continue to out up antics, even in well regulated offices, we infer from seeing John Brown announced as "a linseed preacher."

"Do bats ever fly in the day time?" asked a teacher of his class in natural history. "Yes sir." said the boys, confidently. "What kind of bats?" exclaimed the astonished teacher. "Brickbats!" yelled the triumblant boys.

Don't be stubborn unless you are sure you can afford it. Right in the midst of the late panic, an Iowa man chose to be perversely obstinate. His daughter wanted a $90 silk dress, and he wouldn't get it, and he lost $60 by the operation. She took cold poison, and the funeral expenses were $150.

"How do you do, Mr. Jones?" said a stranger, blandly, smiling as he entered the store of a dealer. "Well, thank you," stiffly rejoined Mr. Jones. "You don't seem to know me; I am Brown, used to live here," said the visitor. "I beg ten thousand pardons, Mr. Brown," said Jones, relaxing and shaking hands cordially, "excuse me, I thought you were a drummer." "So I am," said Brown. Relapse of Jones.

The observations of a married man have led to the conclusion that money put into mirrors is a good investment, as it affords a marvelous amount of comfort and gratification to a woman. He says his wife thinks just as much of consulting her glass when she ties on her apron as when she ties on her bonnet, and while he goes to the door at once when there is a rap, she exclaims, "Mercy! Joseph who is that?" and dashes for the looking-glass.

RALEIGH, N. C. JULY 29, 1874.

Rev. J. J. Renn, of Durham, and Rev. J. T. Harris, of Hillsboro', exchanged pulpits last Sabbath, as we learn from the Hillsboro' Recorder.

The Editor attended Shelby District Conference last week at Lincolnton and writes us that he will be at Catawba Springs this week, from which place we shall expect some Editorial correspondence from him.

The thanks of the absent Editor are due Dr. Redford, Agent of the Nashville Publishing House, for a copy of the newly published Discipline of the M. E. Church, South, which has been duly received.

We notice that the Southern Home accredits an article on "Diversified Farming" to the Advocate, whereas it should have been accredited to the Agricultural Journal. The Advocate failed through oversight to give the proper credit, and cheerfully cries "mea culpa."

We call attention to the advertisement of the Cleveland White Sulphur Springs in this issue. The Editor of this paper writes us that he considers the mineral properties of the water unsurpassed by any in the State. It is in a healthy section of the State, and is easy of access, being near Shelby, N. C.

We earnestly solicit the attention of our readers and indeed all whose our desires may reach to the announcement of a volume of speeches and sermons of the late Rev. N. F. Reid, D.D. It also contains a brief sketch of his noble, consecrated life. The fame of the author fills the wide borders of the church and his memory lingers like precious incense in multitudes of grateful hearts. What book is there, that a Methodist or any other lover of excellence and purity would prefer to purchase?

Miss Blanch Fentress kindly consents to be agent for the work in this city. Do not delay to subscribe.

In Chicago a Methodist preacher is on trial for several offenses, among which is "the habit of smoking and chewing tobacco, both in private and in public, which the complainants charge is not in accordance with the proper sense of propriety of a preacher of the Gospel, setting a bad example for Sabbath-school scholars, and lessening the dignity and degrading the purity of the Church." The name of the minister thus accused is Dandy; and he is also charged with patronizing dancing-schools, in that he allows his daughter to attend them.

The buildings for the use of Vanderbilt University in Tennessee—the institution founded by Cornelius Vanderbilt of New York—are in process of rapid erection, and are expected to be ready for the opening in the fall of 1875. Measures have been adopted to obtain an Endowment Fund of $200,000, the interest of which is to be used in supporting at the University young men who are preparing for the ministry, and besides those, traveling preachers' sons studying at the University. The institution, it will be remembered, is under the control of the Southern Methodist Church.

Rev. Mr. Bennett, Editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, who recently attended Marfreesboro District Conference in this State, in a letter to his paper, pays his respects to Weldon, N. C., and grows facetious at its expense. If Bro. Bennett had fallen into the hands of the genial and sprightly editors of the Roanoke News, his time would have died an easy and natural death. Mr. Bennett says:

"I am just now waiting at that most delectable place, Weldon, for a train homeward. I have been here just five and a half hours; have been trying to do that for which we preachers so often reprove sinners, that is, "killing time." My experiments in this line have been various, and I am well convinced that time at Weldon can't be killed. I have tried to count the number of beams in the great railroad shed, to count the number of mugs in the barber's shop, as I sat on the portico; to count the number of colored citizens loafing around, and, by many other expedients, to make that big clock go faster, but all in vain. That clock, by the way, seems to have been placed there right in front of you by some kind-hearted man or benevolent railroad corporation, if such a body is in existence, for the purpose of teaching one that waits for the train a lesson of patience."

Courage is a good thing. But there may be only one step between bravery and foolery. The man who is firm in maintaining the right, is to be commended; but the man who seeks difficulties that he may exhibit his own prowess, will both injure a good cause and render himself ridiculous.

Owe no Man Anything.

St. Paul was not only an able and consecrated apostle and moral philosopher, but an experienced man of business, who knew what was wise and unwise—what safe and what dangerous in the policy of government and the conduct of private business matters. His wide observation and experience had enabled him to see where clear sailing lay and where were the reefs and shoals upon which men's fortunes and characters were broken. When, therefore, he wrote "owe no man anything but love," he not only meant to teach the moral baseness of owing unpaid debts, but also to enforce a wise business maxim for the benefit of men in their private business relations. He does not intend to advise against the credit system which is, to a certain extent, essential to the convenient transactions of commerce. He meant to inveigh against the unwisdom and immorality of contracting debts when there is no reasonable excuse therefor, or when the debtor has no reasonable hope of ever being able to meet them with payment; as well as against the allowing them to accumulate and remain unpaid after the circumstances which called for their contraction have ceased to exist. Amplified, St. Paul's meaning and expression amount to this: "If you have at present no property sufficient to meet the debt you propose to contract, I counsel you not to make that debt; for it is unjust to your creditor to obtain advances from him when he will have no opportunity of regaining their value, should you be unwilling or unable to restore what he advances. If you are well to do in the world and can 'pay as you go,' do so, and while you are enjoying what you get from your neighbor, let him enjoy the use of the consideration money.—If it is inconvenient to make immediate payment, do not uselessly delay the payment of the debt, but use every effort to liquidate it. It is unwise to let it remain, for one is apt to forget that he owes, to consider his property as unencumbered and to allow debts to accumulate and finally endangers his solvency.

You may be unfortunate—the storm cloud of adverse fortune may pour its pitiless fury upon your head and sweep away what you vainly thought was secure; and while you are not to be blamed for the misfortune which comes upon you unawares, yet you are guilty of the ruin of those whom you have needlessly placed in a condition to be included in the disaster, which overwhelms yourself."

There is too much looseness, in these days, in men's ideas about the sacred nature of their obligations to pay what they have contracted to pay. They measure their moral by their legal obligations and, escaping by the technicalities of law from the payment of debts, consider that they are released from all liability. Because the Sheriff, confronted by the exemptions which the law in its mercy allows for the good of the debtor's family, returns his execution with "nothing to be found," they think conscience will make the same return of "nulla bona" to the moral forum, and that there the power of the moral law is exhausted. Because the Bankrupt Court, after allowing its liberal exemptions, gives a full discharge from all legal liability for debts previously made, they consider that Heaven's Register grants a like acquittance. They forget that Heaven has no Bankrupt Act, no homestead law, no statutes of limitation, to enable men to shirk the performance of their solemn engagements to their fellow-men.

We do not altogether condemn the wise and humane provisions that the law has made for the protection of unfortunates against the exaction of a heartless creditor, but when they are employed for the purpose of fraud, injustice and escape from paying what could with ease, or with some sacrifice, be paid, they then become engines of wrong and iniquity. A contract made here may, by our laws, "run out of date" but there is another and a higher court whose record of the compact is ever fresh and plain, and which will be sure to enforce a penalty for its violated provisions.

We Americans are a nation of debtors: we boast of our independence whereas we are held by the bonds of creditors. We stand on a false bottom and make a show of prosperity and riches at the expense of others. Our store-shelves are filled with attractive goods, but the jobbers groan when they pay the notary's fees on our protested drafts. Elegant dinners are given, but the butcher and baker sigh over the unpaid bills they present at the back-door, while tailors and mantua-makers as they peep into ball rooms curse the day when they parted with the lien they once had on the elegant costumes for work and labor done. Splendid turn-outs deposit their inmates at our church doors who rustle up the aisles, enter the pews with majestic step and self-important air and get the benefit of the preacher's brain and service, while the pew rent is in arrear, the gas bills go unpaid and the poor minister's wife, because his salary is not met, turns off the cook and the nurse to reduce the household expenses.

It is no wonder that the 'false-bottom' occasionally falls out and panics ensue and old established houses are involved in ruin. It will always be so until we cease to live on borrowed capital and learn to "render to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due: custom to whom custom."

Death of a Good Man.

Rev. Dr. A. L. P. Green, of Nashville, Tenn., one of the oldest and most honored ministers in the Southern Methodist Church, died in Nashville, Tenn., on the 15th inst.

He was born in Sevier co., Tenn., in 1807, was converted when a boy of eight or ten years of age, and had for nearly half a century been closely identified with the Methodist Church, South. He was one of the commissioners appointed to settle the business that grew out of the separation of the Methodist Church, and the other members of the commission dying, the principal conduct of the matters devolved on him.

He was for thirty-six years a Presiding Elder, earnest and devoted to the work of the ministry. He was an able preacher and a speaker of remarkable force. Being, too, an active worker and excellent financier, he was always prominent in enterprises where good judgment, well balanced mind and knowledge of human nature were needed. He was at the time of his decease, Treasurer of the Vanderbilt University and Chairman of the Book Committee.

The funeral ceremonies were impressive and solemn. The services were held in McKendree Church, of which Dr. Green was the first pastor, and were conducted by Rev. Drs. Summers, Redford, Hargrove and Warren. Bishop McTyeire preached the funeral discourse, and suitable tributes were offered by others who were present.

Dr. Green was a wealthy and prominent citizen of Nashville, and the large procession which attended the remains to their last resting place, attested the esteem in which he was held.

Greensboro' Female College.

This cherished institution so intimately connected with the interests and progress of Methodism in North Carolina, to-day throws open its doors for another session, and we trust that its portals will be crossed by newcomers from all directions. The success which attended the first year of what may be called its 'second era' and we hope its "golden age," was gratifying to all friends of the college and a harbinger of the prosperity which is in store for it, if supported as the Methodists of the State, by reason of their numbers and influence, can and ought to do.

While we do not wish to draw distinctions that may seem invidious, between Greensboro' College and other institutions in the State, we can safely say that no other Seminary or College offers superior, if indeed equal, advantages to those which are enjoyed at Greensboro'. Rev. Dr. Jones, the able and experienced President, together with his excellent corps of teachers, would make any school a success, even if it had none of the recommendations which Greensboro' Female College, with its elegant buildings, convenient arrangements and healthful location, possesses.

The future success and usefulness of the College depends, in great measure, upon the degree of prosperity it meets with during the first few years of its new career, and it becomes the duty of the Methodists of the State to see to it that it does not languish for want of full and liberal patronage.

We do not wish to be considered as losing sight of the claims that Davenport College has upon the love and fostering care of our people. They are urgent and we could not ignore them if we would. The State is large enough and Methodists are numerous and liberal enough to sustain the two colleges without withholding from either the full support which each needs and deserves. Each has a field to occupy which the other could not fill by itself, and we believe that in time we shall see both attended with abundant prosperity and accomplishing great good for the cause of education and religion.

The Methodist Advocate, the Organ of the M. E. Church, in the South, has the following to say concerning educated ministers, which is of universal application: The Methodist Episcopal Church needs educated ministers but can not wait to train them. They are needed now. Not less than eight hundred a year is the demand. The supply of men fully trained for the work is wholly inadequated. What shall be done to meet the case. The Central Advocate gives a timely and thoughtful reply. We must have ministerial training schools, which will take men from the free school, from the plow and workshop, and give them such advantages as the circumstances will allow, and put them into the field. Though education for all whose surroundings allow of it, and some, at least, for others, is about the golden middle ground on this question. Is it said that a "little learning is a dangerous thing?" None, is much more so, especially in a minister. In the South we need men of sound mind, deep piety, and good English education, from the people to minster among the people. We have the material. Now for the school. The work of higher education will grow upon our hands rapidly if, we attend faithfully to this present demand.

Bishop Ames of the Methodist Episcopal Church will spend the summer with his family in West Virginia.

Raleigh District Conference.

This Conference met at Franklinton, N. C., on the 23rd inst. We were unavoidably detained at Raleigh until near the close of the session, when we reached Franklinton just in time to hear a most excellent sermon from Rev. J. R. Griffith, who preached on Saturday morning. We found a large attendance, and the faces of ministers, lay delegates, citizens and visitors all wore a cheerful and happy expression. All the appearances corroborated the statements which were made to us that the session had been a very harmonious, highly entertaining and profitable one. The faith of all in the utility of District Conferences seems to be strengthened, and having had a taste of the system our people would be reluctant to part with it.

The Conference was opened with religious exercises conducted by the Presiding Elder, Rev. W. H. Bobbitt, Rev. H. P. Cole, of Person St. Church, having preached the opening sermon on the evening previous. About 50 members of the Conference were in attendance, besides a large number of visitors. John W. Hays, Esq., of Oxford, was re-elected Secretary, and D. W. Bain, Esq., of Raleigh, was elected Assistant Secretary.

The reports made by the pastors of the several charges were most cheering—showing a very healthy financial condition (despite the wide spread monetary depression in the country,) as well as much spiritual progress throughout the District. The Conference made a "new departure," in respect to the Committee feature, and raised only one committee, which was on missions and composed of a member from each charge. This committee reported some interesting and practical resolutions, and among others was one which looked to the establishment of a Missionary Society for the District and of one on each circuit, station and S. School within the District. The report was adopted.

Addresses were made in behalf of Trinity, Greensboro and Davenport Colleges, and resolutions adopted concerning them. The Advocate also came in for its share of the attention and endorsement of the Conference. The following visiting brethren were in attendance: Rev. Mr. Wellons of the Christian Church, Rev. Jesse Page, of the Methodist Protestant Church, Rev. J. P. Moore, P. E. of the Hillsboro District, Rev. W. H. Pegram, of Trinity College and Rev. B. B. Culbreth the active and ubiquitous agent of the same.

We regret that we cannot write more at length concerning the conference and the pleasant town of Franklinton with its hospitable and refined people. But we have not the time—we write currente calamo in order to send this hasty notice to the printer by the train which is almost within hearing. We trust, however, that we will be furnished with an extensive report of the proceedings of this conference

Round Lake Camp-Meeting

The Methodist National Camp-meeting, now in progress at Round Lake, near Saratoga, N. Y., is without doubt, the greatest affair of the kind that has ever been held in this country. The grounds were purchased several years ago, when improvements were at one commenced. Cottages were erected, hotels built, stables constructed, and wells dug, so as to provide accommodations for 12,000 persons. For the past two years the grounds have received additional embellishments, until the camp is all that can be desired. The services commenced on Wednesday, July 8th and after singing, "There is a fountain filled with blood," Bishop Kavanaugh, of the M. E. Church, South, offered a very fervent, loving and powerful prayer. "Rock of Ages" was then sung, at the conclusion of which Bishop Janes delivered the opening sermon, selecting his text from the 30th verse of the 1st chapter of 1st Corinthians: "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." The discourse is said to have been a master effort of the Bishop. The daily services have been of a very interesting and profitable character. On Thursday morning, the Rev. Thomas B. Sargeant, D. D., of Baltimore, preached from Isaiah xxvii: 13. It was a very pathetic discourse, and the speaker often brought tears to the eyes of his audience. Five Bishops are present, besides about 100 clergymen of great eminence. On Sunday, July 12, seventeen sermons were preached, all by Bishops and ministers, representing different denominations in the United States, Canada, England, Ireland and Australia. At each regular service there are no less than 5,000 persons present, and hundreds have already professed conversion. The congregational singing is said to surpass anything ever before heard at a camp-meeting.—Baltimore Methodist.

The Baptist Weekly has the following: A clergyman, preaching on the "Ministry of Angels," suddenly observed, "I hear a whisper!" The change of tone startled one of the deacons, who sat below, from a drowsy mood; and, springing to his feet, he cried, "It is the boys in the gallery!"

From the Brethren.

Rev. F. D. Swindell, writing to us from Plymouth, under date of July 20th, says:

"I wish to announce, through the Advocate, that God has graciously manifested himself to us in Plymouth in revival power. The dormant energies of the church have been quickened into new life, and twenty-six have been added to her communion. The revival was truly the work of the Holy Spirit, calm but deep, and its influence has been felt throughout the town. To God be all the glory!"

Rev. Jas. Willson, writing from Wilmington under date of July 16th, says:

"Last Sunday, the 12th inst., embraced the time of our third Quarterly Meeting. Our beloved Presiding Elder, Rev. W. S. Black, was with us, and preached morning and evening with great acceptability and power. The Church here is doing well. Every department seems to be adjusting itself to working order. The reports at the Quarterly Conference of the Sunday school and of the general state of the Church, by no means exaggerated, were decidedly good under the circumstances. And when we consider that trouble after trouble, in rapid succession, has come upon the Church, it may be surprising to some to state that, financially, it is making a very fair show. Indeed, we were rejoiced to learn from our P. E. that in this respect we were in the van of the District with one exception, and even of that, by far with respect to wealth and number of membership. Our membership is small and of limited means, but they have nobly done their part so far during this Conference year.

Confidence is being restored and the attendance upon all the ordinances of the Church is increasing. Every interest seems to be gradually moving forward. And now, by the blessings of God, we hope, if possible, to gather up the scattered fragments of the wreck, and with some additions, construct a Spiritual Temple—a living Church, that will "cleave unto the Lord" "with purpose of heart," and start it upon a career of usefulness in the world."

Work and Support of the Itinerant Methodist Ministry, by Rev. L. S. Burkhead, D. D., of the N. C. Conference.

This is a Sermon published in pamphlet form, containing 36 pages. The text: "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel," 1. Cor. 9: 14. After an appropriate introduction, the author goes on to show (1) that Methodist ministers are Gospel ministers, (2) that the Itinerant system is founded upon the "great commission," and embodies the aggressive principle of the Gospel to a greater degree than the operations of any other church. He then proceeds to show by cogent arguments:

1. That the work of the ministry is a difficult work.

2. That the work of Itinerant Methodist ministers is a work of great toil and labor.

3. That the work of Itinerant Methodist ministers involves great sacrifices.

4. That the work of the ministry is solemn and fearfully responsible.

These fundamental propositions are ably discussed and forcibly presented. The author comes finally to demonstrate, That those for whom this work is performed are morally bound to furnish the ministers doing this work a competent Support. We have merely given the points elaborated in this Sermon. The Sermon is very timely able in discussion—and very conclusive in its arguments. We hope it will be scattered broad cast over the land, and be productive of much good. Ministry and laymen ought to get it and read it carefully. It can be had by addressing Rev. L. S. Burkhead, D. D. Shelby, N. C. Per copy 20 cents. Per dozen to Ministers, 20 per cent discount.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE—Dear Brother: Permit me to congratulate you, on the spirit of your article, of the 22 inst. with the caption, "How to make mischief." I do this especially in view of the fact, that you make no reference to the recent unfortunate occurrences in Brooklyn, and Jersey city. I avail myself of this opportunity, to enter my feeble protest, against the practice of church papers giving circulation to such scandal, or any report, or act, deformatory to the church: especially when the parties implicated are members of other denominations. For, under such circumstances it manifest a want of charity, and is apt to be construed, or viewed as a sectarian indulgence.

It caters to the morbid public appetite, for sensational articles; it is demoralizing in effect; it is damaging, yea, poisonous to the church and christianity; it is not in accordance with the teaching of that good and great man John Wesley.

To familiarize the public mind with villainy and crime is to increase it. To give publicity to isolated cases of failen ministers, and church troubles, is to lower the standard of the church universal.

Let us practice charity, forbearance, tolerance, and do all to avoid strife and contention, by this course we will elevate, not lower the standard of our profession.

Yours truly, B.

Greensboro Female College.

The first year of this grand old College, after its resuscitation, was truly remarkable for its success. The proposition was to give large and eclectic advantages to its pupils—the prices were such as to enable this to be done—the attendance was gratifying in number and character—the commencement in June made a splendid revelation of the work of the long session and the announcement was made that not only all expenses were met, but that enough was cleared to check the increase of its outstanding debt. We must give another sprig of laurel to the brow of the President and his co-laborers.

During that prosperous year there were no dancing parties on the College premises, but there was a gracious revival of religion among the hopeful pupils. In this we rejoice. Let others boast of gewgaw and tinsel! Methodism, like a true-souled Cornelia—points to the Christianity and spirituality, as other excellencies, of her children, and cries with her pure tongue: These are my jewels! And in such a cry—when faithful—she must feel that she has the approbation not only of the truly good on earth, but of the better in Heaven.—What shall it profit our children if they gain all the world's ways and the world's wisdom and lose their own souls? This is no time for sensible parents (there never was such a time) to trifle with the immortality of the children for whom they are responsible.

Hence our own Methodist girls ought, when practicable, to be sent to our Methodist Colleges, where they may learn more and more to understand and love the blessed faith of their fathers. It is a great pity to send them to schools of other denominations to be seduced in their inexperience from their ecclesiastical loyalty. I have recently seen Methodist girls carried over to another church by going to the college of that other church. It is natural. Methodists are more liberal, as a rule, than most others, and hence they are more apt than others to be led off from their mother church. If you are a Methodist and intend to send your daughters anywhere, send them to a Methodist institution if you can. In this I am not unduly sectarian, but only careful to guard my people against the sectarian encroachments of others. To send Methodists to the boarding school of another church, is the next thing to their joining that church.—Most other denominations seem to have a hold on their children that keeps them true to their church in such cases. We, being more liberal, I repeat, are more apt to be losers.

Be careful what you decide.

Religious World.

— A most interesting revival has been in progress in Quitman, South Georgia Conference. There were 30 accessions to our church.

— Four preachers belonging to the Holston Conference have died during the present year, to wit, Rev. S. Alexander, E. W. Marsh, J. S. Edwards, and E. F. Lyons.

— Methodist preaching was recently introduced in to Gifford, N. H., for the first time. The prospects are said to be encouraging. Of course they are—give Methodism a chance and its mark will be made.

— The District Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church in New England, for some reason, do not find great favor. There are but three or four Districts, it is said which hold them at all.

— The great Catholic Missionary Society, whose headquarters are at Lyons, France, reports 23 missionary bishops, 440 missionaries, 320 native priests, and 700 000 baptized adherents.

— The Methodist preachers of Pittsburgh, Pa., at a recent meeting, adopted a resolution "that proper responses in religious services during prayer and public discourse are becoming and profitable."

— SEVERAL gracious revivals of religion have taken place on the Dicksonville circuit, Holston Conference. About 225 have professed conversion, and more than that number have been added to the Church.

— One of the results of the temperance movement, says the New York Express, has been that the members of the Methodist church in Patchogue, L. I., have resolved to banish wine from the Lord's table and only use water.

— The question why printers do not get rich as well as brewers, is well answered thus: Because printers work for the head and brewers for the stomach, and where twenty men have stomachs only one has brains.

— The Rev. Samuel H. Meade, formerly a Baptist minister, and sometime a clergyman in the Protestant Episcopal Church, made application before a counil of Baptist churches, held recently at Bridgeport, for restoration to the work of the Baptist ministry,—he having again become a member of that denomination. After a lengthy discussion it was resolved by the council that it was inexpedient to recognize Mr. Meade as minister of the Baptist Church.

— Here is a description of a mean church, which has a moral in it:—"After the old pastor died, the deacons went about for a two hundred and fifty dollar minister, and you can get about as much minister for that price as you can psalm-tune out of a file."

— The last report from Brooklyn, N. Y., was that she had churches as follows:—Episcopalian, 38; Roman Catholic, 34; Methodist, 33; Baptist, 32; Presbyterian, 32; Congregational, 18; Reformed Dutch, 15; Lutheran, 12; Non Episcopal Methodist, 4; Unitarian, 3; Colored Methodist, 5; German Methodist, 2; Jewish, 6; miscellaneous, 6; or about one church to every 1,700 of the population.

— A BAPTIST paper was sent for nine years to a subscriber who never paid a cent for it. The other day the paper was returned to the patient and long-suffering publisher with the affecting pencil note on its margin: "Gone to a better world." The editor is a very pious man, but it is reported that his faith is terribly shaken in regard to the accuracy of the information.

— Another foreshadowing of the approaching General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church is the circulation of a petition in New York asking that that body take such action as will authoritatively declare what ornaments and ritual are lawful within well defined limits, and what penalties shall attach to the transgression of those limits, whether by defect or excess, also, for such legislation as shall secure the establishment of a court of final appeal.

— The ninety-ninth anniversary of the birth of Rev. Henry Boehm was celebrated recently. He is the oldest living Methodist preacher, and has given seventy-three years to the work.

— Sixty Churches of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, Episcopalian, and Lutheran denominations have been established in Liberia.

— The Minnesota High and Low Churchmen have compromised on Dr. Welles, of Red Wing, as Bishop.

— Twelve thousand Sunday school children of Cleveland, Ohio, celebrated the first of July as a Sunday-school Jubilee. It was a grand affair.

— The ladies of Cleveland, Ohio, have agreed to raise $200,000 for the erection of a building for the Young Men's Christian Association, the building to be the headquarters of reform in that city.

— Neither of the fraternal delegates appointed by the General Conference to the Irish Wesleyan Conference was able to be present at its session. Dr. McCauley was detained by the pressure of affairs at Dickinson College, while Bishop Harris was hindered by sickness. The "Address" was forwarded and was read in the Conference.

— Says the N. Y. Advocate: Dr. M'Ferrin, the honored Missionary Secretary of the M. E. Church South; Rev. Dr. Plummer, of Tennesee, (Church, South;) Rev. Dr. J. H. Dashiell, of Washington; Dr. Winchell of the Syracuse University, and Dr. Wheeler, President of Iowa Wesleyan University, were among the visitors at our office last week. Drs. M'Ferrin and Plummer occupied the pulpits of St. Paul's and the Free Tabernacle M. E. Churches on Sunday, preaching morning and evening.

— A "Parents Prayer Union" has been formed in London, for the purpose of arranging for parents' prayer-meetings, the delivery of sermons and addresses to parents, and the issue of books and tracts on parental duties.

— Rev. Dr. Craven dedicated the new Methodist church at Monroe on the 20th inst.

— A new market-house is being constructed at Greensboro."

— An excursion train from Salem-Winston will run to Raleigh, on the 1st of August.

— Tryon Street Methodist church of Charlotte has secured the services of Prof. Von Myerhoff as organist.

— Wilson county has more than $8,000 to the credit of her school fund, a good exhibit.

— Mr. Daniel Glisson, an estimable young man, was killed by lightning in Magnolia, on the 16th inst.

— Spier Whitaker, Esq, of Halifax Co., will in a few weeks remove to Denver city, Colorado.

— Corn is selling in Winston at $1.45 per bushel, nearly double what it sold for last Summer. Dried black berries are worth 8 cents per pound.

— The Piedmont Press says, on the authority of Mr. Bynum a member of Judge Pearson's family, that the physicians in attendance upon the Chief Justice are sanguine of his early restoration to health.

— Gen. Robt. Ransom has bought the famous plantation adjacent to Drewry's Bluff, so well remembered by the North Carolina troops in war times. He paid $25,000 for it and will now settle down as a Virginia farmer.

— The Sunday train over the N. C. R. R. between Goldsboro, and Greensboro has been discontinued: but between Greensboro and Charlotte it continues to run.

— A. W. Graham, Esq., has been appointed Town Commissioner of Hillsboro' to fill a vacancy caused by resignation of J. R. Faucett, and the Hillsboro' RECORDER says "look out for something to be done."

— The cotton worm has made its appearance in the vicinity of Goldsboro."

— The dedication sermon at the First Baptist Church of Hickory was preached by the Rev. Dr. W. M. Wingate President of Wake Forest College.

— The Charlotte Southern Home says: Mr. J. B. Grier, of Steele Creek, informs us that on Tuesday he threshed fifty three bushels from forty two dozen oats. They were of the rust proof variety, and were raised on only ordinary land.

— The Wadesboro Herald says: The amount of tax on real and personal estate and polls, within the corporate limits of the town of Wadesboro, for the present year, amount to nearly $1,700.

— Messrs C. B. Wright, D. R. Murcheson and J. M. Brown of Wilmington are traveling through the mountains of Western North Carolina "with their own teams and camping out."

— Hillsboro' wants a telegraph office and was made painfully sensible of that want during the late illness of Gov. Caldwell.

— A bold and daring burglary is chronicled by the Monroe EXPOSITOR as having been committed on the house of Dr. E. B. Horton in Wadesboro. A gold watch, wearing apparel and other valuables were stolen. Gus Hains, a mulatto is charged with the crime.

— The citizens of Morganton raised $1, 750, last Thursday, toward getting the Episcopal College at that place and have no fears about making it two thousand. They propose buying the Vine Hill property (in the suburbs of the town) from Major Wilson and donating it for this purpose. Morganton is slow to act but when she does wake up she always does things handsomely.

— The Goldsboro' MESSENGER is requested to give notice that the order passed by the Board of Directors of the Atlantic and N. C. R. R. November 15, 1870, requiring parties leaving a station where fare tickets can be procured, to purchase same at the ticket office, or be compelled to pay fifty cents extra, will be rigidly enforced by the conductor.

— The Warrenton GAZETTE says: Master Williams Crawford, son of Ab. Fleming, of Nuthush, has sold since Christmas, fourteen hundred and ten guinea eggs. When we remember that he only had ten hens, two of which sat during the spring, Crawford must have been a very smart and industrious boy to have found so many.

— The Charlotte OBSERVER in stating that the cotton sales of Charlotte reach forty thousand bales, says, we must not be understood to include all the cotton which passes through the city, but which is not sold here. At the seaports we believe all the cotton is counted as "handled," whether it undergoes a sale or not. If we were to estimate in this style, our cotton men tell us that the figures would approximate seventy-five thousand bales. We are satisfied on this score, when we can claim an increase of three hundred per cent, since the war.

— Somewhere in this county (we will not say where,) a planter whose supply of tobacco plants may be presumed to be short undertook by a midnight expedition to supply himself from the plant-bed of a neighbor. He got the plants. But he left behind him his pocket-book containing between $75 and $100. It is possible he intended to leave pay for the plants, but if so, he was entirely too liberal, and he is informed that he can get his pocket-book by calling for it, with the contents, and that the other party is open to an arrangement for the payment for the missing plants.—Hillsboro RECORDER.

— The Raleigh Crescent says: We are informed that near Banks' Postoffice in this county a white child has been recently born without a palate to its throat. It has to be fed. It struggles it to suck.

Deaths.

Mary I. Norman, wife of Rev. Alfred Norman, was born in Guilford county, Virginia, April 18th, 1821, died in Caswell county, N.C July 14th, 1873. She was the daughter of Anderson and Margaret Rucker. At an early age she entered religion and joined the M E Church, South through her whole subsequent life. When she grew to womanhood she stated that she was determined to marry a Methodist traveling preacher sooner than not, and her after life showed how providence and specially kept her word. Nor was she disappointed in marriage with Rev. Norman, Nov. 7th, 1843. The following year of her married and itinerant life was spent with her husband on the Lexington circuit. That year the writer, who was junior preacher on the circuit, formed her acquaintance---an acquaintance that ripened into lifelong friendship. From the beginning she faithfully and cheerfully shared the hardships and privations of her husband and passed through their joys and sorrows that came to other but by our Heavenly Father's appointment which from God's lot birth was the noble heritage of a devoted wife and mother to a minister of Christ. And she did her part well. As the mother of seven children, five of whom had died before and one other, with her sainted husband, preceded her, she well knew the pains of domestic toil, and joyfully received the blessings of motherhood as precious gifts of God. Her children were naturally amiable and were tempered she made it their great ambition wherever she went, and especially whenever she remained long enough to become well acquainted.

For eight or ten years before her death her health was slowly giving way under asthma and tendency to dropsy of the heart, from which she died at the above named above the hour of very feeble at the time of her death, in a short time joined her to sleep in Jesus. Four children, orphaned their children with Nature of the M. E. Conference and the surviving husband, with two sons, weep for their dear departed parents and have the sympathy of the many friends

Died at her residence in Randolph County on the 8th of June 1874, after an illness of about 12 months, Mrs Rebecca Lowe over 50 years of age. She leaves six children who deeply mourn her loss---her husband and two small children having gone before her to the spirit land. Mrs Lowe was a faithful member of the Society of Friends, and lived without reproach until death released her from the duties and toils of life. She was a kind and loving mother, a devoted sister and a generous neighbor. None knew her but to love her. We mourn not for her as those who have no hope. She has run the race, fought the good fight and gone to receive herreward in heaven. May God bless the remaining family and teach them to so live that when they are called from time to eternity they may be gathered together by the green pastures and still waters of the Harvest home.

A FRIEND.

Mrs Rowan P. Crabtree, wife of Edward R. Crabtree, deceased, was born in Oxford N. C. March. 13th 1822 was married June 24th 1838, and died July 3rd, 1874.

In early life she was noted for her devotion to and love for the church of God and His people. She was amiable in her disposition and loved by all who knew her. It was not however until the spring of 1867, that she made a public profession of faith in Christ. From the time of her profession to the day of her death she was a true and zealous member of the M. E. Church, South, in the City of Raleigh. She adorned the sacred relations of wife, mother and friend with the doctrines of Christ her Savior. She rejoiced with those that rejoiced and was ever ready to weep with those that wept. In her long and painful illness previous to her deaths, she was calm as the air of evening, retained to her last hour an unlanguishing trust in her dear Redeemer. She leaves seven children to weep the loss of mother. May God especially comfort and sustain her only daughter who seems to miss her most. May they all live for God and heaven where parents and children separate no more forever.

H. P. COLE.

Died, at Gold Hill Rowan Co. on Sunday the 28th June last, Eliza, daughter of Rev Joel and Elizabeth Tredaway, aged 20 years 4 months and 9 days. She was a devoted child to her parents, an affectionate sister and devoted affection to her father and highly esteemed by her young friends. In the flower of her age she gave her heart to Jesus, and with cheerful hope and tender resignation, she let go the present life to grasp the future. Her end was peaceful and triumphant. "So gently fades the summer clouds away."

J. P. SIMPSON.

Died in Hillsboro N. C. July 6th, Mrs. Henrietta Parks, the young and lovely wife of Mr. Charles M. Parks a leading merchant of our place. One short year ago Mrs. Parks came among us a stranger. But by her many radiant and womanly virtues a few brief days only were past before she had picked a large circle of warm and admiring friends. To all human appearances the happy bride had before her a long life of happiness and promise. But scarce had she embarked on the rosy sea of wedded bliss when death swept her away. Like a comet she came, and as swiftly she has gone and like it we trust, she has gone to the brighter worlds where even where the angels are." The sudden death has thrown a dark shadow over our town. Truly "Death loves a shining mark." To the God of all grace we commend her sorrowing husband, mother, sister and brothers; we join our sympathy with their in my friends.

There are, in a standard legal barrel only one hundred quarts, while the ordinary flour barrel most in use among farmers in the sale of potatoes and apples contains nearly one-eighth more. Farmers sell their produce in flour barrels, and merchants transfer the same to standard bins, making a profit on quantity as well as on the price. In the sale of eight hundred barrels of potatoes from a farm, the proprietor loses one hundred barrels, worth $250, for which he might as well be paid.

ARE YOU GOING TO PAINT?

THE BEST IS THE Averill Chemical Paint,
BECAUSE

1st. It has been thoroughly tested in chemistry, and over 20,000 gallons of testimonies throughout the United States for the last seven years, and pronounced by them to be the most durable paint known.

2d. For beauty you need not ask of color it stands for itself of any other. Paint lings have been painted with it in part, and partly with the best of other paints, both in the interior and on the outside, and in no case has it been excelled for beauty or permanency of color.

3d. It is economical, as it is said to be more than the best ready mixed paints, and being far more durable in wearing about one-third less are required, and the labor of applying it is the same as for any other paint. Our assertion that four pounds of Averill's Paint will cover the common size of a square yard, and last for ten years.

4th. It is liquid form and will readily for use. Parties Wishing any color shade, can be obtained without subjecting the buyer to the annoyance of purchasing oil, pigments, coloring matter, dryer, &c. It is ready to put on brushes, by from the brush, clings firmly to every substance it may be applied upon. For wood, brick, iron, or for any painting purpose where durability, beauty and preservative properties are required it stands unrivaled. Though it is perhaps the most indestructible materials known to science, as evidenced by the Averill Chemical Paint shows it to be equally as hard and wear of the other paints now in possession. It will not blacken or discolor by the action of the sun, hence gives no ground on our morally firm assertion.

5th. No special agent required.

Anybody can apply it.

LAND SALE NEAR TRINITY COLLEGE.

On the 12th day of August next, with a credit of six months, I will sell at auction upon the premises, a tract of land containing three hundred acres, lying west of Trinity, and known as the Brown place. The land comes near the College Campus, has one hundred acres of woodland, excellent house, barn, stable and all the usual buildings. This is very valuable property and offers a rare opportunity for a good investment to any one who wants a producing farm, or desires to live near the College. The dwelling is about three-fourths of a mile from the College Campus.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,
Staunton, Va.

Will begin its 25th annual session Sept. 17th, 1874. Rev. W. A. Harris, D. D., President, with an able corps of twenty-three Teachers and Officers. Modern languages taught and spoken by European Teachers. Music by seven Professors and Teachers.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world. Its natural effect is the rapid promotion of the physical health and vigor of our pupils. Those who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, chills and climate diseases, are entirely restored.

Buildings elegant, fanned by the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery, making it one of the most delightful College homes in the Union.

The last session, one hundred and seven young ladies attended this school, as boarding pupils from fifteen Southern States.

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONIALS.

From Bishop D. S. Doggett, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, located in Staunton, Virginia, under the Presidency of Rev. W. A. Harris, is, in my judgment, one of the best institutions for young ladies, in the South. I have occasion to know and appreciate its value by the advantages enjoyed by one of my daughters, now a pupil there. It possesses all the facilities of a thorough female education. Its personal accommodations are all that can be desired for health and comfort, or taste. No location could be more eligible; no scenery more magnificent; no atmosphere more salubrious. It is now in a state of great prosperity. I do not hesitate to recommend it to the patronage of all who wish their daughters to receive the benefits of a useful and ornamental culture.

D. S. DOGGETT.

From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the Church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music, advantages are offered of very high order. The most talented Professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent. The School is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

From Prof. F. H. Smith, M. A. L. L. D. University of Va.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, at Staunton, deserves the brightest success it enjoys. It has a good corps of teachers, a beautiful situation, and excellent management. Having had a daughter under Mr. Harris' care, during the present session, my observation leads me to believe this school to be one of the best of Female Seminaries which adorn our State.

How Charlie Minded

Little Charles was playing marbles
With his comrades in the street,
When a window was thrown open,
And there came a voice so sweet:

"Charlie, dear, your father wan's you;"
Charlie stopped to hear no more;
Left his playmates and his marbles,
Entered at the cottage door.

Now a merchant who was passing
Wanted soon in his employ
Such a lad as could be trusted,
And he thought of Charlie boy.

And that splendid store was Charlie's,
After years had passed away,
Just because he minded quickly,
On that pleasant summer day

Children should respect their parents,
And obey them in the Lord;
'Tis the first command with promise,
Written in the holy Word.

—Watchman and Reflector.

Attention, young folks! Here is something new for you:

DIFFERENT KINDS OF ENGRAVING.

"'Line' engraving is of the highest order. All great engravings are done in 'line'—simply straight lines. Next comes 'line and stipple.' 'Stipple' means dots—small dots like this—... ——... These small dots are used to lighten up the high parts of the face or drapery. It is very hard to engrave a face in lines simply, and only master engravers have ever undertaken it. The masters understand and practice both 'line and stipple.' Claude Mellan engraved in 1700 a full head of Christ with one unbroken line. This line commenced at the apex of the nose and wound out and out like a watch-spring until it ended in the border of the picture. Mezzotint engravings are produced thus: The steel or copper is made rough, like find sand paper. To produce soft effects this rough surface is scraped off. If you want a white place or 'high light' in your engraving, scrape the surface smooth, and then the ink will not touch it. If you want faint color, scrape off a little. Such engravings look like lithographs. Etching is adapted to homely and familiar sketches. Almost all the great painters were etchers. Etching is done thus: The copper or steel plate is heated, and covered with black varnish. The engraver scratches off this varnish with sharp needles, working on the surface as he would on paper with a pencil. Nitric acid is then poured over the plate, and it eats away at the steel and copper wherever the needle has scraped off the varnish. When the varnish is removed with spirits of turpentine, the engraving is seen in sunken lines on the plate."

Perhaps some of you have seen copies of this head of Christ mentioned in our account. It is famous on account of its singularity. When you first examine it you can't think what gives the picture such a peculiar look. Then you see the little curl at the tip of the nose where the line begins. This gives the nose such a funny look, just like a knob. You want to laugh, yet you can't take your eyes off of it. I don't think that wonderful specimens of work are always wonderful specimens of beauty.

We would not know how to get along without picture papers and pictures in books. Pictures seem to be the flowers of print: sometimes, though, they prove to be thorns in the sides of the guilty. I heard a curious story not long ago. When the column in Place de Vendome in Paris was being thrown down by the Communists—you young folks who read the papers know all about this without any explanation—an enterprising photographer took views of the act. It seems to be the rule in France that what one overthrows the next passer by should rebuild. When these men were being tried for this offense, the photographs being inaguified, gave their faces, and by them were they condemned.

While we are talking on this subject, I must not forget to tell you of the singular accident which led to the invention of lithography, or the art of printing from stone. You have all seen, and most of you possess, some of those chromo lithographs with which the print-shops are filled. Well, all these pictures had their origin in an accident. But first I must give you a little explanation. There is a great deal of joking about the desire some people have to rush into print, as it is called, and would-be authors are much laughed at. But here is a word on their side. There was a poor man at the beginning of this century, who was fond of writing and knew a little about printing. He had no means to buy the printing materials then used so as to publish his productions; but being determined to say his say to the world, he decided to invent a method of his own; so he turned the matter over and over in his mind, and experimented first with one thing and then with another. Finally, one day—but this is the story:

A HAPPY ACCIDENT.

"Sennefelder, who was the author of the lithographic art, made the important discovery which led to it in a very humble fashion. He had just finished polishing a stone plate, when his mother came to him in a great haste, to make out a list of the cloths the washer-woman had come to take home with her. He had not a scrap of paper, or a drop of ink in the house. He resolved to write the list on the stone plate, with a substance he had at hand, prepared with soap, wax, and lamp black. Then he could copy it at his leisure.

"A few days after, as he was preparing to clean the stone, he thought he would try the experiment of putting aquafortis on it, and see if it would not 'bite' the letters in the stone. The result was raised letters, which he covered with printers' ink, and then was able to print from them with ease."

Rural and Domestic.

Rotation Not a Necessity.

[Country Gentleman,]

The idea of the importance of rotation of crops, so earnestly pressed upon the attention of the farmers, has been of great service, both in its practical application and in the discussion evoked. It is being shown, however, that rotation is not a condition of success, except under certain circumstances. Happily those circumstances are not universal, and in many cases may be greatly modified or entirely changed.

Formerly, in localities where stable manure was very scarce as compared with the land under cultivation; when, from lack of capital or a disinclination to invest it, farmers depended for the most part upon the native energies of the soil, upon favorable seasons and good cultivation—a systematic rotation was of great importance, and still is essential to the best results. But in these days the conditions are changed: stable or no stable, there is potash, and lime, and phosphorus enough; rain or no rain, nitrogen is plenty. The soil is known to be a vigorous machine, capable of being unceasingly worked—not that feeble area that must be so carefully nursed in order to work at all. Hence he who still clings to the necessity of rotation, cherishes an expensive fallacy.

Numerous intelligent experiments during the past twenty years, have shown that by skillful use of chemical fertilizers and organic phosphates, which are most easily applied and very certain in their action, crops may be grown upon the same land for many successive years with unfailing profit. The field which for any reason is best suited to a certain crop, may thus be permanently retained for that specific purpose. Other parts of the farm will be assigned to those productions for which, as particular machines, they are best adapted. Also, the expense of cultivation will then be lessened, as may one can see. Crops requiring laborious and constant attention will be accommodated in the most convenient parts, with no fear of rotation to an uncomfortable field.

Moreover it appears, that soils, if well fed, by constant cropping, are somehow cleansed of their native crudeness, and rendered capable of producing much finer qualities of plants—notably of tobacco. Precisely why this is the case is not so apparent, but the truth can not be doubted. Now, when quality in all farm products is the inexorable demand, this deserves especial notice.

Years ago, the theory of rotation came as a godsend to stay the starving process that had ruined so many farms. Men heeded it to some extent, and saved their acres. Agricultural science has since made great advances. It clearly shows that rotation is not a necessity, but in many instances a hindrance to a perfect crop.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

A Brilliant Record of Cures.

An American humorist tells us that it would have been money in his pocket if he had been born without a stomach, and then proceeds to figure up the cost of a chronic dyspepsia, to which he is smarty, and which he says it is impossible to cure. On this point, "Josh Billings," (for he is the party referred to) is mistaken. Unless his stomach differ from all other dyspeptic stomachs, Hostetter's Bitters will cure him in less than three months. This it would be safe to guarantee under any penalty. There are a few, a very few, remedial specifics for disease in existence, and Hostetter's Stomach Bitters may be set down as one of them. In cases of indigestion it never fails. Persons who had suffered for many years almost every conceivable pecking of torture from this agonizing complaint, have been permanently cured with the Bitters in six weeks. Hundred of such instances are recorded authenticated by the testimony of prominent men in every walk of life, eminent physicians among the number. But this celebrated vegetable preparation is something more than a stomachic and tonic. It is also an alterative of wonderful virtue. In liver complaint it is equal or little pill, and far more salutary; and in all diseased condition of the bowels, notably in cases of constipation alterative regulating properties are in the highest degree evidenced. The new settlements in the west and already-lying tracts of country infested with miasmatic exhalations, so fruitful at this season, of the various types of intermittent fever, should be always well stocked with this incomparable elaborate, which will cure any case of fever and ague in a period varying from three days to three or four weeks, according to the virulence of the complaint. Nervous disorders which are always aggravated by the adulterated liquors usually prescribed by physicians, are readily cured by a course of this admirable combination medicine in which the properties of a stimulant, a tonic and alterative are happily blend.

DR. C. M'LANE'S
CELEBRATED
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder-blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for a rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. M'LANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them A FAIR TRIAL.

Address all orders to

FLEMING BROS., PITTSBURGH, PA.

P. S. Dealers and Physicians ordering from others than Fleming Bros., will do well to write their orders distinctly, and take none but Dr. C. M'Lane's, prepared by Fleming Bros., Pittsburgh, Pa. To those wishing to give them a trial, we will forward per mail, post-paid, to any part of the United States, one box of Pills for twelve three cent postage stamps, or one vial of Vermifuge for fourteen three cent stamps. All orders from Canada must be accompanied by twenty cents extra. Sold by all respectable Druggists and Country Store keepers generally.

Dr. C. M'Lane's Vermifuge

Should be kept in every nursery. If you would have your children grow up to be healthy, strong, and vigorous Men and Women, give them a few doses of

M'LANE'S VERMIFUGE,

TO EXPEL THE WORMS.

RESTORE YOUR SIGHT.

Spectacles Rendered Useless.

SAVE YOUR EYES.

RESTORE YOUR SIGHT.
THROW AWAY YOUR SPECTACLES.

Old Eyes Made New.

All diseases of the eye successfully treated by

DR. J. BALL & CO.'S
NEW PATENT IMPROVED IVORY EYE CUPS.

Read his new and startling announcement in this paper. The Inestimable Blessing of Sight is made perpetual by the use of the new PATENT IMPROVED IVORY EYE CUPS.

Many of our most eminent physicians, oculists, students and thinkers have had their sight permanently Restored for life, as I can show by the following discoveries:

1. Impaired Vision; 2. Incipient or Partial Blindness, or Dimness of Vision, no matter of how long standing; 3. Amblyopia, or Weak Eyes; 4. Epiphora, Lachrymation or Watery Eyes; 5. Near Sight, or Myopia; 6. Far Sight, or Presbyopia, or Old Sight; 7. Opthalmia, or Inflammation of the eyes, or any of its sympathetic or imperfect types; 8. Photophobia, or Intolerance of Light; 9. Photochalasis, or Dazzling of the eyes; 10. Overworked Eyes; 11. Specks in the eyes, or Films, and all Diseases of the eyes, Before the eyes; 12. Cataracts; 13. Amaurosis, or Incipient Loss of Vision; 14. Cataracts; Partial Blindness; the worst of total.

Any one can use it in the privacy of his own home without fear of doctor or medicine. Sent to any part of the United States, Canada and Mexico, by mail, for $5 per pair, payable by draft, P. O. order or registered letter. Circulars free. Any one can return the eye cups to us at any time within three months after receiving them, if they do not prove satisfactory, and we will refund the money.

2,500 CERTIFICATES OF CURE

from honest Farmers, Mechanics and Merchants—some of them the most eminent leading professional and business men, and women of education and refinement, in our country—can be found at our office.

I have dated March 20 from Horace Greely, of the New York Tribune, written by Mr. Ball, of our city, to a gentleman and responsible man who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

The Rt. Merrick, of Lexington, Ky., wrote, April 8th, 1872: "Without any exception I am using this sole, after using the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS thirty days, and this after performed the entire cure of a child to whom I applied it, who was blind in both eyes."

"Truly am I grateful for your noble invention. May God's blessing and prosperity rest on you. I have been using spectacles for seventy years, but now I see well.

Truly yours, REV. W. MERRICK."

Rev. Joseph Smith, Shaker, Mass., cured of partial Blindness of 15 years standing, by use of one pair of the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS.

L. P. Hills, late Mayor of Dayton, Ohio, wrote us, Nov. 15th, 1872, "I have tested the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS, and I am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them. They are the greatest invention of the age."

Wm. Brady, M. D., Salisbury, wrote: "Thanks to you for the greatest gift of inventions, my sight is fully restored, after almost entirely blind for 25 years."

A. S. Wyeth, N. O., Atchison, Pa. writes: After total blindness and treatment of four years, by paralysis, desired an operation, being others established your PATENT EYE CUPS restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes.

As personal testing for full particulars, certificates of cures, prices, etc., all of our agents, and their address, we will send our pamphlet on the INFALLIBLE PRINCIPLES AND METHODS OF THE RESTORATION OF PERFECT VISION AND PRESERVATION OF THE EYESIGHT, forty hundred pages, free on application, by return mail. Write to Dr. J. Ball & Co., P. O. Box 957, No. 21 Liberty street, New York City, N. Y.

For the acquirement of Myopia or Near-Sightedness use our New Patent Myopic A Accidents, supplied by the Ivory Eye Cups. Has proved a certain cure for Long-sightedness.

Send for pamphlets and certificates—free. Waste no more money by adjusting huge glasses on your nose and disfiguring your face.

Session of N. C. Local Ministers' Conference

Thursday, July 16, 10½ o'cl'k, A. M.

The "North Carolina Local Ministers' Conference" met in Annual Session at 10 o'clock, A. M., in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at High Point, N. C.

R. H. Whitaker was called to the chair, and opened the Conference by reading a lesson from the Scriptures and prayer. L. Branson, Sec. and Treasurer.

The roll call was omitted.

On motion of L. Branson, it was resolved that this Conference do cordially invite any itinerant ministers, who may be present, to take seats in the Conference and participate in the deliberations of the body.

The Chair appointed as Committee on Divine Services, C. M. Pepper, Pastor; J. B. Ballard of the Conference, and W. F. Bowman, of High Point.

It was moved that the Conference adjourn till 2 o'clock, P. M. Adjourned with benediction by the President.

2 P. M., Thursday.

The Conference met pursuant to adjournment. R. H. Whitaker in the chair. Minutes read and approved.

Reported present during the Conference: R. H. Whitaker and L. Branson, of Raleigh; P. H. Joyner and S. D. Franklin, of Winston; J. B. Ballard, of Troy; J. W. Barton, of Thomasville; N. M. Jurney, of Olin; R. L. Abernethy and B. York, D. D., of Rutherford College; Solomon Pool, of Chapel Hill; Amos Gregson, of Union Factory; Thomas Reagan, of Jamestown; Solomon Lea, of Leasburg; A. K. Murchison, of Salisbury; C. M. Pepper, J. W. Lewis, R. A. Willis, B. Craven, D. D., D. C. Johnson, itinerants; Geo. B. Wetmore, of the Episcopal; P. H. Dalton, of the Presbyterian, and J. B. Richardson of the Baptist Church. Reported by letter: T. Brogden, J. J. Setliff, W. P. Williams, F. B. Andrews, Turner M. Jones, D. D., A. J. McBride, H. S. Scarborough, D. G. Meekins, Jacob Smoak, C. M. Breer, C. W. Westbrook, J. W. Compton, Miles Powers, J. A. Rogers, J. N. Mann, J. F. Roberts, T. A. Dorsey, R. Ledford, G. M. F. Hampton, Joseph Miller, W. A. Brame, Jas. M. Watson, John L. Pugh, W. H. Thompson, Thos. G. Whitaker, T. L. D. Smith, Samuel Long, Jas. B. Abell, D. P. Meacham, P. M. Farrow, Benjamin Nutt, G. W. Penly, Lewis Phillips and Wilson Atwater.

The Chair appointed as Committee on "Missionary Work" L. Branson, J. B. Ballard, P. H. Joyner.

Committee on Temperance: R. H. Whitaker, S. D. Franklin, N. M. Jurney, J. W. Barton.

On motion, election of officers was made the special order for 2 P. M., Friday evening.

Reports of preachers were called for. J. B. Ballard gave an interesting account of his labors in Moore county—his success at some out-of-the-way places.

L. Branson reported labors performed.

J. W. Barton gave a feeling account of labors from house to house, of prayer meetings and labors in the Sabbath-school: he testified as to the happy influence of class-meetings.

S. D. Franklin stated interesting items in connection with his labors, and especially in his out-of-the-way appointments.

P. H. Joyner gave valuable suggestions in connection with labors as a Local Minister.

J. W. Lewis and C. M. Pepper, Assistants, testified as to a gratifying increase in the usefulness of the Local ministers for the last few years.

The Conference adjourned with the benediction, to meet again at 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Friday, 9 A. M.

Conference met pursuant to adjournment. Divine services were had by A. K. Murchison.

Jabez Leach, of Trinity College, one of the fathers in Methodism, was introduced to the Conference, and on motion was invited to take a seat in the body and participate in its deliberations.

R. H. Whitaker gave a valuable statement of labors performed, and especially of his temperance work, and how it aided the prosperity of the church.

B. York, D. D., Elder, Happy Home, Happy Home circuit, reported 80 sermons preached, 40 Literary Lectures delivered, and many lectures on Miscellaneous subjects: expects to labor as long as able in every possible manner for the prosperity of Christ's Kingdom.

Solomon Pool, Elder, Chapel Hill, Chapel Hill circuit, has been much engaged in the Temperance work, and regards it a fruitful field of usefulness; has labored in the Sabbath-school; has found great pleasure and profit in visiting the sick and the dying.

A. K. Murchison, Deacon Salisbury, Salisbury Station, has itinerated 6 years; located last year on account of ill health: is engaged in editing an independent, political family paper; preaches as often as practicable—not much missionary ground in Rowan county.

Thomas Reagan, Licentiate, Jamestown, S. Guilford circuit, has not preached because of lung disease—preached much during the 20 years in which he has been a minister.

R. L. Abernethy reported labors performed, and gave valuable information in reference to missionary ground and missionary labors.

Interesting discussion was had in reference to the Local Ministers' duties in baptizing and taking members into the church.

Dr. Craven was introduced to the Conference, and by request explained the relation of the Local to the Itinerant minister. "According to the Discipline, the Pastor is pastor of the Local Minister, and the local minister is the helper of the pastor; and he is to help in all kinds of work, since we ordain him and prepare him for all work. All his labors are by the direction or tacit consent of the regular pastor," and hence legally valid.

The Conference adjourned to 2 P. M.

Written Reports of Preachers from June 1st, 1873 to June 1st, 1874.

Lewis Phillips, Elder, Harper's Cross Roads, Deep River circuit.—Has had four regular appointments, preached fifty sermons, delivered seven Sunday-school lectures, organized one Sunday-school, conducted fifteen prayer meetings;—hopes the Conference will have a profitable meeting.

Geo. W. Penly, Elder, Laurel Fork, Sulphur Springs circuit.—Has had 3 regular appointments, preached 40 sermons, delivered 15 Sunday school Lectures, organized 2 Sunday schools, conducted 2 prayer meetings, and received 10 members into the church; would be glad to be present at the present Conference, but cannot do so.

Benjamin Nutt, Deacon; Siloam, Surry circuit.—Owing to infirmity has not been able to perform any ministerial work during the past year.

P. M. Farrow, Deacon, the Cape, Hatteras circuit—has had 2 regular appointments and preached 20 sermons—would be glad to attend—has been very much afflicted the past year, especially since attending the Annual Conference in 1873.

D. P. Meacham, Deacon, Raleigh, Edenton St. Station.—Work has been of a supply and Missionary character, has kept no memorandum of work performed.

J. B. Floyd, Elder, Wilton, Granville circuit.—Has had 3 regular appointments part of the year, and attended several protracted meetings, preached about 35 sermons, attended Sunday school generally, visited and prayed with the sick—thinks he has done but little—is desirous of doing what he can in the Master's cause—sends his love to the brethren—cannot attend because of family affliction.

Samuel Long, Elder; Salem, Forsythe circuit—has been preaching 40 years, is now quite old and infirm; cannot preach any more; has preached only 2 sermons on funeral occasions, during the past year, is in destitute circumstances, and would be thankful for any assistance.

G. M. Hampton, Asheville, has had 2 regular appointments, has preached 25 sermons, delivered 4 Sunday school lectures, held 40 prayer meetings, and organized 1 Sabbath school.

T. L. D. Smith, Kittrells, Tar River circuit, has had 3 regular appointments, preached 25 sermons, delivered 2 Sunday school lectures, conducted 12 prayer meetings and baptized 6 persons—has not done much this year on account of family afflictions.

Thomas G. Whitaker, Elder, Cary, Cary circuit, has had 2 regular appointments, preached 30 sermons, delivered 1 Sunday school Lecture, has preached several funeral sermons, is now old—prays God's blessing upon our Conference.

Amos Gregson, Elder, High Point, Trinity circuit, has preached 25 sermons and organized 1 Sabbath school, is greatly interested in our Conference.

W. H. Thompson, Deacon; Oaks, Alamance circuit, has had 2 regular appointments, preached 54 sermons.

J. L. Pugh, Licentiate: Mouth of Wilson, Jefferson circuit, has had 2 regular appointments, and delivered 1 Sunday school lecture: has preached about 40 sermons, and baptized 8 persons, co-operates with the pastor: affliction has prevented him from doing as much work as desired.

W. A. Brame, Deacon; Louisburg, Tar River circuit, has been preaching and holding prayer meetings, is in full sympathy with the Conference, and prays God's blessing upon it.

Joseph Miller, Deacon; Salem, Davidson circuit, has had 3 regular appointments, preached 50 sermons, delivered 2 Sunday school lectures, held 10 prayer meetings, baptized 15 persons, has buried 10, preached 10 funerals, and married 5 couples: his heart is with the Conference.

R. L. Abernethy, Deacon; Happy Home, Happy Home circuit, has preached 71 times, baptized 25 persons: received 33 persons into the church; held 32 prayer meetings and aided in 16 Temperance meetings.—He has performed laborious work as President of Rutherford College, and much miscellaneous work.

R. Ledford, Deacon; Grassy Branch, Shelby circuit, has had 4 regular appointments, has preached 200 sermons, delivered 3 Sunday school Lectures, has organized 3 Sunday schools, baptized 1 person and received 14 members into the church: reports prosperous times on his work.

Solomon Lea, Elder; Leasburg, Leasburg circuit, has preached 64 sermons, delivered 4 Sunday school Lectures, conducted 12 prayer meetings, has co-operated with the pastor alternating with him at each of his appointments.

For the Advocate.

"Ourself's as others see us."

Mr. Editor: On last Sunday I preached by request in a church belonging to another denomination which is without a pastor. In a note from one of the official members of that church requesting me to announce that a minister would visit them on next Saturday, in order to give them a chance to "call" him to the pastorate, he closed with the following postcript: "I think we will have to adopt your (the Methodist,) plan, that is, assess our churches, and conscript our ministers." This is highly suggestive of the excellency of our system in its peculiar method of supplying all our churches with ministers, and securing their support. And a still more forcible comment is supplied by the state of the churches in that community.

There are one Episcopal, two Presbyterian, two Baptist and two Methodist churches in that section, all of which, except the Methodist, have been destitute of regular pastors most of the time since the war, while the Methodist churches have been regularly supplied, and the pastors have been supported. Here these good people walk with saddened hearts among the stationary and rusting machinery of loosely adjusted systems, and look with admiration on the "Great Iron Wheel" (I thank Mr. Graves for the name) as it rolls on in perpetual motion, with all its smaller wheels clattering to the tune, set by its immortal founder, "All at it, and always at it." Yes, Methodism is a "Great Iron Wheel." With iron tread, and iron will, and iron nerve, and iron muscle it rolls on crushing out ancient prejudices, and sins, and holding every foot of conquered territory with iron grasp, and defending its positions with iron hardness; but the "bruised reed it never breaks," and the lilly of purity always flourishes in its track. May the Arm that moves it never be withdrawn; and "——Wad some power the giftie gie us,

To see oursels as lithers see us."

Do not be Afraid of the Bible.

Its triumphs are certain. The owls may hoot at the rising sun, but the sunshine creeps on notwithstanding. Tribes may perish, priests may die, altars may crumble into ruin, but this blessed Book advances at a pace that never ceases; and if it ever retreats, it is to cover its retreat with a greater glory than its advance. This book inspired by the spirit of God, climbs steep hills and crosses broad rivers. It is found under the sailor's pillow: in the soldier's knapsack; and it soars on wings that are not numbed by polar snows, or relaxed under equatorial suns. It carries with it an earnest of ultimate and everlasting victory. And this book tells us what the real disease of man is. It lays its finger on the very spot, and it tells us the blessed truth that there is no chance or accident; that all is settled and perfectly arranged; and even that ripple of sorrow that sometimes comes to the sensitive heart, as you will find if you trace it backward, came from no earthly spring to fret us, but from the fountain of living waters to strengthen, cheer, and encourage us.

Posthumous Influence.

A SERMON BY BISHOP SIMPSON.

"And by it he, being dead yet speaketh."—HEB. xi, 4.

So far the offering of Cain was a right offering, but it lacked the confession of sin, the knowledge of guilt, the trust in a Redeemer to come. Doubtless in that early age was known, as well as in later ages, that without the shedding of blood there was no remission of sin; and yet the human heart is unwilling to look out from itself to some medium of help; unwilling to glance away toward a mediator. Man is willing to bring of his substance, of his labor, to do anything and everything that is within the compass of his own skill and power rather than turn his heart away to Calvary and look simply to a crucified Saviour as his only help. That was the merit of Abel's offering, his obedience and his faith; it was the defect in the offering of Cain.

The two stand by the altars they had erected (I suppose at an annual feast, for it is said "In the process of time" the margin renders it "the end of days.") I suppose it to be some stated time of worship, possibly the annual ingathering); Cain, as the older, has prepared his altar; it is garlanded with the most beautiful wreaths, covered with fruits the most precious, gathered from the ground, from the trees, picked from the shrubs. Look at the borders round those fruits, of the rose and the pink and the dahlia. Think of the artistic skill with which they were combind as we combine those beautiful bouquets today, but arranged with such art and taste, and he stood like the Pharisee beside them, saying, "God will certainly accept that work, that skill, that taste." At the other altar stands Abel. He has slain the victim. The blood has flowed. He has dipped his finger in the blood and applied it to himself, and is standing with his head cast down, thinking over his sins, and his prayer as they come up before him, is, as he hardly raises his eyes toward heaven, "God be merciful to me, a sinner." And as he stands by the altar his thoughts og far away. There comes a strange conviction. He looks away down the channel of time. The ages open. He sees a mountain, sees a cross, beholds suffering for him, as he glances first at the lamb that was slain, and then the lamb dying on Calvary. And oh, as he stands there, Cain looks upward. No smile from heaven. Abel, scarcely able to look upward, receives a testimony that God accepts him. I do not know, for it is not recorded, how that testimony came, but Abel tells us not only that acceptable worship is that offered in faith in a coming Redeemer, but that acceptable worship is accompanied by some testimony of approbation.

Has it not been so in all ages? When, at the setting up of the tabernacle, the bars, the curtains, the furniture was all arranged, did not God come down in glory and fill the tabernacle with his presence? Did he not illuminate it with his light? And when the altar was erected and the lamb laid upon that altar, according to God's command, and prayer was offered, did not fire come down from heaven and consume the sacrifice, attesting God's acceptance of the sacrifice? Not only was it so in the days of Moses, but when the knowledge of the true God had almost vanished from Israel. Yonder, at Mount Carmel, when Ahab gathers, at Elijah's request, the prophets of Baal, four hundred and fifty men, and it was God, Baal or Jehovah, the priests of Baal arranged their sacrifice, and they called through the heat of the day, as the sun was their god, until the middle of the afternoon, and there was no response: Elijah gathered up the stones of an old altar; placed the sacrifice upon the altar; poured water on the altar, that it might be evident that there could be no collusion; then, at the hour of evening prayer, three o'clock, asked God to prove, in the sight of the people, that he was the Lord, and fire came down from heaven and consumed the sacrifice and licked up the water all around the altar, while the people fell upon their faces and cried out, "The Lord, he is God, and Jehovah, the God of Israel, is the God of the universe!"

Thus God has answered by testimonies the faith of his people, and has given evidence that he approved the acts of his worshipers. This he did sometimes by the words of the prophets. This he did by the indwelling Shekinah on the mercy-seat; by some indication on the ephod. We know not, to-day, clearly how he answered by Urim and Thummin, but the history of religion is that God, in some way, indicated to his worshipers that he accepted their worship. So in our Saviour's days there was the approbation when he submitted himself to be baptized, though he went among the hypocritical Jews—imperious, wicked unbelieving men: yet, as he submitted, the heavens opened and the voice came, as the dove descended, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Then that voice came from the Mount, which the disciples heard, "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." And our Saviour promised that he that would do the commandments should have the Spirit within him, and the Comforter should come and dwell with us, and in us; and in acceptable worship there is the answer. It comes not now in the cloud of heaven. The heavens are not opened. There descends no dove in visible form; no voice comes from the heavenly world; no flashing of light from the Shekinah: but there is a sweeter power, deeper, brighter than all—the witness in our hearts that we are born of God. "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself." God gives unto us the Spirit of his Son in our hearts, crying Abba, Father!—the childlike tone, the filial confidence, the loving heart; and where man offers acceptable worship to God, God does answer, and there drops into the heart peace and love and joy in the Holy Ghost. And this is better than all outward signs. "It is expedient for you," said Jesus, "that I go away; for if I go away I will send the Comforter unto you"—better than Christ's presence; and yet have you not felt as I have? Oh, I have wished a thousand times that I could have got near him: that he had laid his hands on my head: that he had said, "Thy sins, whichare many, are all forgiven thee." I would give all I have for such a voice. I would go a pilgrimage to Jerusalem or Nazareth if I could meet my Saviour and have him lay his hands upon me and tell me I was his. And yet, were I to, were I to meet him, it would be but a momentary meeting. I could not take his time. I could not be with him always. I must be parted from him. I must return to my varied duties, and so must you. Jesus gives himself unseen, spiritually, to my heart. I may be at my home: he is there. I may ascend the mountain: he goes with me. I may lie in the dungeon: he makes my bed easy. My limbs may be mangled: he softens them. My heart may almost burn with sorrow: I feel the dewy influence of his tears. He comes, lays his arm around me, lays himself down by my side, and lets me lean my head on his bosom, that I may feel he is the Son of God, the sinner's friend: and he gives me a testimony that he accepts me as I come and stand by faith trusting in his atoning blood.

But Abel's words tell not only of true worship and its results in the believer's heart, but he speaks to me of true manhood—that it is manly to worship; that it is the noblest act a man can perform. Is not gratitude for gifts manly? To be ungratoful is to be unmanly. To receive gifts without the homage of the heart in return is base, is low. The true man, if he receives a favor, is ready to acknowledge it; if he is aided, he blesses the hand which aids him.

And, then, worship is manly in this, that it brings the man into higher associations. Labor joins him with his follow-men. It is dignified to labor. It is worthy of man to do what he is appointed to do. He has the body, and that body must be employed. These hands were formed to work: this frame to toil: this material indwelling of ours to encounter the winds and waves and elements—small as it is, to be victor over them all. Small as is the human form, it was made to rule the world. And all the powers of earth are to be brought into subjection to this form of ours. It is dignified to work, to labor, to toil, to command: for, after all, work is command; it is making the elements obey; and the time is coming when every element in this world shall be made to yield to human comfort and human elevation.

But, then, while it is manly, while it is dignified, to labor, it is grand, it is sublime, to worship. Thought travels upward, thought travels backward, thought travels forward. The man leaves the present, the now, the surroundings in which he is, and his nature swells; he feels the God like birth, the divine nature glowing within him. He touches not the little spot of earth on which he stands; he shakes not hands merely with the few friends around him, but in the dignity of worship he rises to embrace in thought, so far as he may, the throne of God; he rises above earth, and above the visible heavens, up to where God's throne is, the centre of the universe, and there his mind takes in, as far as it may, the eternity of God, the omnipotence of God, the omnipresence of God, the holiness of God, and his thought goes forward into the far-reaching future; and in his worship he joins himself with God. Oh, it is magnificent to worship! Thought expands; the soul rises; the breath that God gives us swells back again toward God; and in the act of true worship, when the soul is absorbed, we almost forget earthly things. We are imprisoned here in the body, but in worship we forget the body; in the ethereal, face to face with the Almighty, our soul becomes, like the face of Moses, all radiant with glory.

I do not know, as I said, what the testimony was that Abel received. Some have thought that fire came down from heaven and consumed his sacrifice. That may or may not have been. I have sometimes thought that as Abel looked away to Calvary, his face glowed with celestial light from heaven's own courts that came down upon him; and as Moses, chambered with God for forty days and nights upon the mountain summit, came down all radiant, so that his face could not be gazed upon until covered with a veil, may it not have been that light shone all around on the countenance of Abel, and Cain, looking, was sad, and darkness and gloom of skepticism, of unbelief, of disobedience, of jealousy, of anger, mantled his brow? Be that as it may, in worship there is the lightening up of the soul, the expanding of the nature which God hath given us. There is the bringing the man into contact with the grandest thoughts and grandest realities; there is the life past and the life to come. And yet, strange is it, that men oftentimes fancy it is unmanly to worship. Worship has in it the confession of sin. If we have sinned, is it unmanly to confess? Is it unmanly to be true? Is it unmanly? Truth is dignified. If the heart is sad because of sin, is that unmanly? If I have done wrong, ought I not to be sad? And if the tear should drop, is the tear unmanly? Ah, if my heart feel as it should feel, that I have been ungrateful, that I have been disobedient, that I have sinned, is it strange if the fountain of the great deep of my soul be broken up, if the eyes should overflow with tears? But whether the tear fall or not, it is manly to confess our sins, to trust in a Saviour given us, to come unto him who is our elder brother, and has given himself for us that we might live.

Sermons.

BY REV. AARON STOWE.

Sermons are like guns. Some are large, others are small; some are long, others are short; some are new, others old; some are bright, others rusty, some are loaded, others empty; some are owned, others borrowed. Some are air guns, some are pop-guns, some of every size, from the pocket-pistol to the Paixhan gun. Some are charged only with powder, and make a great noise and smoke. Some send only small shot, that irritate rather than kill. Some carry heavy metal, that does execution. Some discharge chain shot, mowing down whole platoons. Some are wide mouthed mortars, throwing only bomb shells. Some are duelling pistols, used only in controversy—vile things. Some go off half bent. Some flash in the pan. Some make a terrible fiz, the charge all escaping at the priming-hole. Some shoot too high, some too low, some side-ways, and a few directly at the mark. Some aim at nothing and hit it. Some kick their owner. Some are unerring; others always hit the wrong object. Some have too much wadding, and vice versa. Some are alarm guns; others are complimentary guns, used only for salutes on special occasions. Some are in a series, constituting a battery; others on swivels, made to turn in any direction. Some are useful, some useless, some dangerous. Some amuse, some frighten, some exasperate, some explode, some gain the victory. Very much depends upon the manner in which they are made and managed.—Methodist Recorder.

Man and Wife

Thomas Jefferson wrote the following excellent advice. There is much human nature and good sense in it:

Harmony in the married state is the very first thing to be aimed at. Nothing can preserve affections uninterrupted but a firm resolution never to differ in will, and a determination of each to consider the love of the other of more value than any earthly object whatever on which a wish can be fixed. How light, in fact, is the sacrifice of any other wish when weighed against the affections of one with whom we are to pass our whole life! Opposition in a single instance will hardly of itself produce alienation; this only takes place when all the little oppositions are put, as it were in a pouch, which, while it is filling the alienation is insensibly going on, and when full it is complete.

It would puzzle either to say why because no one difference of opinion had been marked enough to produce a serious effect by itself. The affection are wearied out by the constant stream of little obstacles. Other sources of discontent, very common, indeed, are the little cross purposes of husband and wife, in common conversation; a disposition in either to criticise and question what the other says, a desire always to demonstrate and make the other feel in the wrong, especially in company. Nothing is so goading. Much better, therefore, if our companion views a thing in a light different from what we do, leave him in quiet possession of his views. What is the use of rectifying him if the thing be unimportant? Let it pass for the present, and wait a softer moment, and more conciliatory occasion of reviving the subject together. It is wonderful how many persons are rendered unhappy by inattention to the little rules of prudence.

Women of the South.

Like the captive Hebrews, they sing not now the songs that once waked to music sweet their David's harp, for that harp now hangs upon the willows by the river of Babylon, where they sit down and weep over fallen Judea. True, they sing the songs of marriage feasts and vintage ingatherings, yet they come with flowers and tears to testify their sympathy in the sorrow of their land, and their undying appreciation of their gallant dead. What better offering has sorrow or grief than the timid heart's-ease, or the modest fern? What purer testimonial of the heart than the humble violet, planted by beauty's hand over the loved one's grave? As the trees that grow over the grave of the daughter of Thrace, at stated periods, dropped the tears of their branches over her resting-place, so do these noble women come, when spring flowers bloom, to plant the memorial shrub, and shed their tears of love over the human mounds that tell where our heroes sleep. For this I give them honor and praise; and unfeeling must be the heart that does not do homage to our Southern women, the perfection of beauty and the glory of the land. With them patriotism is a religion, and love an element of life. The hour of adversity is their hour of triumph. Does the storm gather and the tempest sweep? Man, the Bashan oak, falls before the fury of the blast, but woman, the willow by the waters, flourishes, beautiful in her humility, and luxuriant in her sorrow, when the tempest is over. Do the thunders crash or the lightnings strike? Man the towering pine, is riven by the stroke. Woman, the humble flower nestled among our garden plants, emits a sweeter fragrance when the storm is hushed. Firm, constant, devoted patriotism, pure as the waters from "Chindara's Fount," enthuses their bosoms and signalizes their lives. Meek, gentle and confiding: a devotion and love, sweet as the fruits of the "Amrita tree" characterize their every action. Generous and self-sacrificing, they stripped beauty of its jewels and home of its luxuries for the success of their cause and the comfort of their braves. And now that the flag is unrolled, and the jacket of gray hangs empty on the wall, they bring their offerings of love for those who.

"Died for the land they could not save."

Address of Col. Hardeman at Macon, Ga.

What Made the Difference?

A few days since I was with one of the best and holiest of God's ministers, and he said to me, speaking of this subject of power, that a number of years ago he preached a certain sermon. When he got through, one of his elders stepped up to him and said, "My dear pastor, I hope that you will never preach that sermon again, it is one of the poorest you have ever preached;" and he said to himself, "I will not." Time rolled on. The Spirit came with power upon that people. Night after night the pastor was pressed with extra service and work. He had to resort to his old pile of sermons. He took down the condemned one, and preached it with a prepared heart, warm and gushing with love, and it seem to glow and flash with light. That same elder came to him at its close and said, "My dear pastor, you never preached such a sermon in your life!" And scores of souls were given to him as the result.

What made the difference? Ah! God now used the sermon! Before, it was only man, dull and lifeless man, preaching to men like himself. Now it was given forth by a consecrated soul, on fire with love and faith, and it was preached with demonstration and power, and God was in it. Oh! this power comes only from heaven, from heaven, and is imparted only through consecrated souls!

THE recent deaths from hydrophobia, in New York city, have directed the attention of many scientific men to the disease, and there is a prospect of a real addition to our knowledge of its nature. An investigation made with the microscope by Dr. Hammond, the eminent physician of diseases of the nervous system, upon the nerve centres of one of the victims of the disease, makes it quite probable that the virus of hydrophobia is not a poison of the blood, but of the neavous system. As yet, no very definite results have been reached; but the subject is under careful consideration by many eminent physicians, and we shall look with interest upon the progress of their study.

A PAPER "On the Ethnology of Egypt," was read by Professor Owen at a meeting of the London Anthropological Society recently. He did not consider that Egypt owed its civilization to a low race, but to a race equal in development to those of the present day. He described their civilized dress and skill in artistic ornament. He narrated the conqest by the Hykses, B. C. 2328: Afterward, the conquering Shepherd Kings adopted the civilization of those whom they had conquered. Reviewing the facts of architecture, civilization, and art, it was clear that the whole mind of Egypt was more intent on the future than on the present life. They held the doctrines of the resurrection and metempsychosis. They believed in the resurrection of the body, in a Supreme Eternal Cause of all things, and in the Incarnation of the Deity under various forms. The arts of the goldsmith and jeweller have not advanced during the 3,574 years which have passed since the Egyptian princess left her jewels, which were shown at the Paris Exhibition. In astronomy, geology, and land surveying the Egyptians excelled. They probably knew the earth as an oblate spheroid.

It is good for us to look into our hearts to see the evil there, and watch the progress of the Holy Ghost.—Self-examination is a duty for all. But many persons do so much of this work that they forget to look out of themselves to look away to Christ who is their only helper. "Look unto me," is his direction, and at no time should we neglect to keep the eye of faith in that direction.

Many Christians take little thought previous to prayer. A very judicious Christian once wrote thus: "I can hardly tell you how much advantage I have found, since, instead of bowing down at once in my closet, I walk two or three times around it, solemnly asking myself, how shall I glorify God, and please him most in my prayer? This simple question brings me to the exact point, by bringing before me all the responsibility of addressing the Almighty."

If a poem be really a great one the work of a master of his craft, it is hardly possible too carefully to dwell on its details, to linger too lovingly over each line and phrase, to trace the thread of thought which binds the parts together—to brood over the poem from end to end, with too microscopic attention. There are single lyrics one could name, consisting of not more than twenty or thirty lines, over which one might pause for all the time you have to spare now, and even longer, without exhausting half the quality that is in them.—Good Words.

Passing from this point, after a few hours travel, we find ourself at the county seat of Cleaveland. This is an interesting town of about one thousand inhabitants. The buildings are plain but of a substantial character. Its citizens are hospitable and intelligent. They keep up with the times. It has several churches the most prominent of which are the Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist.—Rev. H. T. Hudson has charge of the Methodist Church. He is in great favor with his people, and is doing the full work of a faithful preacher of righteousness. The Shelby District parsonage is located at Shelby, and is occupied by Dr. Burkhead, the laborious Presiding Elder of the District. Rev. S. R. Trawick is soon to open a school of high grade at this place. His prospects are flattering for a full school. We congratulate the good people of Shelby upon securing his services.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS

are situated two miles from Shelby, and are under the control of Mrs. Brevard. Few springs have a better reputation than these. The White Sulphur is said to be the best in the State—the chalybeate is not so good. The rooms are large and comfortable, and the servants attentive. The number of visitors was only about sixty, most of whom were dispeptics representing its varied forms, and in symptons each differing from the other. In some cases the water is beneficial, in others injurious. Eight or ten days is usually long enough to test the virtue of the water in each particular case. These Springs are better known in South than North Carolina, and consequently are more largely patronized by our sister State. We most cordially recommend them to our people as containing rare medicinal properties, especially for dispeptics and persons afflicted with nervous prostration. Leaving the Springs we are next at in attendance upon the Shelby District Conference, and domiciled with Bro. J. E. Boger, where everything that heart could wish to contribute to the pleasure of our visit was extended. We shall ever remember the generous, kind and christian hospitality of Bro. B. and his estimable lady. To Rev. V. A. Sharpe we are also indebted for his kind attentions. It is his third year upon the Lincolnton circuit. It is the good fortune of few pastors to hold as warm a place in the affections of their people as he does in the hearts of the Methodists of Lincolnton. We should not wonder if he becomes an advocate of the extension of the pastorate.

Lincolnton is an old town—one of the oldest in the State. It has a population of about one thousand. The streets are well shaded, life and activity are seen in business circles, the people are cultivated and refined, and the visitor is at once favorably impressed with the place and especially with the social element which prevails among its citizens. It is the birthplace of Sister Langdon, widow of the lamented Rev. W. I. Langdon of the North Carolina Conference, and of Prof. Lander, so well and favorably known to our people.

The District Conference, of which a synopsis of the proceedings were ordered to be sent to the Advocate, was in many respects one of the most pleasant we have ever attended. Dr. Burkhead is at ease in the chair and presides with dignity and ability.—The District is well manned with able and efficient preachers. The religious exercises of the Conference were made prominent, and the preaching was uniformly good. The preachers all manifest a lively interest in the success of the Advocate. The District Conference over, we took passage for from which point we now write. Bro. Robey, Capt. Moore and others accompanying us as far as Hickory Station. There are about 160 visitors here. Among the number are Judge Merrimon's family, Rev. Dr. N. H. D. Wilson's family, Dr. Rice and family of Raleigh, and many other pleasant acquaintances from different portions of the State. These Springs are situated seven miles from Hickory Station on the Western North Carolina Railroad. The Springs, Sulphur and Chalybeate, have a reputation second to none in the State for their medicinal qualities. While the Cleaveland Springs are more highly impregnated with sulphur, these springs contain valuable properties which the Cleaveland Springs do not. We may have more to say of Catawba and its appointments in our next. Thus far we are highly pleased. Dr. Elliott, the proprietor, is polite and attentive to his guests.

LENOIR

seems to be the most popular summer resort in the West. All they lack is the mineral waters. The town of Lenoir is crowded with visitors. Davenport Female College is located at this place. Rev. W. M. Robey, the President, informs us that the prospects are flattering for the fall session. The college justly sustains a high reputation in all this western country, and it has a bright future before it

We cannot close our letter, already too long, without expressing our admiration of the "great West." The fertility of the soil, the luxuriant crops, pure water, invigorating air, and mountain scenery, far exceed our most sanguine expectations. It lacks capital—it lacks development. Let these come and North Carolina will begin to reap the wealth of its vast resources. More anon.

Death of a Good Lady.

It is with unfeigned sorrow that we announce the death of Mrs. Needham P. Price, a true Christian woman, who died at her residence about 10 miles of Raleigh, on Saturday the 25th of July. She had been for many months a great sufferer from asthma and rheumatic affection, but so sudden a termination of her life was not looked for. Sister Price was a woman of great force of character, strong intellect, liberal education and marked cultivation and refinement. She was possessed too of great amiability, piety and devotion to Christianity and the church of her choice. By the death of her husband three or four years since, the management of a large estate devolved upon her hands, and elicited the exercise of her fine business tact and well directed energies.

The announcement of her death will carry grief to her many friends in this and other counties in the State, but all can rest assured that she died the triumphant death of a good, pure and lovely Christian woman—ripe in years, full of religious faith and adorned with all the graces that angels, as well as men, contemplate with admiration and love.

THE St. Louis Advocate, edited by the able and sprightly Dr. M'Anally, came to us last week in a new guise, smaller in form and in new and smaller type. We have been long attached to the giant paper of the giant West, and marked well and admired its sledge-hammer blows for Methodism and pure morality. We are frank to state, however, that we are pleased with the change that has been made in its size and appearance. It is much more convenient to handle and read, and has four pages devoted to religious, and four to secular, discussions and news. With its new sails, but under the safe control of the same helmsman, we wish it bon voyage!

We publish in other columns reports of the proceedings of the Fayetteville and Raleigh District Conferences. We are indebted for the latter to D. W. Bain, Esq., a devoted Methodist of this city, and the worthy and efficient Secretary of the late District Conference. We regret that on account of a lack of space, the report as originally furnished had to be condensed to the exclusion of much interesting matter, and especially of several resolutions adopted by the Conference.

WE trust our friends will be prompt in renewing their subscription to the ADVOCATE. No family can afford to do without a good religious paper.

The venerable Dr. Lovick Pierce is said to be in better health than he was at the close of the General Conference.

Rev. W. M. Jordan, writes from Roxboro' under date of July 28th, and says:

"I would inform the readers of the "Advocate" that we have recently had a most excellent meeting on this (Person) circuit at Mt. Tirzah. Eighteen persons professed conversion.—The meeting lasted eight days. Bro. Gray, of our Conference, was present all the time, laboring very efficiently and usefully. Bro. J. P. Moore, P. E., was with us one day and Bro. W. R. Webb one day, each rendering good service."

Hard Times

On almost every lip and from almost every heart we hear the sigh and complaint of "hard times." We have never known a time when people have not complained of something—of bad seasons, short crops, dull trade or scarcity of money. Some people cannot help croaking—it comes as naturally to their throats as it does to those of meadow-frogs. They prefer to listen to their own doleful music than to whistle in the face of opposing difficulties and frowning adversity. They magnify mole hills into mountains, which they despair of surmounting, and regard only the black outside of a cloud, without reflecting that it has a 'silver lining' furnished by the sun, which beyond shines as brightly as ever.

What if the times are hard? It is nothing more than our ancestors back to Adam and Eve have been compelled to endure. Ever since they left the grottoes and flower banks of Eden, they have been pricked by thorns and only 'plucked the flower safety from the nettle danger.' Labor, and that hard and unremitting, has been the condition of man's advancement to civilization and wealth. Straitened circumstances are only a call for more nerve, more exercise of wit and ingenuity, more energy and pluck. If times were always easy, and man always prosperous, he would soon be of no worth, mentally or morally. Too much prosperity begets inaction, and all the evils that troop after it,—indolence, carelessness, luxury, irreligion, vice and crime. Exercise is the condition of the brightening of talents and the development of faculties and powers. When the sunshine of ease and prosperity falls too directly and brightly upon men, they become enervated and weak; but let the clouds of adversity gather and the darkness come upon them, if they have life left within them, their sleeping energies will be aroused, their limbs strengthened and their motions quickened.

The best remedy and only specific cure for 'hard times' is a strong application of about ten or twelve hours of hard work per day, followed at night by a dose of healthful sleep for six or eight hours. Complaining will not remove hard times any more than groaning and despondency will cure an attack of raging fever. Despair is apt to result fatally to a sick man, but in a contest between a strong heart and cheerful spirit on the one hand, and disease on the other, the chances of victory are in favor of the former. So, 'hard times' finds its easy to crush a man who shuts his eyes and folds his hands, but yields to him who bravely fronts and beats up against it.

In evil times, economy must be learned and practised. The brakes must be put on the car of household and personal expenses, when Bankruptcy yawns at the end of the downgrade. The table ought not to be so richly laden with the bounty and luxury that prosperity admits of, nor the person clothed with the rich fabrics and ornaments which a full purse only can procure. The summer trip to Saratoga and the tour in the mountains can be postponed and the money one would spend, be better applied to pushing one's business and keeping good credit in the midst of the financial crash about him. But in economizing there is a dangerous extreme. Do not stop your boys and girls from school, for "time is of the essence" in life, and educational training cannot be postponed. Do not lessen or withhold your contributions to the church and minister, for these are necessary expenses, and must be incurred. Neither stop your subscription to the Advocate nor forget the editor, who works night and day, in his sanctum, to send a visitor to your firesides whose presence will cheer, enlighten and benefit.

A Soft Impeachment.

There is not that love among the brethren which should exist, between the colored Methodists of Wilmington and the Northern Methodists who have been endeavoring to establish themselves, in that city, at least we infer as much from the following remark escaping from the pen of Rev. Mr. Parkinson, a minister of the M. E. Church, operating in Wilmington, who recently addressed a letter to the Zion's Herald. The Zion Methodists do not receive the Northern Methodist Episcopals with open arms of welcome, and Mr. Parkinson, in the attempt to divine the cause, indulges in an insinuation that smacks much of irritated feeling and no very commendable spirit. He says: "The pastor of this church (Trinity, M. E. Church,) is Rev. George Price, a colored brother, whose zeal in the Master's cause might "provoke many." But Brother Price and his little flock are not without their enemies. The Zion Methodist Church, the strongest among the blacks in the city, oppose strongly the coming of the old Methodist Episcopals into the place—a condition of things due to the fact, I suppose, that Bishop Simpson would not give Bishop Hood, of Zion's, $10, 000 to bring the connection in the State over to us. But none of these things move Brother Price or I. In God's name we have set up the standard, and trustingly go forward."

Rev. T. L. DeVaux, the genial and accomplished editor of the Presbyterian, has returned to his editorial work, greatly improved in health by the respite he has been enjoying.

Consolidation and Unification.

Under an act of the legislature of Georgia, the question of unification is being submitted to the various colleges, denominational and sectarian, in Georgia, and we believe is being generally acquiesced in. They are to be united to and form a part of the University of Georgia, receiving the countenance and aid of the State and thus forming a University proper.

Emory College (Methodist) of whose Board of Trustees Bishop Pierce is President, at its late commencement, agreed to the plan of unification proposed by the Legislature. The act provides that there shall be an appropriation made by the State to the University at Athens of $500,000, for buildings, etc., and $100,000 a year to pay Professors, etc.; and there shall be an appropriation by the State of $100,000 to any denominational college for buildings, etc., and $10,000 a year for Professors, etc. The colleges shall be correlated to the University, which shall provide for the higher education, etc.

Fayetteville District Conference

The Fayetteville District Conference was held at Laurinburg, July 16-19. Rev. S. D. Adams, presiding. All of the charges, except Buckhorn and Uwharrie, were represented. The sessions were pleasant and profitable the discussions animated and interesting.

The reports of the Pastors brought out the following facts: The majority of the charges showed signs of improvement. An increased attendance on the ministry of the word is noticeable. Where the social meetings are kept up, the attendance is good. There is an increase in the number of those who receive the communion. A few of the Pastors are called to deplore the lack of vital godliness, and family religion, among the people of their charges. The Sunday School interest is receiving much attention throughout the District. Our books and papers are generally used. Wherever the "Uniform Lesson System" is adopted, it is working prosperously.

The financial exhibit is rather discouraging. The salaries of the Pastors range from $400 up to $1500. Only one of the charges has paid off its indebtedness up to date.

The amounts paid by the others, are from one fourth to one half of the allowance made by the respective boards of Stewards.

The Pastors are hopeful that the collections ordered by the Annual Conference will be paid off in full.

Resolutions in favor of Trinity College, Greensboro and Davenport Female Colleges, were adopted.

A resolution recommending the Raleigh Christian Advocate to the patronage of the people, was presented and adopted.

The following laymen were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference. John W. Leak, W. D. Smith, Jackson Townsend and John Vaughan—John Buie, and L. T. Everett, alternates.

Religious services were held daily, morning and evening. The congregations were large orderly and serious. The hospitality of the community abounded, Presbyterians vied with the Methodists in liberality and generosity.

The presence of the following ministers added interest to the occasion. Rev. Messrs. Cobell, Ferguson and McDonald of the Presbyterian church and Rev. Messrs. Brent, Smidford and Watkins of the N. C. Conference.

The next District Conference will be held at Carthage.

JOSEPH WHEELER, Sec't'y.

MR. EDITOR: In answer to many inquiries, allow me to state that persons desiring to send their daughters to Davenport without the trouble and expense of coming with them, can place them in charge of Mrs. F. C. Nicholson, or Rev. T. J. Gattis at any point on their respective routes, as follows.

Mrs Nicholson will leave Wilmington on Thursday morning, Aug. 13th, and arrive at Salisbury, by the N. C. Railroad, on Friday morning.

Mr. Gattis will leave Rockingham on Wednesday, 12th Aug., and arrive at Salisbury Friday morning, via Wadesboro, Monroe and Charlotte.

Both will arrive at Davenport on Friday evening, Aug. 14th.

W. M. ROBEY.

BRO. ROBERTS: The late General Conference having failed to publish a Magazine for our Southern Methodists girls, the undersigned appealed to the Church, asking all who favored the publication, at Nashville, at one dollar a year, of the to write to him at "Hiwassee College," Tenn., stating the number of copies for which they were severally willing to vouch. These conditional subscriptions, up to date, aggregate ten thousand and fifty seven. But at one dollar a year, with the prepayment of postage as required by the new Postal Law, we shall need twenty thousand.

What an agency for good such a Magazine would be! Shall we have it? We wait to see.

J. H. BRUNNER.

We have received from Rev. J. P. Simpson, Secretary of the Shelby District Conference, a report of the proceedings of that body lately in session at Lincolnton. It reached us too late for publication in this issue, but shall receive due consideration in our next.

Raleigh District Conference.

The District Conference was held in the Methodist Church, at Franklinton, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, July 23d, 24th, and 25th ult. The Rev. W. H. Bobbitt, Presiding Elder, in the Chair.

The several stations, circuits, &c., were represented by the Pastors thereof.

Not one Pastor was absent.

Besides these there were present forty Local Preachers and Lay delegates.

The interesting sessions of the Conference attracted a large number of visitors.

The introductory sermon was preached on Wednesday night by Rev. H. P. Cole, of Person St. Church, Raleigh. It was an earnest and forcible discourse on Prayer.

The efficient Secretary of the last Conference, John W. Hays, Esq., of Oxford, was re elected, and D. W. Bain, of Raleigh, was elected his assistant.

All the important interests of the church received proper attention.—The Presiding Elder elicited from the preachers full information respecting their work and its results. Judging from the character of their reports, progress seems to have been one of their watch-words as they entered upon their labors the present year.—A faithful performance of duty is attested by the results shown. The spiritual condition of the church was reported as generally good—in nearly all charges—excellent. One indication of an improved state of spirituality is a decline of the tendency towards popular amusements. In some localities they are eschewed altogether, while in others, even where the temptations are great, there is a growing indisposition towards them. Some of the people still cherish class-meetings and love feasts as well as prayer-meetings. Much good has resulted this year from an observance of these means of grace. Some of the church es have been visited by gracious revivals of religion resulting in great spiritual improvement to the members, and the conversion of several hundred persons. A very encouraging and gratifying feature of the revivals is the large number of children that have been brought into the church. Special mention was made of this. How sublime the thought—the church and her children—the children saved to the church.

The financial department of the churches, though not fully sustained up to this time, is not discouraging. The preachers are hopeful that all funds and assessments will be secured by the meeting of the Annual Conference. There is but one exception to this and that is a small, new, field of labor whose faithful minister, appreciating the full measure of his responsibility to his God, and the Church, and cherishing a holy love for his people, labors constantly and zealously for them, with hopes of but little reward, save the conversion of souls and the approval of Heaven.

His people love him but are unable to do much for him. He lives on his own resources and gives the people the gospel.

The preachers have nothing to complain of in a social point of view. It was good to hear each one say "my people look after my personal interests, they take care of me as best they can, I do not suffer." The visiting feature of the pastor's duty has not been generally neglected.

The Church property is in a good state of preservation. Several Churches have been repaired or built. There is an increasing disposition to make the Churches neater, more commodious and comfortable. There are 77 preaching places in the District including a few houses of worship not Churches.

The Sunday School interests have received a full share of the attention of pastors. There are 53 Methodist Schools in the District with a large number of scholars. This important interest is progressing. The people are alive to it.

The Conference considered the educational interests. They were discussed fully. Each College—Trinity—Greensboro, and Davenport, received a special endorsement and was recommended to the patronage of our people, in the passage of appropriate resolutions.

The Rev. B. B. Culbreth, Ag't for Trinity College, was present during the Conference and secured subscriptions amounting to nearly $400, we learn. The subject of District Schools was also considered, and resolutions were adopted looking to the establishment of a "District Male Academy" and a "District Female Academy" at convenient places in the District, and a committee composed of the following brethren, was appointed to secure the best location and advantages of said schools: Dr. D. C. White, Rev. H. H. Gibbons, M. S. Davis, Dr. T. P. Jerman, and Rev. J. R. Griffith.

Much discusion, as was stated, was had upon the subject of education, elicited by the resolutions, not upon the mere passage of them, however, but in relation to the claims of our Colleges upon our own people, in which the importance of our own denominational Colleges being patronized by our own Church people, was strongly urged. We would be glad if the people could see in print what was said on the Conference floor on this subject. It would, in bringing the idea of duty before them, no doubt, accomplish good.

The Missionary work has not been neglected. There are several missions in the District. The preachers are looking after unoccupied missionary ground. Good work will be done this year. This District will, it is believed, bring up its full missionary assessment. At the Methodist Church on Sunday morning over $75 were raised without much special effort.

A Committee on Missions was appointed.

The following important resolutions were passed after a thorough discussion of them:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the District Conference that the tendency to crowd the Sabbath with too many services, so as to overtax the mental and physical strength of the Pastors, and as a consequence produce inefficient work, should be discouraged.

Resolved, further, That we earnestly request our people everywhere to make a sacrifice of a sufficient amount of time during the week, when necessary, to attend upon the preaching of the Gospel or in any other way assist the pastor in securing the interest of his charge.

On the subject of Temperance appropriate remarks were made and resolutions passed.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted, to which a hearty response will be given by all our people.

WHEREAS, we have learned with pleasure that the Rev. F. L. Reid and James W. Reid Esqs. sons of the late Rev. N. F. Reid D. D., are now preparing for the press a volume of Sermons and Speeches by their distinguished and lamented Father, Therefore resolved.

That this District Conference, gratefully cherishing the precious memory of the dear, departed author, do earnestly commend the volume to all our people and mutually pledge ourselves to encourage the dissemination and sale of this invaluable memento.

The Conference, appreciating the importance of the success of Methodism in Raleigh, and realizing the present needs of the Church here, unanimously passed a resolution pledging a co-operation in the enterprise of a new building, for which every member and friend of the Church in Raleigh should, and will, have a profound sense of gratitude.

The Advocate was not forgotten. It was made a subject of special mention by the preachers in their report. The efforts of the Editor were praised, words of encouragement expressed and resolutions adopted endorsing the paper as the organ of the Conference and pledging the support of the same.

An important subject was introduced for discussion, viz. The best plan for the support of the ministry. The remarks embraced valuable suggestions. Bro. John W. Hays' suggestions were particularly interesting and forcible. He favored the assessment plan as preferable, if properly managed. If the remarks were published they would do good.

Oxford was selected as the place for holding the next District Conference.

The following are the Delegates elected to the Annual Conference: John W. Hays, Rev. B. B. Hester, M. S. Davis, and J. P. Jenkins.

Dr. J. B. Beckwith and Dr. W. M. Clarke were elected Alternates.

The Conference closed its session on Saturday afternoon.

The warm, christian, hospitality extended to members of the Conference and visitors by the people of Franklinton, will be ever remembered by all whose pleasure it was to be present. The Conference passed suitable resolutions expressive of its feeling at the manner in which it had been entertained, and thanks therefor. To Bro. H. H. Gibbons, pastor, was made special acknowledgement for his successful efforts in making provision for the entertainment of the Conference.

It is truly gratifying to see to what extent the beloved Presiding Elder, Bro. W. H. Bobbitt, carries with him every where the esteem of the people. The preachers show their confidence in him—they all labor in harmony to sustain him in his work, and he in turn helps and encourages them. He is one of the best presiding officers in the whole Council of Presiding Elders.

The preaching during Conference and on the Sabbath was excellent. The Cross was the theme of every discourse and the people were drawn closer to it. The preaching was successful. Good will flow from it.

The 7th District Conference of Raleigh District will be ever remembered by those present, as an epoch in the history of the Church. It was generally considered as the most interesting and successful yet held in the District.

Important to Medical Students.

The Trustees of the Louisville Medical College, (Louisville, Ky.,) appreciating the impoverished condition of the whole country, have determined to grant a Beneficiary Scholarship to any young man, who, sufficiently educated to study medicine and of good character, is unable to pay for his education. To secure this valuable aid, application, with a full statement of the facts, should be made without delay to Dr. E. S. GAILLARD, Dean, Louisville, Ky.

We direct attention to the advertisement, in this issue, of Randolph Macon College, an institution of high rank among colleges and presided over by the able and accomplished Rev. Jas. Duncan D.D. As will be seen by reference to the advertisement, the terms are very low.

Religious World.

— The Temperance and Sunday School addresses of Rev B. Craven, D. D., L.L., D., at Kernersville, a few weeks since, are spoken of in highly complimentary terms by a correspondent of the Central Protestant.

— A Congregational Church of five members was organized June 20 at Tacoma, on Puget's Sound, the terminus of the North Pacific Railroad.

— There are seven Congregational Churches in Texas; the oldest, in Corpus Christi, was organized in 1868, has about forty members.

— Rev. Dr. Williams, of New York, said in his farewell sermon: "Personally I have paid more for the privilege of preaching the Gospel these forty years than any man in the city has paid for the privilege of hearing it."

— The Society of the Trinity M. E. Church, recently organized in Wilmington N. C., has built a church for temporary use, 30 by 44 feet in dimensions, and costing $1000.

— A Methodist Episcopal church in Maine has decided to devote the forenoon of each Sabbath during the summer months to social services. Preaching in the afternoon and evening.

— Hiram Bingham, of Bennington, Vt., has presented the congregational church in that place with a 3000 lb. bell costing nearly $1.500.

— Prof. Swing's people of Chicago propose to erect a church that will seat three thousand people, and will cost at least $100,00.

— A proposal has been made to establish a first class magazine of Calvinistic Theology, to be published probably at Baltimore, under the editorial supervision of eminent writers of the Southern Presbyterian and Reformed Churches.

— The ninety-ninth anniversary of the birth of Rev. Henry Boehm was celebrated recently. He is the oldest living Methodist preacher, and has given seventy three years to the work.

— Referring to the tendency of people, as they prosper and get up in the world, to seek after the fashionable places of worship, Spurgeon lately said, "They give up their fathers' religion and their noble heritage for the sake of being patted on the back by nobodys."

— One evening after a weary march, as Mohammed was camping with his followers, he overheard one of them saying, "I will loose my camel and commit it to God." "Friend," said the Prophet, "tie thy camel and commit it God."

— A gift of two hundred dollars from a New York lady friend of a Missouri pastor encouraged his church lately to make an effort to rebuild their house.

— The Center Ossipee, N. H., Congregational Church, unable to support a pastor, listens to selected sermons read to them both by men and women appointed from their number.

— The Jewish Messenger learns that the energetic remonstrances of the United States Consul at Bucharest, seconded by the representatives of Great Britain, France, and Greece, have been successful in procuring the Prince's suspension of the odious law, whose enforcement threatened such serious injury to the Jewish community.

— Prof. E W. Blyden, of Liberia, on whom Lincoln University has just conferred the degree of LL.D., is probably, says the Evangelist, the most learned person of African blood living, especially in linguistical literature, the Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Arabic, and Semitic tongues generally. He spent several years in the service of the government college in Liberia, but has of late devoted himself to the establishment of a circle of schools in the region east of that Republic, largely peopled by black Mahomedans, with whose language and modes of thought he has familiarized himself, and with whose prejudices against Christianity he has learned to deal.

— At a ministerial meeting held during the Round Lake Camp-meeting about two hundred ministers were present. They were from all sections of our own country, from Canada and Australia.

The Moravians have purchased twenty acres of beautiful grove land near Orrstown, Ohio, where they will pitch one hundred tents and organize a great camp-meeting, under the charge of Bishop Edwards, in August.

The Second Union Camp-meeting for the promotion of Christian Holiness, at Ocean Grove, six miles south of Long Branch, is now in progress, the attendance being estimated at five thousand persons. The eight large hotels and the hundreds of cottages are full. At no former season have the numbers or the interest been so great.

In Madagascar there are half a million of professing Christians, 20,000 children are at school, some 700 Churches, and the Bible has been translated, and many books written in Malagasy, and more than 150,000 books in that vernacular are sold every year. Besides building their own churches and supporting their ministers, the native Christians maintain 120 evangelists in the outlying districts. The government has absorbed Christianity into its system, just as Constantine did, after failing to stamp it out by bitter persecution. And this is the result of less than fifty years.

State and Local.

— Duncan Cameron, son of Paul Cameron of Hillsboro' was wounded in a difficulty in Mississippi last week.

— The Hillsboro Recorder says that the tobacco crop all over the country is thought to be the worst for forty years.

— Dr. J. F. Cain's still-house eight or ten miles from Hillsboro' was burnt recently, together with eight or ten barells of whiskey. The biter bit and burner burnt.

— Wadesboro has organized a fire company and Monroe wants one also.

— THE STAR AND RECORD learns that the farmers about Rutherfordton are afraid to come to town on account of the prevailing fever there.

— Two boys stolen at Glen Springs, Rutherford Co, a few days since, were captured near Poor's Ford, but the thieves made their escape.

— A paper is soon to be started in Bakersville by Rev. W. C. Bowman, the Universalist preacher.

— Larcenies are becoming frequent in Greesboro.

— Wilmington burglars use chloroform on their intended victims.

— The distemper continues to kill cattle in Milton and vicinity.

— Mr. William S. Eagle, of Iredell county, last realized the tremendous yield of 128½ bushels of wheat from 6 bushels and 3 pecks.

A RALEIGH PROFESSOR BUYS THOMASVILLE COLLEGE.—We learn that Professor Reinhardt of the Baptist Female Seminary in this city has just purchased the female College at Thomasville for three thousand dollars. Prof. Reinhardt and his accomplished lady will open the College to young ladies independent of sectarianism.

— R. D. Graham has refused $20,000 for his Atlantic Hotel at Beaufort. There are now three hundred guests at the house.

— Dried blackberries are selling in Salem and Winston at 10 cents per pound.

— Mysterious movements of men suspected to be horse thieves are exciting the Yadkin people.

— The Salem Press learns that some Randolph stone ware men, while on their way to Salem with their ware, were robbed of their money while asleep in their wagons.

— The Salem Press gives the following Davie county items; Mr. F. Frost hitched his mare and colt to a tree at Frank Baity's shoe-shop, last week, in the Farmington neighborhood, when the tree was struck by lightning killing both mare and colt.

— Mr Jehial Atwater, a young man aged about 21 years and son of Mr Matthew Atwater the present candidate for the Legislature, in Orange Co. was fatally kicked by a mule on Thursday morning and died from the effects of the injury on Friday morning. Mr A. had gone into the stable to release a young mule which in some way had become entangled, when an old mule in the same stall, alarmed or irritated, kicked him full in the left side, just below the ribs.

— Recently near Fulton, lightning struck Mr. Hendricks' residence, shattering the chimney, and destroying the clock on the mantel-piece. One of Mr. Hendricks' daughters, up stairs, and another down stairs, were stunned by the shock. No other damage done, except some sixty dollars to the lightning-rod men, who soon made their appearance and put up four rods,—two to the dwelling, one to the kitchen and one to the barn

— A terrible tragedy occurred in Chatham county last week. While turkey hunting Mr. James Ferrell shot Mr. Frank Gunter and killed him by accident. Ferrell thought the bent form of Gunter relying in reply to his call was a turkey; hence the fatal result.

— Says the Greensboro PATRIOT: While one of our citizens was taking a nap near the depot last Sunday, a light-fingered thief from parts unknown, ripped his pocket open with a knife and made tracks with his pocket book, containing about $80. It was missed however, the thief caught and made to disgorge, and then, strange to say, they let him go, and he went very expeditiously, and they never saw him more.

— The hotels of Hickory have been crowded with visitors of late.

— ASHE COUNTY COPPER MINE.—Quite a large fortune has been realized out of this property. It was originally owned by parties in Ashe county and was sold to parties in Baltimore for ten thousand dollars. These parties sold it to another company for seventy thousand dollars. The present owners have organized a stock company with shares to the amount of THREE MILLIONS and the STOCK IS AT PAR. This company is about to build a railroad from somewhere about Wytheville on the Tennessee and Virginia R. R. to their mine in Ashe county. This should encourage our people to pay more attention to the development of the mineral interests of Western North Carolina. As soon as the election is over we have a suggestion to make to the Carolina Central Railroad in regard to Cranberry Iron Works.—PIED. PRESS.

—Work is progressing rapidly on the railroad from Wilmington to the Sound.

— Prof. M. Fetter, formerly of Chapel Hill, will open a school in Goldsboro soon.

— Buncombe County, it is said, has only thirteen candidates for Superior Court clerk, but fortunately only two of the members wants the office; the remainder run at the earnest solicitation of friends.

— The ROBESONIAN says; We are called upon to mourn the sad death of Rev. Malcolm McNair which occurred at his residence near Tuscahim, in this county, on last Monday.

— The largest tree in the State is said to be on the old Ashe-place, near spring Hill, 3 or 4 miles below Fayetteville near the banks of the Cape Fear. A correspondent of the Fayetteville EAGLE says of it; I visited the spot on the 4th day of July, 1833, in company with a boyhood friend, who, in after yrs, was known as the author of "Sinol Sniggs." He and I measured it with a large silk pocket-handkerchief, drawn from the extreme corners. The handkerchief thus drawn out, required to be stretched five times to reach around the tree. This, at a moderate calculation, would give a circumference of at least twenty feet.

There is a large tree also on Deep River in Chatham county as large but not as tall as the one on the Cape Fear.

— The Roanoke News learns that a little daughter of Capt. J. M. Grizzard, of Halifax, was accidentally cut by an axe in the hands of a boy who was chopping barrel hoops on Thursday evening. She was said to be severely injured.

— One of the editors of the Raleigh News, writing from Beaufort to his paper says: We have visited one of the largest truck farms in this section, owned by Mr. Colburn, at Colburnville, some four miles from here. He has 70 acres in watermelons; he shipped 10,000 to New York on Monday and 8,000 to Philadelphia Thursday. He informed us that he paid $3,500 freight on cucumbers this season.

Departed this life on July 6 h, 1874, Annie E. Snipes, daughter of Alvis and Mary Snipes, of Chatham co., N. C.

She was born March 25th, 56. She lingered for some time with Typhoid Fever, bearing the strongest marks of christian fortitude, and although Annie was not blessed with the privilege of hearing and conversing with those by whom she was beloved, she enjoyed the benefits of the Deaf and Dumb Institute in Raleigh, where she left many friends and while her body lies in the graveyard at Cedar Grove Church to await the resurrection morn, her spirit has gone to that happy Land where she will grasp palms of victory and wear a crown of glory, and her tongue will join in with those of her kindred and loved ones that have gone before, and are awaiting the arrival of those now on the way.

She leaves an aged grandmother and many relatives, who are expecting to live with her in a land of pleasure, there to dwell forever in sweet communion with all the ransomed of the Lord.

M. A.

Departed this life near Blockersville Cumberland co. N. C. April 24th 1874, Mrs. Anna E Bullard wife of Henry Bullard decd in the 51st year of her age. She was converted and joined the Church, (M. E. Church, South,) in early life, and remained a lively and consistent member till called to the Church above.

The death of sister B. was quite a severe shock to her children orphan'd by the death of their father only six weeks before, as well as to all her neighbours in the community. She was very sick only a few days. I was with her only six or eight hours before she died. She was hopeful, indeed said to me, she was not afraid to die. She left behind her interesting sons and daughters, single, living together and endeavoring to manage affairs as their pious parents led tought them. The Lord bless and prosper them and bring them to meet the parents in Heaven.

JAMES MAHONEY.

Died at his father's residence in Tyrrell County, N. C. Henderson P. Lewis, Henderson and Ellen A. Lewis, son of born October the 19th A. D. 1872, and departed this life June 30th 1874 being at the time of his death 1 year 8 months and 11 days. Little Henderson's life on earth was short, his afflictions were severe, and on one side was paralized at the early age of 6 months. All of life could present no charms. God, who always does right, knew what was best, and sent death to end his sufferings. His parents are grieved, the ties of affection prompted by nature could not have it otherwise, as it was their only "darling boy," yet they sorrow not as those who have no hope. Our brother and sister bear their bereavement with Christian fortitude, being resigned to God's will. It is well they are so. Grief cannot bring him back again; but the consolation abounds; they can go to him. Christ says: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God." See Mark 10th chap. and 14th verse. Out of suffering, where there is no death. Removed from the temptations of this wicked world—no traveler towards heaven now. No, his race is run. Glory be to God! In heaven the parents have a son—he is gone home, to live with the angels forever. Farewell little Henderson—God grant we may meet you there after the resurrection and be happy with you!

Give joy or grief,
Give ease or pain
Take life or friends away
But in my we'll find them all again
In that eternal day."

WM. R. ENORS.

Died at his father's residence in Cabarrus Co., N. C. on the 9th day of June, 1874, Layton M Winecoff, in the 25th year of his age. He had been a member of the M. E. Church South, for nearly eight years, living a most lovely and consistent life. From his earliest youth he was a model of filial affection at home, and of sobriety abroad, never engaging in the sinful amusements which draw so many young men aside. None who knew him could fail to love him. He was fast developing in to christian manhood—already an ornament to society, the joy of the community and the hope and comfort of an aged father. In his death, the church has lost one of its brightest promises, and sorely bereaved family and a very large connection are left to mourn his loss. But their loss is his gain. He was ready for the Master's call, and went up higher. May the God of all grace comfort the bereaved family and bring them at last to join him in that bright home above.

John I E. Atwater was born June 13th, 1853, and died July 24th 1874 in his 22nd year.

His death was sudden, caused by the kick of a mule 36 hours before his departure.

He had all the early training that a pious father and mother could give, professed religion, joined the Methodist E. Church, South, in his 15th year and was a Christian indeed—his whole kind soul for, and possessed all the qualifications necessary to make a good citizen.

The circumstances connected with his death were very afflicting; he was stout and in perfect health attending to the farm business, as he was accustomed, while this father, Matthew Atwater, was absent canvassing the County of Orange for the Legislature battling for truth and right, and reached home just after the death of his noble son.

Deceased was perfectly rational to the last and a few moments before his death, said, "Tell my Pa, Ma is with Jesus and all is well with me, and I wish you all to meet us in heaven."

Thus ended this young man who had cleaned his way by taking heed, according to God's holy word.

PIEDMONT SPRINGS,

STOKES COUNTY, N. C.

Opened on the 20th of June for the Reception of Visitors.

These justly celebrated Springs, whose waters cure Anæmia, Dyspepsia Amœrsis, Diseases of the Skin, General Debility and Neuralgia, and wonderfully restorative in diseases peculiar to females, have been the resort for invalids for years. The hotel and cottage accommodations have been greatly enlarged and beautified—the grounds ornamented—the walks and drives extended.

The new HOTEL, just completed, has an observatory from which all the beautiful scenery which surrounds those Springs can be seen. "Moore's Knob" and "Hanging Rock," spurs of the Sauratown Mountains, with their deep gorges and lofty borders, loom up grandly amongst the clouds, immediately in front of the Hotel buildings.

HORSES AND CONVEYANCES,

for visiting the many places of interest can be obtained at trifling cost.

The Springs are easy of access, being only a short drive by a good line of stages, from Salem—Winston, the terminus of the N. W. N. C. R. R., which connects at Greensboro with all the trains going North or South.

ATTRACTIONS.

The Springs are supplied with Billiard, Bowling Saloon, Bath Room, experienced Lunch-waiters, and polite servants.

CARY COTTON GIN.

The Latest, Best and Cheapest.

I offer the public the latest improved Cotton Gin, as well as the cheapest. The following certificates from well known gentlemen, will be more satisfactory than any thing I can say:

NEAR CARY, N. C., NOV., 12th, 1873.

This is to certify that I am using one of the Cary Gins made by W. M. Sorrell, of Cary, N. C., and that I am well pleased with it and would cheerfully recommend it to any one wanting a good Gin.

A. B. YATES.

CARY, N. C., May 22nd, 1874.

I take pleasure in saying that the fifty Saw Cotton Gin I purchased from Mr. W. M Sorrell, known as the Cary Gin, does far better work than any Gin I have heretofore used, though costing from 50 to 100 per cent. less money. I think any person in want of a Gin will save money by purchasing the Cary Gin, its performance has been entirely satisfactory to me, I can cheerfully recommend it to others.

A. P. PAGE.

We certify that the Cary Gin has given entire satisfaction to our neighbors, who have tried it, and we think it an excellent gin.

MOTT'S LIVER PILLS!

An old physician once said that nearly all diseases originate from a DISEASED CONDITION OF THE LIVER and this statement is true, although it may at first seem like an exaggeration. When the Liver is out of order the whole system and every organ and function suffer more or less in consequence. In the incipient stages of the disease a man

DOES NOT KNOW WHAT AILS HIM.

He is moody, restless and despondent; and that is the time to take a SIMPLE REMEDY that will restore him to health and prevent a whole train of diseases that may follow. MOTT'S LIVER PILLS cure liver complaint of the Liver. MOTT'S LIVER PILLS give tone to the stomach. MOTT'S LIVER PILLS cleans the system of bile. MOTT'S LIVER PILLS drive out febrile affections. MOTT'S LIVER PILLS strengthen the whole system.

IN A SINGLE DAY,

MOTT'S LIVER PILLS regulate the Liver, and are a sure reliable as a Liver medicine than any of the mineral preparations that do MORE HARM THAN GOOD

RALEIGH, N. C.

We beg leave to call the attention of the Trade in Central North Carolina to our large and well selected stock of

"FAMILY," "EXTRA" AND "SUPERFINE" FLOURS.

We feel confident we can do as well for them as any house in Baltimore or Norfolk, freight and other charges added.

Our Senior Partner and Buyer, who resides all the time in New York, has for the past eight years been connected with the large and well known Grocery House of Messrs. H. K. Thurber & Co., and has recently been connected with the Flour Exchange in that city, as their buyer of Flour, which gives us every advantage of the largest buyer in New York, as well as Baltimore or Norfolk, enabling us to offer Flour in this market for the first time STRICTLY AT FIRST HANDS, and with only one profit to the retailer.

Our facilities for handling these goods being equal to any house South of New York, and buying them at "Hard Pan" prices, for cash, we are determined to handle them at as small margin as any house in these Northern cities.

Samples sent upon application and prices guaranteed.

Grandpa's Scar

One beautiful, sunny afternoon, a little rosy-cheeked boy of six years sat on the floor in his grandfather's library, quietly playing with his toys. Now and then he would glance up at his grandfather, as the old man tried to amuse him; but all at once, as a sudden ray of light rested on his forehead, the child's attention seemed fixed and his eyes beamed with the new discovery he had made. It was but a moment before he exclaimed, "What's that great scar on your forehead, grandpa?"

'Don't you know, Arthur!' said his grandfather.

'No, sir, but I want to know very much.'

'Very well, my little boy; gather up your toys, if you have finished playing, and by that time your father will be home; I think he can tell you best, for he knows all about it.'

Arthur was an obedient little child; so he went to work at once to do as he was bid; and just as he laid by the last toy, the door opened, and his father came in to supper.

With a quick bound, Arthur ran to him, and, all eagerness, said, "Oh! papa! tell me about that scar on grandpa's forehead, won't you? He says you know all about it.'

'Yes, my son, I will just as soon as I eat my supper, for it is quite a long story, and I want you to think of it and let it teach you the lessons it did me.'

The supper hour never seemed so long to Arthur before; but at last it was over, and he jumped into his father's lap, all attention for the history of the scar.

'So my boy wants to know how that scar came on grandpa's forehead? A great many years ago, when I was a little boy just your age, I was seated on the floor in this very room one day, busily engaged in putting together a handsome train of cars that had been given me as a present on my birthday. I had been cross and ill-natured all day, and of course thought every one else was so too; but, in fact, I was the only one, and in consequence made myself uncomfortable and unhappy. While in this mood, worrying and fretting over my cars because they wouldn't go together, just as I wanted to have them, grandpa asked me to bring him a book from the table. It was but a small favor to ask, but I did not wish to be disturbed, and therefore refused to do it. Grandpa always obliged me to obey him at once, and he told me if I did not do so now, he would punish me and make me put away my toys for the rest of the day. I was naughty and stubborn, and would not stop to do the errand. So grandpa punished me, and then stood by me as he made me pick up my toys. I was angry, and, as I had a quick temper, I did not stop to think what I was doing. A very wicked spirit filled my heart and thoughts as I hastily caught up one of the cars and threw it with all the strength I had, directly at grandpa's head. It struck him a sharp blow, cutting a deep gash in his forehead; and in a moment I saw the blood strickling down his face, and he cried out so sorrowfully, "Oh, my son, what have you done!" What grandpa thought I don't know, but I am sure the pain from the cut was not half as severe as the pain that filled his heart when he thought how wicked I had been. Grandma sent me for the doctor, and I went, almost fearing to return lest I should be told that I had killed my father. The doctor came and dressed the wound, but for many days grandpa had to go about with his head bandaged. As I looked at him and thought how I had struck him, oh! how much I would have given had I never raised my hand but I had, and there was the mark. One day. I went to him full of sorrow for the deed, and as I asked his forgiveness, I asked, too, if that dreadful scar would never go away. No, my son, said he: but when you look at it, remember what it was that made you strike me, how your wicked heart led you to do such an act; and when you feel your anger rise, stop long enough to think how easy it is, if we don't control our passions, to leave marks of our anger that can never be washed out."

"Now I hope little Arthur will remember this unfortunate experience of mine, so that he may never, never be guilty of a deed that will cause him as many sad hours as this scar of grandpa's has made for me."—New York Observer.

Rural and Domestic.

A correspondent of the Scientific American commends onions as a specific against epidemics—not as an esculent, but sliced and kept in a sick room, where they will absorb any atmospheric poison. They should be replaced by fresh ones every hour. It is noticed that in the room of a small pox patient they will blister and decompose very rapidly, but will prevent the spread of the disease. Their application has also proved effectual in the case of snake bites.

Croup can be cured in one minute, and the remedy is simply alum and sugar. The way to accomplish the deed is to take a knife or grater and shave off in small particles about a teaspoonful of alum; then mix it with about twice its quantity of sugar, to make it palatable, and administer it as quickly as possible. Almost instantaneous relief will follow.

LIGHT CORN BREAD.—Scald one quart of white corn meal with one quart of hot water; then add half a cup of molasses, one teaspoonful of salt and one quart of cold water. Stir well, and one quart of meal, half pint yeast. Let it rise in a warm place for ten hours, then stir well, put in the skillet and bake by the fireplace four hours. If you haven't hop yeast add half pint of salt-rising yeast before putting to bake.

NICE SOUP.—Bean soup is a dish that many people, and especially children, would relish if properly made. It requires about a half a pint of cooked beans for a quart of soup. Mash and boil until well diffused in the water, and then run through a cullender to take out the skins. Thicken with about a gill of wheat flour and a sprig of thyme if desired. Boil five minutes, and salt to the taste.

CHARCOAL FOR CATTLE.—Charcoal pulverized and mixed with water, is now highly recommended as an agent for relieving cattle suffering from any derangement of the stomach, such as bloat or hoven, etc. This should be remembered. There is no doubt of efficacy, if abundance of concurrent testimony can be relied upon.

PREPARATION OF BEES FOR WINTER.—As soon as bees have finished storing surplus honey, it should be removed and the colonies equalized and prepared for Winter as speedily as possible. Each colony should be made strong in both stores and numbers by the first of Winter, and the earlier in Autumn this is done the better it will be for the owner. Says a beekeeper: "Small swarms should be united so that each swarm will have from four to six quarts of bees. To unite them I prefer to fumigate them with puff ball smoke, then put them together and let them revive in the hive in which you wish them to remain. I prefer to remove all the queens except the one which I think is the best. An Italian queen may be introduced to such a swarm with perfect safety if all other queens have been removed."—Helping Hand.

SALT BRINE FOR LICE.—In answer to many inquiries for remedies for lice, the Rural World states that an application of brine, as strong as can be made, is a certain remedy. It will kill the bee outright, but not always the nits; hence a second or third application is required to be effectual. Hogs are greatly pestered with lice, and they should be destroyed. Watch the colts and calves carefully, and if you see any failing, look out for lice. A close inspection will reveal hundreds of them feeding upon the poor animal. An application on a warm day, of brine will bring great relief. A decoction of tobacco applied will also rid the animal of these pests. A thorough greasing is also a remedy. Don't let the poor animal suffer. These applications are as good for human beings as for brutes.

FATTENING CALVES.—A sensible practical farmer says that he has often noticed that calves would thrive better on milk that is not rich in butter than on what is commonly called very rich milk. The nutritive elements of milk reside chiefly in the cuisine. If you have a cow that gives particularly rich milk, and one that gives a quality poorer in butter, it is better to feed the calf on the milk of the latter. The calf will thrive better and you will get more butter from the first cow.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

An Unwholesome Season.

The closing days of winter and the early days of spring are very trying to the feeble and sensitive and are apt to affect unfavorably even the most robust and vigorous. Nothing can be more uncongenial to the nerves or more depressing to the spirits than damp, chilly winds, fogs and cold rains, and of such unwelcome visitors we have a superabundance at this season. Common prudence suggests, therefore, the propriety of fortifying the system against these insidious enemies of health and comfort, and the experience of more than a quarter of a century points to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as the all-sufficient sanitary safeguard under such untoward circumstances. An accession of vital strength and energy is what is required to meet and overcome the unhealthy elements now present in the atmosphere. This increase of vital power, so necessary to heal the extraordinary drafts which an inclement season makes upon the system and the consultation can be readily secured by taking from two to three doses of Hostetter's Bitters daily during the winter and spring months. The nature of this celebrated restorative is well known to the public. It is composed of an absolutely pure diffusive stimulant, medicated with the extracts and juices of the most effective tonic, alterative, anti-bilious and laxative roots and herbs known to medical science. To the combination of these excellent ingredients, in proportions suitable to the enfeeblement of debility, languid and nervous systems, the great conservative owes its efficiency as a preventive and curative. A course of it, commenced now, will prevent all danger of fever and ague, rheumatism, or other ailments arising from cold and damp peculiar to the spring months, and also prove a safeguard against the attacks of dyspepsia and liver complaint which so frequently occur at this period of the year.

LAND SALE NEAR TRINITY COLLEGE.

On the 12th day of August next, with a credit of six months, I will sell at auction upon the premises a tract of land containing three hundred acres, lying west of Trinity, and known as the Brown place. The land comes near the College Campus, has one hundred acres and wood land, dwelling house, barn, stable and all the usual buildings. This is very valuable property and offers a rare opportunity for a good investment to any man who wants a producing farm, or desires to live near the College. The dwelling is about three-fourths of a mile from the College Campus.

The Seed.

The sower sowed a seed—
And then he turned,
And plowed or reaped other work—
For the harvest was never known to shirk.—
And cared for what he had need
The night came with its dew
The seed still lifeless grew;
The dawn came, and the day,
And the farmer worked away
And there not a few
Hands on his work one day
Or speeding summer day—
He couldn't succeed him a perfect flower;
It had burst in bloom that very hour:
But I cannot say
Nor I know if the sun lost seed
Some fell on into the east,
Both day and night, will do their part,
And he sows who works with a trusting heart
Will find the flower at last.

Shelby District Conference.

The Shelby District Conference met in the Methodist Church in the town of Lincolnton, N. C., at 9 o'clock, A. M., July 23rd, 1874.

Dr. I. S. Burkhead, Presiding Elder of the District, presided.

B. F. Dixon was elected Secretary.

The attendance of ministers and laymen was unusually good.

Verbal reports upon the various interests of the church were made by the pastors of circuits and stations within the bounds of the District.—The spiritual condition of the church was reported as improving; the depression in monetary matters, from which the country has been suffering for some time past, has somewhat affected the financial interests of the church New houses of worship have been erected in several localities, and the church has been blessed in several of the charges with a gracious outpouring of the Divine Spirit.

Special committees were appointed on the following subjects, viz: "Our Conference Colleges," the "Diffusion of Religious Literature," Camp Meetings, and "The Widows and Orphans Benefit Society."

The sessions of the Conference were pleasant, and the discussions on the various interests of the church harmonious.

The various services held were interesting and instructive. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. S. Beard of Rutherfordton, and the Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist pulpits were filled by members of the Conference, and the preaching was practical and pointed, and was listened to with the closest attention and greatest pleasure by the large congregations that attended the preaching of the word.

A Sunday school mass-meeting was held in the Methodist Church on Sabbath afternoon, and notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, there was a large congregation present. Rev. Mr. Johnston, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Lincolnton, and several members of the Conference addressed the meeting.

The good people of Lincolnton will long be remembered by the members of the Conference for the elegant hospitality and kind treatment which were extended on the occasion.

The following reports were adopted and ordered to be published in the Raleigh Christian Advocate

REPORT ON CONFERENCE COLLEGES.

The special committee to whom was referred the subject of our institutions of learning, beg leave to submit the following:

Resolved 1st, That in Trinity College, Greensboro F. College and Davenport F. College we recognize the three leading educational enterprises of our church in North Carolina, and that these institutions claim equally our sympathy, co operation and support.

Resolved 2nd, That we look upon Davenport F. College as more especially ours, located as it is within our district, peculiarly adapted, in many respects, to meet the wants of our people, and that, as such, we ought to give it a more hearty and cordial support than any other District.

Whereas, we believe the interests of the Methodist Church in N. C. demand that we shall have at least one first class Male College.

And whereas, Trinity College has long been accepted and recognized as the only male College in N. C. under the control of the Conference.

And whereas this Institution has almost, through its entire history encountered more or less opposition under various flimsy pretenses which has greatly impeded its progress and hindered its prosperity.

And whereas we have failed to see any justifiable reason for this opposition, and believe that there exists none. Therefore Resolved, 1st. That we stand by and sustain Trinity College as an enterprise worthy of our Church and Conference, and that we will do all we can to promote its prosperity, both in means, patronage and influence.

Resolved 2, That we utterly disapprove and condemn all efforts either covert or open, on the part of disaffected parties, by aspersions and innuendoes, to disparage the institution and thereby divert both patronage and resources to other institutions beyond our bounds which we are under no obligation to sustain.

Resolved, 3, That it is the duty of every person, officially connected with Trinity College, who cannot heartily sustain the institution, to dissolve that connection.

(Signed) W. M. Robby.
Samuel Leard.
L. J. Hoyle.

REPORT ON BENEFIT SOCIETY.

The Committee to whom was referred the papers in reference to "The Widows and Orphans Benefit Society of the N. C. Conference," have matured the points of interest presented in the same, and do most heartily endorse the plan and purpose of said society, and recommend the co-operation of this District Conference in carrying out the noble ends therein proposed.

The Committee would therefore propose for adoption the following Resolution:

Resolved That each Pastor select the name of some proper person in his pastoral charge and forward the same as a suitable corresponding secretary to co-operate with T. C. Williams, the financial Sec. at Warrenton, N. C.

(Signed) John W. North, Chm.

The following persons were elected Delegates to the next annual Conference: Capt M. V. Moore, of Lenoir; M. O. Sherrill, of Newton; Dr. J. W. Tracy, of Kings Mountain, and L. J. Hoyle, of South Fork.

B. F. Dixon and J. A. Claywell, Alternates.

Shelby was selected as the place for holding the next District Conference.

The following resolution were unanimously adopted:

Resolved 1st, That the thanks of this body are due and are hereby tendered to the citizens of Lincolnton for the bounteous and elegant hospitality extended to the members of the conference in throwing open their doors for our entertainment.

2nd, That our thanks be tendered to the Pastors of the Presbyterian and Baptist churches for the use of their pulpits during our Session—also to those Railroad officials on whose roads delegates traveled for half fare.

B. F. Dixon.

REPORT ON BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

Your committee on the diffusion of Religious Literature submit the following report.

The diffusion of religious knowledge is fraught with vital importance. In proportion to the extent of religious knowledge will be the vigor of faith, the cheerfulness of hope, the ardor of love, the depth of reverence and the steadiness of obedience.

The fruitful tree of piety is planted in, and draws its nourishment from, the soil of religious knowedge. Good books put in circulation are perpetual and shining lights, guiding the wayward steps of a strayed world back to God. The religious press is a lever greater than that of Archimedes, lifting the world from the dark valleys of ignorance and oppressive superstition, up into the healthy and luminous plains of Christian civilization. In view of the facts we recommend that our books and periodicals be broadly circulated over the land.

The "Raleigh Christian Advocate," so ably edited and successfully conducted by Rev. J. B. Bobbitt, claims our first and chief attention. It is North Carolinian in locality, large and beautiful in typography, Methodistic in doctrinal matters, cheap in price, full of choice and instructive articles. It keeps abreast with the first class papers of its kind in diffusing intelligence, wholesome literature, and the instruction needed by our people in order to be informed on all religious movements of the age. Therefore Resolved, That we cordially commend the "Raleigh Christian Advocate" to all our people and that we make renewed efforts to put a copy in every Methodist family in our charges.

Your committee also call special attention to our Nashville publications. These books are our standard works and ought to be widely circulated. We are gratified to learn, that about 56 of our preachers have redeemed the Conference promise to purchase $100,00 worth of these books. The circulation of our books has vastly increased during the last year in our bounds. This is a noble and useful work and enables the preachers to largely augment their usefulness and confer lasting benefits on the purchasers. We recommend the "Nashville Advocate" and the Sunday School papers, as being first class papers of their kind and deserve to be extensively circulated among our people. We also recommend a sermon just published by Rev. Dr. Burkhead, our Presiding Elder. This sermon is quite timely, and is a clear and able discourse on the importance and moral obligation of our people to provide a competent support for the Itinerant ministers who spend their all in serving them. We trust the preachers, will procure this sermon and scatter it broadcast among the people We are satisfied it will do a great deal of good in enlightening them on this important subject.

(Signed) H. T. Hudson, Ch'mn.

Reagan, Elder; Weaverville, Asheville circuit, has had 2 regular appointments, has preached 25 sermons, delivered 4 Sunday school lectures, organized 2 Sunday schools, held 2 prayer meetings, baptized 40 persons, received 20 members into the church, is President of Weaverville College—desires the Conference great success.

Jas. B. Ballard, Elder; Troy, Pee Dee Circuit, usually has 3 appointments, cannot preach regularly on account of age and infirmity.

Miles P. Owen, Elder; Clinton, Clinton circuit, has had 2 regular appointments, preached 44 sermons, delivered 1 Sunday school lecture, received 7 members into the church, baptized 2 persons, filled circuit work 3 months of the year.

Wilson Atwater, Elder; Snipes Store, C. & Haw River circuit, has had 2 regular appointments, is very old and cannot preach much—still loves to do what he can, is cheerful and confident in Christ.

2 P. M.—The Conference met pursuant to adjournment. R. L. Abernethy in the chair. Divine services were had by P. H. Joyner. The minutes were read and approved.

On motion, the special order was postponed for half an hour.

A discussion was had as to the status of our members. P. H. Joyner, B. York and others made prudent and valuable suggestions, all tending to a closer union of Pastors and itinerants. All agree that the Discipline gives explicit instruction for our conduct as Local Ministers, and ought to be observed by our members.

Rev. Geo. B. Wetmore and Rev. P. H. Dalton, visitors, were formally introduced to the Conference..

Turner M. Jones, D. D., and F. B. Andrews reported by letter.

The order of business for the election of officers was announced, and the annual election was held, resulting as follows:

P. H. Joyner, Pres.

R. L. Abernethy, J. B. Ballard, Solomon Pool, } Vice Pres.

L. Branson, Sec. and Treas.

On motion of P. H. Joyner it was resolved that each local preacher be requested to take up a collection annually in each congregation for the benefit of destitute Local Ministers and their families.

L. Branson moved that the chair appoint a committee of three on the State of the Conference. Carried. L. Branson, B. York, S. Pool, Committee.

On motion, S. Pool, B. York and S. D. Franklin were appointed a Committee on Education.

On motion, the Conference adjourned to 9 o'clock to-morrow.

Benediction by R. L. Abernethy.

The Committee on Divine Services announced R. L. Abernethy to preach at night.

Saturday, 9 A. M.

The Conference met pursuant to adjournment. R. L. Abernethy in the chair. Rev. Geo. B. Wetmore of the Episcopal Church opened with divine services. Minutes were read and approved.

Moved by R. H. Whitaker to strike out, amend P. H. Joyner's resolution of yesterday; passed so as to read,

Resolved, That each Local preacher be requested to take up a collection annually in each congregation for the benefit of the Local Conference, as indicated in the 4th Article of our Constitution.

The Treasurer's report was presented, and on motion of P. H. Joyner was approved.

A general discussion was entered into in reference to plans of increased usefulness. All were agreed as to the necessity of a high degree of attainment, the essential missionary character of Local men, and the importance of harmonious action with the regular pastors.

On motion the Conference adjourned to 2 P. M.

R. H. Whitaker delivered an effective temperance address, followed by Rev. Geo. B. Wetmore, President of State Council of Friends of Temperance.

P. H. Joyner was announced to preach at night.

2 P. M. Saturday.

The Conference re assembled at the hour appointed. Thos. Reagan opened the session with reading and prayer. Minutes were read and approved.

On motion, it was resolved that the newly elected officers be installed at the last business meeting of each Conference.

Dugan C. Johnson, of the N. C. Conference, was introduced to the Conference, and made a feeling address to the members.

The Conference resumed the discussion of plans for increased usefulness.

R. L. Abernethy moved that a committee of three be appointed to recommend a course of study to the Quarterly Conferences, to apply to applicants for license. Carried. Committee, R. L. Abernethy, B. York, Solomon Lea.

On motion, P. H. Joyner, Solomon Pool and L. Branson were appointed to draw up a memorial on the subject of ministers returned from the itinerancy to the localey, said memorial to be presented at the annual meeting of 1875.

Report on Temperance presented and adopted as follows:

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE.

The Committee on Temperance beg leave to report the following:

The evils of intemperance are so numerous, and so flagrantly opposed to Christianity, we deem it hardly necessary for us to make any argument against it; but as ministers of the cause of Christ it does become our duty to denounce sin in all its forms, and to make use of every legitimate means to drive it from the world.—We therefore offer the following resolutions for the consideration and action of the Conference:

Resolved, That in the liquor traffic we recognize a foe to Christ, and that as Local Ministers of the M. E. Church, South, in North Carolina, in Conference assembled, we do covenant with each other to use our best endeavors to put it down.

Resolved, That we believe moderate drinking to be the nursery of drunkenness, and consequently a sin; therefore we would have our preachers warn their congregations against it, and teach them that the only safety consists in totally abstaining from the use of all intoxicating beverages.

Resolved, That we recognize with pleasure and thankfulness the valuable aid which the various Temperance orders of the land have afforded the church and ministry in their warfare against the sin of intemperance, and do heartily recommend that our preachers be encouraged to co-operate with these orders wherever and whenever they can.

Resolved, That we do heartily and cordially endorse the action of the recent General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, in making it an actionable offense against the church for members to "make, buy, sell or use intoxicating liquors as a beverage," and that we will, to the extent of our ability, sustain that action.

S. D. Franklin, R. H. Whitaker, } Com

Committee on State of the Conference reported, which was adopted as follows:

The Committee on State of the Conference report the interest increasing from year to year. Wherever the itinerants have given careful attention to our operations, full sympathy and cordial co-operation have been manifested by them.

Many of our members have been excited to more than double energy in the great missionary work, and indications are plain that the happiest results will be witnessed in a few years from the convocations and labors of this Conference.

We respectfully recommend the following:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to wait on Bishop Marvin at the next meeting of our Annual Conference, and lay before the Conference, through him, a succinct statement of our operations, at the same time signifying a willingness to receive such advice and co-operation as may be conducive to the prosperity of the Local Conference, and the highest development of its individual members.

B. York, Solomon Pool, L. Branson, } Com.

L. Branson, R. H. Whitaker and Solomon Pool were appointed a committee.

(To be Concluded.)

Charlotte District Conference.

This Conference convened in this place, on the 23rd inst., and was opened with interesting religious services, conducted by the Presiding Elder, Rev. Jessie T. Nelson. Rev. M. V. Sherrill of Monroe Station, preached the opening sermon on the evening previous. Nearly 50 members of the Conference were in attendance. J. P. Simpson, was reelected Secretary, and Rev. W. S. Rone, Assistant.

The reports from the several charges were interesting and edifying, and represented the church (generally) in the District, in a healthy spiritual condition, and giving evidence of a cheering religious progress.

The missionary spirit was largely prevalent among both Preachers and Laymen; and the subject was well considered, and earnestly advocated. More interest than formerly, was felt and manifested in the success of missions.

The Sunday School was reported increasingly prosperous in almost every charge. There has been great improvement in the mode of conducting them, and a large accession from the elder members of our Church, to the working force of that great and good cause.

The financial exhibit of the District, shows some improvement in the Salaries of the Pastors, and in the adoption and practical working of some more effective measures to assure their payment. Contributions to church purposes and for Parsonages have been encouragingly liberal. Some of our charges have paid one half and one charge, ¾ of their assessments. This is encouraging.

The subject of education generally, was under the direction of an able committee, which reported a large deficiency, an almost criminal neglect among our people on that question. There are but few schools in the District, kept and maintained by Methodist teachers, while there are schools of other Denominations, largely supported by the patronage of our people.

The report of the committee on Periodicals, was well worded, and evinced purpose and spirit, respecting our church papers, especially our own, the Raleigh Christian Advocate; concerning which the following resolution was unanimously passed:

Resolved, That while we rejoice in the present prosperity of the Raleigh Christian Advocate, we will continue to exert ourselves in its behalf, by bringing it to the notice and urging its claims upon every family in our several charges.

The business of the paper was carefully looked after by special appointment of the Conference.

The services and sessions of the Conference, were eminently cordial harmonious and spiritual. The morning prayer meeting from 8 to 9 o'clock was a most happy prelude to the after services of the day—was well attended and spiritually profitable.

The Pulpit was vigorous, spiritual and doctrinal; more than usually, rich in experimental preaching, and promotive of a fervent spirituality. It was decidedly Methodistic, and left many good impressions among the people. Never before have we heard so much spoken by ministers and Laymen, of the spiritual power of the preaching at a District Conference.

Our Presiding Elder, Rev. Jessie S. Nelson, won the good opinion and elicited the kind regards and affection of the people generally, particularly of his colaborers and the Lay Delegates. His urbane manners, and zeal and devotion to his master's work, and the interest of our church, made him the efficient, acceptable and successful conductor of our District Conference.

The people of Mount Pleasant were kind and hospitable in their entertainment of the Conference. Our Lutheran brethren permitted us the use of their beautiful house of worship on Sunday, and showed their appreciation of our ministers by waiting upon two services conducted by Revs Betts and Sherrill.

Taken as a whole, our Charlotte District Conference, is improving every way. It attracts a large public attention, and provokes much of zeal and devotion on the part of our membership. A more affectionate, united, laborious and effective fraternity of ministers, we have never mingled with. Brotherly love prevails sweetly and universally.

Our closing services on Sunday night among the Preachers, after the congregation had retired, were extraordinary. There was great joy and assured peace present with God's ministers, as several, with great fervor narrated their experiences of the Divine Presence at the District Conference. Some of us will not soon, I opine, forget our parting scene. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

Jas. P. Simpson, Sec'y.

Posthumous Influence.

A SERMON BY BISHOP SIMPSON.

"And by it he, being dead, yet speaketh."—Heb. xi, 4.

Abel tells us it is man's duty to do right, be the consequences what they may. Possibly on some former occasion Cain may have remonstrated with Abel against his offering, against his mode of worship, making some threat possibly if he should repeat that form of worship; for it is strnge that doing right reproves the doing wrong, Why men should hate a man who does right seems strnge, but so it is. A right deed shames the wrong; and a true man shames the false; and false men hate the right. Men will not come to the light, but they hate the light as long as they walk in darkness. Hence, the history all through the world. The martyr spirits were hurried out of the world; the testifying men were the objects of contempt. Christ himself, with all the loveliness of heavon's own glory infused within him and around him, was an object of human hatred. "He came unto his own, and his own received him not." They hated him. And, said he to his disciples, "If they have hated me, they will hate you also." We must bear persecution. "All that live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution." But though the world may rage, it is manly to do right; to obey God if the world be in arms, if we lose our position, our bread, our friends, our all. It is our duty to stand by the word of God. Abel stood there-stood there humbly faithfully. Cain was the elder brother, and Cain was angry when Abel's sacrifice was accepted. God saw his anger, and yet expostulated with him: "If thou doest well, thou shalt be accepted. You have a lamb. Sin, or a sin-offering, as it may be read, lies at the door. You have the lamb; bring its blood and trust in the coming Saviour and all shall be right. You are the first-born; your brother is subject to you. Unto you shall be his desire, and you shall rule over him. You have every attribute of excellence; add to it." But Cain was angry. Not there at the altar did he slay his brother, in the presence of God, but walking in the field, as though God saw him not, he rose up against his brother and slew him, and then said, as if to hide the crime, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Now, even that shed blood tells us it is not only manly to do right, but it is safe to do right. What is life here compared with life above? Suppose life does close a few days earlier does not the life above more than compensate? Cures Abel now, fancy you, that he left earth a few days earlier than disease, or accident, or age would have carried him away? Was he sad when shining in the courts of glory that he left a world cursed with thorns and thistles? It is not so much to live long as to live well; not so much to spend many days as to spend the days we have aright; not so much to live for the fame and wealth and applause of this world as to live for God's favor and to dwell in the light of God's countenance; not so much to step on earth's highest points as to be able to step to the platform of glory.

And now, from the consideration of this subject, we are prepared to say that true success, true glory, can only be found in working in harmony with God's commands. God has purposes, on earth; eternal wisdom has its plans. Those purposes will be consummated; Men may delay them, but never defeat them. All the powers of darkness combined cannot defeat Jehovah's plans. The enemy may mar, destroy the earthly Eden, but he cannot soil with his footsteps the heavenly Eden. God will carry out his purposes. Man succeeds when he puts himself in harmony with God's plans. Is it not so with this world of ours? Man triumphs when in harmony with the laws God has made. The man may go into yonder woods and try to cleave that tree. He can do it only when he works along with the structure God has given the tree. When he plies his mechanical means so as to divide the tree as God has given its growth, then he triumphs easily. Man erects his machinery, but his power is as God gives that fall of water; he works in harmony with it, and his machinery in motion, he prepares his engine, and that evaporized steam propels the machinery. Man rises in nature just as he takes hold of God's laws. Man calls them Nature's laws. Nature! What is nature? God manifesting himself on the material side; God writing his will on creation. I turn my eyes upward, and these great globes, with all their mighty powers, are but if I may use the phrase with reverence-the solidification of God's thoughts.

Now, when man can grasp God's thoughts and work in harmony with them, then he performs his choicest work. Yonder sunbeams have been carrying light and power from creation's birth. Yonder sea-weed contained its iodine, but not until man found God's thoughts and took the iodine from the sea weed, and threw its vapor over the plate and caught the sunbeams, did the sun become for man the great artist, penciling the images of his friends, giving him landscapes and scenes of beauty. Now, as man in the material world succeeds just as he works in harmony with God's law, so in the intellectual world he must follow the laws of thought; in the moral world he must follow the laws of morality; and as man combines himself with God's laws, follows out God's purposes, he has success; becomes what God calls him, a co-worker-a worker together with God. God lays down the laws. God, if I may use the phrase, furnishes the thread, and lets man put in the filling, weave up the figures, fix the patterns; but he must do it in harmony with God's laws.

Now, the man who studies what is God's will, and joins himself to that will, will be, first, the successful worker, and then will be the eternal worker. He will be the successful worker, for he has all the advantages of God's power; and if I can work with God, my work will seem to have the elements of omnipotence. Yonder moon raises the tides of the sea; but there is this observable, that when the moon draws in the same line with the sun, whether at new or full moon, the tide is always higher than when it draws at right angles with the sun. The combination of forces in the same line gives a much higher result. And so man, co-operating with God, raises his stronth, and the tidal wave rushes over the lands around him.

Then, as I have said, he is the eternal worker, for God's work is eternal. God never works for to-day. His plans run on and on. The web he weaves is from everlasting to everlasting. It is to stand in the sight of angels and men, and if I can fill in a part of that web, be it ever so insignificant, that will stand to all eternity. It stands as part of God's purpose; it works into God's plans; and he who works for God, who works with God, works for eternity; he paints that which never shall be lost. And oh! this is one of the grand comforting thoughts to us. While on earth we may do something for eternity. Abel thought very little of what he was doing. He had no idea of the mass of humanity that should come; of the great triumphs to be wrought in this world. He stood simply in God's plans; in God's ways; and yet he lives: his name is known in every language: it is uttered by the lips of evey child where the name of Christ is known; and when this world shall be filled with its multitudes of thousands of millions of human beings, when Christ shall reign supreme, there is not a land, there is not a language, there is not a tongue that shall not pronounce the name of Abel. He joined himself with God's plans, and though the ages have passed, his name is not lost.

Is that strange? God has so arranged the universe that there is no force ever lost; there is no matter ever lost. It changes form; it never vanishes wholly. It may vanish from our sight, we may consume the wood, but the flame, the vaporized gas, the ashes, are there; they have all the elements of the wood, they remain. Water may be evaporated; unseen it goes off all around us, but it gathers yonder in clouds, comes down to earth, forms the river, runs to the sea, and returns mysteriously back again to the clouds, elevated to form a perpetual motion. Man cannot make the perpetual motion; God does. He lifts the ocean in the little interstices of air, then combines it with the clouds, and then sends it down again. So there is a change of the countenance of the matter. And we can combine, can alter the form, but no matter is lost. The earth has all the matter it had when God gave it form. And if matter cannot be lost, should thought be lost? thought, far more valuable than matter; thought, that gives man his supremacy; ideas, that govern the world, that mould nations, that form kingdoms, that overthrow empires, that burst manacles, that change savages into civilized beings, and civilized beings into saints can such ideas be lost? can thoughts perish?

Ah, the thought that leaps out of the bosom of any being, the new thought, the grand thought, has, like its origin, immortality. It comes as from the breath of God, and it is to go on with its power permeating the universe and dominating matter, and it will live. You may kill the human form-you cannot crush the human thought. You may chain the body—you cannot chain the mind; and the thought is to go on; it cannot be lost. No thought of purity, or virtue, or truth, that God gives us to set afloat in this world, can ever perish. And so of the words we speak: we may utter them and they are gone. We may never think of them again; but this universe is a vast atmosphere of waves, and they run on and on and, on and stop and knock at the door, the ear, leaving the human heart to take it in, and on again and on; and if there be a thought worthy to be reiterated, another voice takes it and sends it on. And it is thus that what is vile drops as into the ocean to be buried out of sight, and yet not lost; for the vile has made a stain that, save by the blood of Christ, can never be washed away; but the pure and the true lives on until its consummation finds its home with the purified in heaven. Now, this is the eternity of working. We work on with our thought, and the thought cannot die. We set influences at work that cannot fail. Do we not see that in this world? The living things are in connection with the broad, the grand things. Men may build up selfish castles; they have no immortality. A man may build himself a costly home and inhabit it; he may be the rich man dressed, as in the parable, in fine linen, and fare sumptuously every day, and his friends may gather around him, but his castle does not live as his abode, and his raiment is gone, and at his table another sits and there is desolation around his hearth; there is no life in simply the man's castle or his revenue. Where did the kings of the world live? Where are their abodes? Go hunt for their palaces and their castles, and they are gone, stone mouldering upon stone, until all have been gnawed and crumbled by the tooth of time.

The Handel Festival, just ended, at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, England, is reported to be the most successful celebration yet held.

The famous jewels and relics of the Cathedral of Monza are shortly to be exhibited at Milan. These interesting specimens of goldsmith's work, some of the sixth century, consist of the famed iron crown of the Dombards, gift of Pope Gregory the Great to Queen Theolinda, a kind of carcanet or jointed circlet of gold, loaded with precious stones, and the santo chiodo, or nail of the cross, whence it derives its name, hammered into a thin fillet of the iron within; her cup of gold, said to be hollowed out of a single sapphire (probably glass, as the emerald of the sacro catino of Genoa); her comb of gold filagree and emeralds, and her fan, or flabellum, of painted leather, the handle encrusted with jewels; the Gregorian present of the Gospels enclosed in a rich box ornamented with precious stones, and the cover of an Evangeliary with similar decoration; her pectoral cross of rock crystal, used at the coronation of the Emperor of Germany; and her celebrated chioccio, the hen and seven chickens of gold, with ruby eyes, piking up corn, on a kind of tray or plateau, said by some to bear a symbolic signification, by others to be simply a table ornament. Among the treasures are also the cross of King Berengor; and a silver monstrance resplendent with diamonds and other precious stones.

Base Ball.—The Philadelphia Telegraph offers some judicious counsels to young men about Base Ball and other Athletic games:—"If Base Ball could be kept the innocent pastime it was ten years ago, it should have our support but—seeing it as it is, the chosen summer game of those who spend their winters in the tavern and round the card table, we do not mince words in characterizing it. The frequenters of the professional matches—and the whole interest of the game has gradually centred into contests of this character—are found to be regular frequenters. It is not a question of occasional and needful relaxation, but of pernicious time wasting habit. Young men there grow up into the way of idleness—and worse. They lose business situations through the infatuation, and remain out of them through the same cause, for no youth can keep "up" in the game and at the same time give satisfaction to even the most indulgent employer. And the same general view attaches to all perversions of physical exercise."

RALEIGH, N. C. AUGUST 12, 1874.

At Home.

After an absence of a few weeks we are again at our post. We were called home, sooner than we expected, to look after some business matters connected with the office. Our visit to the Springs was pleasant, and, we believe, beneficial to our health. We shall ever have pleasant recollections of our trip in the West. The brethren were kind and contributed much to our pleasure. We added many new names to our list of subscribers, and were everywhere assured by the people of their sympathy and warm support of the Advocate.

To him who had the entire charge and control of our office during our absence, we extend our thanks and hearty congratulations for his skill and efficiency in the conduct of the paper.

The Week of Prayer.

We earnestly hope the week of prayer appointed by our Bishops to commence Friday, August 21st, will be generally observed by our preachers and people. The first day is set apart as a day of fasting and prayer for revivals of religion throughout the church, to be followed on Saturday and the succeeding week by appropriate services in all the churches.—It is an impressive thought to contemplate the whole church at prayer at the same time, for the prosperity of our Zion and for the conversion of souls. Oh, that the church may be quickened and receive a fresh baptism of the Spirit from on high!

A LIBERAL PROPOSITION.—We will send the Advocate to any address, when ordered by one agents, to be paid for at Conference. This proposition is made in view of the great scarcity of money, and to give those who may desire the paper now, an opportunity to subscribe for it and settle at Conference. Will our preachers bear this in mind and call the attention of the people to this liberal offer?

We return thanks to many of our brethren for handsome clubs of subscribers. We have never known more unanimity manifested among our preachers and influential laymen in support of the paper than at present. Its circulation is rapidly increasing, and its prospects are brightening daily.

THE SOUTHERN METHODIST CHURCH. This Church numbers 676,000 members. In South America it has no mission. In China it employs two missionaries—Rev. Jas. W. Lambeth and Rev. Young J. Allen, and their wives—three native preachers, and two Bible women. It has two missionaries in Mexico, and an Indian Mission Conference numbering seventeen traveling and seventy three local preachers, with a membership of 4,613. In all the wide field of foreign missions proper, it has but three white men representing her—Lambeth and Allen in China, and Daves in Mexico.

We have received a copy of a beautiful little sheet published by Tryon Street Church in Charlotte. It is to be published monthly, and edited by Rev. P. J. Carraway, for gratuitous distribution among his people. It is designed as a medium of communication between the pastor and his flock.

We had the pleasure of a visit last week from our excellent brother, Prof. O. W. Carr, of Trinity College. He informs us that the prospects for the Fall term are highly gratifying.

We learn from Rev. S. V. Hoyle of the Warrenton Circuit that the new Methodist Church at Macon will be dedicated to Divine Worship, on the fifth Sunday in this month.

We are pleased to learn that the fall term of Greensboro' Female College has opened with a large number of students, and that the number is daily increasing.

Rev. A. W. Mangum, in charge of Edenton Street Church, left the city last week to enjoy a short vacation at the Catawba Springs.

We hear of revivals in many portions of our work. The brethren will bear in mind that tidings from these meetings are always gladly received.

The Western Virginia Annual Conference of the Church, South, will be held at Phillipi, Barbour county, Sept. 5. Bishop Doggett will preside.

The Protestant Methodists have purchased a tract in Ocean county, N. J., for a second Ocean Grove.

The General Conference of the colored M. E. Church, met in Louisville, Ky., on the 5th day of August.

Rev. A. H. Redford Again.

The Nashville Advocate of the first instant contains a five column article from Dr. Redford in defense of his unfortunate policy in the management of our Publishing House. The article is largely made up of innendoes and assertions, ignoring arguments and facts. As he failed to disprove the statements in our article of July the 15th, or to invalidate the points there in established, there is scarcely any need for a reply. We submit, however, the following:

1st. We established the fact beyond doubt that our city booksellers could, according to Dr. Redford's catalogue, buy on publications from Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York in quantities amounting to less than $100 at 33⅓ off, with a saving of time in transportation and freight, while at Nashville only 25 per cent was allowed on bills of that amount.

2nd. We established by inference, and do now affirm it to be true, that our preachers who sell books, can buy our own publications in Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York in bills less than $100 at 33⅓ off, with a saving of time in transportation and freight, while Dr. Redford allows them only 25 per cent off on bills of that amount.

3rd. We contended then, and with emphasis do now reiterate, that inasmuch as the Publishing House is the property of the Southern Methodist Church, and our preachers are the willing, laborious agents in sustaining and circulating its books, that they are entitled to, and should have, the very best per cent allowed any class of buyers.

4. We claimed, and still see no reason to change our opinion, that it is unreasonable to require our preachers upon meagre salaries at best, to purchase $500 worth of books in order to get 40 per cent discount.

To these several points Dr. Redford does not undertake a reply, nor does he attempt to show that the points are not well taken. We hold, therefore, that our opinions are well founded, and points well sustained, until something is brought forward to convince us to the contrary.

5. In regard to the price of the Advocate we gave it as our opinion, sustained by some occupying the highest official positions in the church, and of extensive acquaintance with editorial and newspaper life, that the Nashville Advocate could not be published for less than $2.50 a year to yield a fair profit. Dr. Redford brings forward no evidence to prove that we are incorrect in this opinion. He contents himself with a simple assertion, but adduces no proof.

6th. We made a calculation of the cost of running the Nashville Advocate separate and distinct from the Publishing House, based upon the rule obtaining among printers and publishers generally. Dr. Redford says they are not correct. That composition, paper, press work, ink, rents, &c., do not cost as much as our figures indicate, but he fails to state wherein they are incorrect. To assert that composition does not cost $162.50 per week is no proof that it does not cost $161.50. To say that paper does not cost 14 cents per lb. is no evidence that it does not cost 13 cents per lb. And so of the other items of expense. The inference then, to every intelligent unbiased reader is, that our estimate of the expenses of running a paper the size of the Advocate, so nearly approximates the actual cost that the Doctor is unwilling to compare figures. We hold, therefore, that our figures are substantially correct, unless our brother Redford, by an itemized exhibit, shows to the contrary. When this is done, we will then be prepared to accept his assertion, and will make haste to give him credit for possessing superior advantages and facilities to command cheap union printers, cheap pressmen, for buying cheap paper, cheap ink, &c.

BUT THE WONDER WILL STILL BE THAT HE DOES NOT APPLY THE SAME RULE AND USE THE SAME SKILL IN GETTING OUT OUR HYMN BOOKS, DISCIPLINES, AND OTHER BOOKS OF OUR PUBLISHING HOUSE.

Try it again, Doctor! You must come to figures. We want an itemized statement. It may be that we have given you margin enough to take up the surplus we threw in for good measure.

7th. The Doctor becomes generous. He proposes to increase the indebtedness of the Publishing House by getting out our paper for the small sum of $1.20. This is kind, but we are unwilling that our Publishing House should increase its liabilities and incur a still greater debt, to do us a favor. We think the labors and responsibilities of the agent are already as much as he can, with safety to the Publishing House and justice to himself, assume. However, if the Doctor will set up an individual enterprise, we will lose no time in closing the bargain. We would suggest also that it might be well if the Doctor would extend his favors to Drs. Bennet of the Richmond Advocate, Kennedy of the Southern Advocate, McAnally of the St. Louis Advocate, Johnson of the Western Methodist, Price of the Holston Methodist, Parker of the New Orleans Advocate, and the rest of the large family of Advocates and Southern Methodist papers. We doubt not but that some of our Northern brethren would be glad to make a similar arrangement. Suppose Doctor, you extend your generosity to Nelson & Phillips, agents of the Northern Methodist Book Concern, who publishes the New York Christian Advocate. This is one of the oldest religious journals in this country. It is about the size of the Nashville Advocate. They have a circulation of 12,000, and yet these gentlemen of undoubted business capacity find it necessary, with all their facilities for cheap labor, cheap paper, presses, inks, type, &c., to put the subscription price of that paper at $2.50 a year, while Dr. Redford, with 10,000 or 11,000 subscribers, only charges $2.00 for the Nashville Advocate. Then there is the New York Methodist, published by Dr. Crooks—a paper much smaller than the Nashville Advocate, with a circulation of about 25,000—finds it necessary to put its subscription price at $3.00 a year. We have no doubt but that these brethren would like to make a cheaper arrangement for the publication of their excellent papers. Give them a chance Doctor,—you certainly have facilities for getting out cheap papers unknown to publishers, North or South, if you can do what you propose. But still the great surprise of everybody is that an establishment possessing such facilities for cheap work cannot publish our books at such figures as will enable him to compete with other houses.

8. The Doctor places great stress upon a closing remark in a former article that we conscientiously believed good would be the result of the controversy which he chooses to perpetuate. It may be that we are mistaken about the matter. "Our city booksellers," however, think otherwise, as do thousands of others. Already the Doctor has notified them that hereafter they will be allowed 40 per cent on all bills of general catalogue, and 20 per cent on Sunday school publications, which is 15 per cent better than they had received on bills from us prior to the inauguration of "this painful controversy." One brother has been so fortunate as to have placed to his credit $11.02 on a bill of books purchased of Dr. Redford over six months ago, and 20 per cent on Sunday school books included in the same bill. Now, if the Doctor will let our preachers have our books at 40 per cent off we shall be satisfied, but if he cannot afford this, then let them buy where they can get the best terms and we shall be content.

The Doctor persists in quoting from private letters, and again has violated the rules of propriety and good taste. It always betrays a weak cause when a person engaged in a controversy appeals to others to help him out of the difficulty. When a person is fully satisfied that he is pursuing the right, it matters but little to him whether others approve or disapprove of his course. We are almost daily in receipt of letters of approval relative to the controversy. Letters from every portion of the State, and some from other States, congratulating us in espousing the cause of the Publishing House. We thank these brethren for kind words, but we cannot introduce into this controversy any extract from a private letter. Our friends can speak for themselves through the columns of the Advocate, if they see proper to do so, but we will not force the expression of their views upon our readers. We close this brief article by reaffirming our loyalty to the Publishing House. The controversy is not with the Publishing House, but with Dr. Redford as Book Agent, notwithstanding his statement to the contrary. It is a fact well known that prejudice exists in the minds of many in North Carolina and other States touching the unfortunate policy of Dr. Redford in the management of our Book Concern. They do not understand why books are so high and the paper so cheap. If he can publish a cheap paper, why not cheap books? The Doctor now has a good opportunity to explain, and we should be glad if he could do this to the full satisfaction of all concerned. Towards Dr. Redford we entertain the kindest personal feelings. We differ with him as book agent and not on personal grounds, and it is wholly gratuitous on his part to attempt to create the impression that we are unfriendly to the Publishing House, simply because we point out what we conceive to be defects in the policy which he has adopted in its management.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, added the following clause to the Discipline, page 145, chapter 9, section 1, "Of the Support of the Ministry:"

"4. Each member of the Church is expected to pay according to his or her several ability for the support of the ministry, and the Stewards of each Circuit or Station shall determine whether payments are to be weekly, monthly, quarterly, during the year. They shall then ascertain how much each member is able and willing to pay in the installments fixed by the Stewards, and whatever amount each member agrees to pay, he or she shall be under solemn obligation to pay, and can only be released from this obligation by order of the Stewards or by a vote of the Church Conference, for good cause shown."

This is a good rule and should be strictly enforced.

Any one having in possession letters written by the late Rev. Dr Reid, deceased, or any interesting facts concerning him, will confer a special favor, by forwarding the same immediately to the subscriber.

Heal the Breach.

In times of political excitement such as the people of our State have just passed through, the struggles of partisans are apt to engender heart-burnings and jealousies, ill-feeling and personal enmities. American politics touches individual interests so nearly, that every one regards his politics as a personal thing, and enforces his political views as of equal importance with, if not greater than any other, even the most serious, notions he entertains. But few Americans can dismiss the policy of their respective parties, or urge the claims of their party candidates, calmly and dispassionately and without resorting to harsh and uncharitable words and down right abuse. Their zeal carries them beyond the bounds of discretion to the saying and doing of things which, when calmly reflected upon, are the source of chagrin and regret. There is a fascination clinging to political strife which attracts all Americans and especially the young and ardent-tempered. The torch lights, grand mass meetings, barbecues, warm speeches and trial of party strength all beget an enthusiasm which but few persons entirely escape, and which leads to hot words and action and often to the dissolution of cordial and dear relations of friendship.

It is to be regretted that excitement runs so high at election times, and that the triumph of a party is accomplished at the expense of so much prejudice and ill-feeling. Calm reason has but little to do with the selection of men to fill our offices but he is most usually successful who, by means, fair or foul, inflames party spirit and goads prejudice farthest.

It is too late now to moralize at length upon the abuses of suffrage and to warn our people against permitting themselves to be carried too far in their zeal; but it is not too late to counsel the return of quiet and peace and good feeling—to implore them to lay aside the arms of their warfare and to heal the breaches of personal friendships that may have been caused by the late conflict on the political arena. Cherished opinions of all kinds are sacred and one is right in adhering conscientiously to, and endeavoring to advance them, but common charity demands that the opinions of others, conscientiously entertained, be respected as well. We may disagree with, but should not show impatience or anger towards those who refuse to coincide with our views. If, then, ill-feelings have resulted from the contest in which all were, more or less, interested, let them be put aside, now that the conflict has ended. Let the victors bear their triumph with moderation and decency, and the defeated submit to their discomfiture without chagrin or anger. If, as is too often the case, the prejudices of party have stalked into the church and cast a damper upon brotherly love and erected barriers between those whose hands should be joined together in charity and religious fervor, let the minister spare no efforts to remove such hurtful impediments to the progress of the church and to individual piety.

An Invasion.

Dr. Bennett, of the Richmond Christian Advocate, gives the following gentle hint to some Northern papers who are commenting freely on the visit of Southern preachers to the camp-meetings in the North:

"If the Northern papers do not stop shouting over the Southern preachers who attended the camp meetings, and if the brethren who have come back home do not stop pouring out their eulogies on the Northern brethren and the manner of their treatment, we shall have an invasion of the North the next camp-meeting season. Why, we should not be surprised to see a regiment moving up on the old line of General Lee's march, many of whom, like Frank Boggs and Will Wheelwright drew their swords in the war, and used them too. If such a movement should occur, some section of the camp will have to be set apart for the Southerners, for they have rare ways and habits that they will indulge in, such as the innocent amusement of chewing and smoking tobacco, and snuffing it a little too; but they can preach and pray and sing a dozen camp-meetings right straight through. We can name half a dozen men that could keep a camp-red-hot for a fortnight."

MR. EDITOR: I am happy to inform you and your many readers that the Lord is visiting Warren circuit with a gracious work of salvation. We have been laboring at Cokesburg for two weeks during which time about sixty have professed to find peace in believing and the work still goes on with no abatement. In some cases whole families are embraced in the subject of conversion, persons of three and ten and children of ten summers kneel together and find Christ precious to their souls. A number have joined us and many more will of course. The membership has been edified and established.

I am indebted to Rev. J. T. Gibbs formerly of our Conference for most efficient aid in the pulpit and altar. Rev. Mr. Harris of the M. P. C. gave us one very excellent sermon. But to God be all the glory. Pray for us!

The State Election.

The long agony of political strife is over, having broken itself in the election last Thursday. In Raleigh the election passed off quietly, without any disturbance, and we suppose the same can be said of all parts of the State, except Wilmington, where there were riotous demonstrations by a politician, Heaton, and his colored followers. The sale of liquor, the prolific source of riot and madness, is by a wise provision of the law prohibited on election days, and to this fact, more than to any other, can be ascribed the immunity which we enjoyed from disturbances.

The returns so far received indicate a complete conservative victory in the State. The result in some sections is unexpected and surprising. More general conservative gains have been made in the Eastern counties where the white men seem to have been aroused and induced for the first time since 1868, to vote. Large gains have been made in some Western counties also, while in a few there have been losses. The attempt of the Republicans in Congress to force the odious civil-rights bill upon the South has been, no doubt, the cause of the great conservative triumph.

Seven out of eight congressmen have been elected by the conservatives—five of the six Superior Court Judges, the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and a gain of about 25 members of the General Assembly.

Another International Camp-Meeting.

The following communication was signed by a number of the Bishops of the M. E. Church, General Conference officers, by Bishops Kavanaugh and Doggett, and other eminent representatives of the M. E. Church, South, and of other Methodist churches who attended the International Camp-meeting at Round Lake:

LETTER.

"To the Presiding Elders of Troy Conference and Trustees of the Round Lake Camp-Meeting Association:

DEAR BRETHREN:—Such is our conviction of the great and extended usefulness of the Camp-meeting at Round Lake, to which you invited the different members of the Methodist family, and which so many from the North, South, East and West have attended, that we believe it ought to be repeated. We therefore respectfully request you to call another similar meeting, to be held one year from this present time, July 21, 1874."

RESPONSE.

"WHEREAS, Our honored guests and the great family meeting, and the Bishops of the Church, North and South, and many other representative men, both clergy and laymen, from Canada and the United States, have expressed an urgent desire that another meeting similar to this should be held at Round Lake next year,

"Resolved, That, heartily appreciating this request, we, the Presiding Elders and the Trustees of Round Lake Camp-Meeting Association, do most gladly accede to it, and we do hereby cordially invite all the great family of Methodists to a re union on these grounds next year. They shall all be welcome in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ."

The New York Methodist, from which we copy the above, says, "The signatures are so numerous that we cannot well find room to print them. We are confident that the spirit and objects of the correspondence will receive general assent."

MR. EDITOR: I am a constant reader of the Raleigh and Nashville Advocates, and have been much interested in the controversy which is now pending.

I see from the last Nashville Advocate that Dr. Redford has attempted a reply to your unanswerable article contained in the Raleigh Advocate of the 15th of July. The Doctor is evidently in straitened circumstances for arguments to repel your charges of unjust and unwise management of the Publishing House at Nashville. I trust that the enterprise which ought to be dear to all Southern Methodists, is not so "put to it" for means to sustain itself, as the Doctor is for vantage ground in the controversy which has sprung up between him and yourself. His last article covers four or five columns of the Nashville Advocate, and yet it would require a very diligent search to discover any points that he makes therein. It is 'passing strange' that the Doctor will persist in denying what almost every pastor and Sunday School Superintendent in the Southern connection knows to be true, namely, that the Nashville publications can be brought at cheaper rates in Northern book-markets than at Nashville. He might, perhaps, have explained it satisfactorily, but to deny it is the extreme of rashness.

His answer to your itemized statement of the expenses of the Nashville Advocate is amusing. He says the composition of the paper "does not cost $162.50 per week" and so on of the other expenses,—simply denying your terms without stating how nearly you hit, or how widely you miss, the mark. A man who kills a cow can very safely and truthfully plead 'not guilty' to the charge of killing an ox, but he escapes by a technicality of 'special pleading' in which the Doctor seems well versed.

I desire to commend you for the stand you have taken, and the boldness (tempered with a tender regard for the good of the Publishing House) with which you have adhered to your first assertion. I think with you that it will accomplish good for the Publishing House. You have the good wishes and support of many Aaron's and Hurs who are willing to hold up your hands in the battle you are waging.

Gift Concerts.

Gift Concerts, by whatever name called, by whomsoever conducted, and for whatever purpose intended, are morally wrong, financially mischievous, and socially corrupting. An increased spirit of gambling marks the decline of a people; a tendency to hazard shows moral perversion or decrepitude; a delight in the excitement of chance, so called, shows the existence of a pestilential fever in the emotional nature; a willingness, much more a desire, to receive the property of another without adequate compensation of either value or affection, shows the existence of a moral delinquency, that only needs increase, to scoff and scorn all the rights of man and God. Lotteries have become odious even to the moderate morality of public opinion; raffles are confined to indifferent grades of society, and to articles of doubtful value; and gambling with cards, however much practiced, is compelled to conceal itself from the public gaze. The vice of gambling is vigorous, and is diffusing its spirit through unsuspected channels; repressed in one form, it appears in another; banned by one name, it assumes another, or flourishes without a name, and whilst we are pursuing it with statute and anathema in the haunts of the notoriously vicious, it is flourishing in the best accredited society, and sometimes in the purlieus of the church itself. Gift concerts are a dangerous, invet erately pernicious species of gambling: their whole tendency is to demoralize and impoverish a people; their losses whet the appetite for further adventure, and heedless desperation, and their gains are an economical curse to those who receive them, and to the community in which they are expended. It is time for the church in all denominations, and for all who desire the good of mankind, not only to refrain from all Gift Concerts, candy sells, and other similar devices of wickedness, but to take firm, unflinching ground against them. Have nothing directly or indirectly to do with any thing with which they are connected; touch not the unclean thing under any pretence. A proposed good end cannot white wash unholy means. Some people buy tickets for their children, or permit the children to buy them; that is the worst of all. The real wealth of a people must depend upon honest industry, and enterprise, not upon robbing each other.

The First North Carolina Conference.

I see that Bro. Hudson calls for information in regard to the first conference held in North Carolina. This conference was held four miles northeast of Lonisburg in Franklin Co. at the residence of Rev Green Hill, and the place is now known as "the Green Hill Place." Bishop Coke presided and he arrived at Green Hill's on Tuesday the 19th of April 1785. The conference convened the next morning, the 20th of April, and continued three days. There were twenty preachers in attendance and to accommodate them straw was laid on the floor of a barn on the premises and bed clothing thrown over the straw and here the most of them slept at night. At this Conference Beverly Allen was ordained Deacon, afterwards Elder, and this was probably the first ordination ever performed in the N. C. Conference. He was sent the following year to the whole State of Georgia as his circuit. Bishop Coke, in speaking of this conference in his journal, says: "we spent three days (from Wednesday to Friday inclusive) in conference and a comfortable time we had together. In this division we have had 991 increase this year."

The old house is gone. Nothing remains to mark the spot save a walnut tree that was then standing. When Bishop Waugh was here, presiding over the first conference ever held in Louisburg, he went out to the spot and procured several walnuts from this old tree to plant over them.

Missions.

The reports from the Protestant Missions, says the St. Louis Advocate, in India, China, and Japan are of the most encouraging character. The success of the laborers there has been wonderful. In China there are more than three hundred missionary stations and out-stations, with an aggregate membership estimated at from six to ten thousand. In Japan there are many missionaries scattered through the country, nominally as teachers, but actually as pioneers in the work of gospel evangelization. It is stated that there are no less than twenty professed Christians among the government officers at the capital, now called Tokio, formerly Yeddo. The officer at the head of the Bureau of Instruction is an intelligent Christian, converted in America while here studying our institutions, government etc

In India the progress of the work has been very marked at points heretofore occupied, and is extending more and more widely with continually brightening prospects.

We have received from our Mission ary Secretaries some interesting and valuable matter, but, unfortunately, too late for this week's paper.

POLISHED manners will soon cease to charm if they are joined with a cold and selfish heart or an empty brain.

Religious Brevities.

— Rev. J. E. Thompson is conducting an interesting meeting at Rolesville N. C.

REV. DR. GARLAND has been traveling through Virginia in the interest of the Vanderbilt University. He is in excellent health.

BISHOP WHITTMAN is on the wing attending to the District Conferences in Mississippi and Alabama. He is well and full of work.

All the sermons preached at the Round Lake Camp meeting are to be published in book form by Nelson & Phillips.

Among the Methodist ministers now on a visit to Europe are Rev. Dr. Stevens, the historian of Methodism; Rev. C. M. Griffin, Brooklyn; Rev. Wm. W. Bowdish, of Harlem, N. Y.; Rev. J. E. Irwin, of Newark, N. J.; Dr. J. W. Lindsey, of the Boston University, and Dr. Macauley, of Dickinson College

Rev. E. H. Myers, D. D., resigns the Presidency of Wesleyan Female College, Macon, and is succeeded by Prof. W. C. Bass, D. D. The change takes effect January 1, 1875.

There are seven Congregational churches in Texas; the oldest, in Corpus Christi, was organized in 1868, and has about forty members.

Garrett Biblical Institute was never, says Dr. Bannister, in better trim to serve young men. The classes were unusually full last year, and the promise for the coming term is very favorable.

Six hundred Mennonites from Russia arrived in New York last week. They are going West, but as yet have not decided on any specific portion of the country. They bring with them about $100,000.

At the Sea Cliff Camp-meeting a reception was given to the Southern Bishops and ministers. The addresses both of welcome and response, were full of the spirit of union and brotherly love. Bishops Janes, Doggett, and Kavanaugh, and Drs. Lee, Sargent, and Poisal took part in the services.

Bishop Cummins' deposition from the ministry in the Episcopal Church has one of its first fruits in the withdrawal of Emmanuel Church, in Louisville, Ky., and placing itself in line with others under Bishop Cummins' rule. This response is from the very diocese over which the Senior and deposing Bishop with the now deposed Bishop jointly held sway.

Rev. Dr. Clarke, of Boston, and Rev. W. H. Elliott, of Philapelphia, the delegates appointed by our last General Conference to bear fraternal greeting to the Conference of East British America were received by that body, at its late session, with every mark of pleasure and respect. Both preached by special invitation to large congregations on the Sabbath.

Our Executors.

Several millionaires have recently assumed the trust of executors of their own estates, believing that thereby they may save both the lawyers and the courts much trouble and vexation of spirit. David Swinton has given to the Bethel Sunday School of Cincinnati $100,000, the interest of which is to be used in the prosecution of its work among the neglected children and the poor people of that city.—This is, probably, the largest donation ever made to a Sabbath School. The Bethel School numbers over 2000 scholars, and the interest of this munificent gift will enable it to do greater and better work. Another self-constituted executor is James Lick, of San Francisco, who has given $2,000,000 to charitable and educational purposes. The following statement shows it to be one of the most munificent gifts for the public benefit on record:

Observatory, summit of the Sierras	$700,000
School for the Mechanic Arts	300,000
Bronze statuary, Sacramento	250,000
Monument to Key, author of "Star Spangled Banner," San Francisco	150,000
Baths, San Francisco	150,000
Old Ladies' Home, San Francisco	100,000
Ladies' Protestant Relief Society, San Francisco	25,000
Protestant Orphan Asylum, San Francisco	25,000
Orphan Asylum, San Jose	25,000
Mechanics' Library, San Francisco	10,000
Society for the prevention of Cruelty to Animals, San Francisco	10,000
The Academy of Sciences and Pioneer Society, San Francisco, residue of state—perhaps	255,000
Total	$2,000,000

The generous donor reserves to himself his homestead, boats, and the rents and profit thereof, and directs that his trustees pay to him from day to day, or week to week, such sums as he may require, not exceeding $25,000 a year. The expediency of wealthy men beoming their own executors is shown by the records of courts, whose wills making charitable bequests have been litigated until there was nothing left, after the legal expenses and fees of counsel were paid. The lawyers divided the apple, the legatees had the core.—Exc.

IT has been determined to proceed at once to carry out the plans projected for the restoration of the Cathedral at Naumberg. It is estimated that 80,000 thalers will cover the expenses of restoring the interior to its original condition, and removing all the surrounding buildings and adventitious additions by which it has been disfigured, and as this building is one of the noblest specimens of early mediæval architecture in Middle Germany, the contemplated undertaking will give satisfaction to all lovers of German art.

DAVID BRAINERD said, that when God awakened his whole congregation of Indians, he stood by amazed, and felt that he was as nothing—that God alone was working. Oh, it is this, dear friends, that we desire! We pray for: that the Lord the Spirit would himself descend, and with his almighty power tear away the veil from your hearts, convince you of sin, of unrighteousness, and of judgment; that Jesus himself would take his seamless and break your hard hearts, and take only the glory—that we may cry out, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory."

THE Board of Trustees of Emory College, Georgia, at the recent commencement conferred honors as follows: On Bishop E. M. Marvin and Rev. J. O. Clarke, D. D., of the South Georgia Conference, the degree of LL. D. On Revs. W. C. Bass and C. W. Smith, Wesleyan Female College, Georgia, and Rev. B. M. Messick, of Louisville, Ky., the degree of D. D.

He had money with him and suspicions that he has been foully dealt with are aroused. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his distressed family."

— The Wilmington Journal tells of a dreadful accident which befel a colored boy at Cerro Gordo on the Wilmington Columbia and Augusta Railroad last week. It says: The boy, whose name we could not learn, had crawled under one of the cars of Capt. Reid's freight train, which arrived here yesterday afternoon, for the purpose of stealing a ride by concealing himself on the truck of the car. Before he could get himself securely fixed, however, a sudden jerk was given to the train by the engine and the boy was thrown off. He fell on the track and was frightfully cut, his right thigh having been frightfully mangled and his left foot cut off at the ankle.

— The Milton CHRONICLE says: Romulus Lawson, colored, tenant of A. Lawson, Esq., near Roxboro, in Person county, while ploughing in the field last week, saw a drove of foxes and their young ones (10 in all) approaching him, and fearful of the result frightening his horse, unbitched him and tied him to a bush. They reached him and all made an attack upon him at once by running up his back, pulling off his hat, scratching his head, &c. He seized a piece of broken rail to defend himself and succeeded in making short work of four of them, the rest taking to their heels.

A Great Sun Stroke. Many of our readers doubtless remember the gentleman of color who is known as the great Douglas Will case. Hon. S. A. Douglas left a will in which it was provided that its large real estate in Chicago should be sold and divided between his widow and his two sons by his first wife, Robt. M. and Stephen A. Douglas. After the death of the latter the property was placed in the hands of B. F. Rhodes, of Cleveland, Ohio. A number of Rhodes agreed with a man named Robbins to purchase the property jointly, which was done at an enormous sacrifice. The will was brought by the boys to recover the property on the ground of illegal purchase, as the sale of it was proven to be even to them being extremely and indirectly interested in the purchase of lands, goods, &c., of which they were the disposal. The case was decided in favor of Judge Williams, in favor of the heirs, and when we remember about $250 was paid for the property the boys have made a clear profit of $5,000,000. Of course the decision of the chancellor means the immediate payment.

A postmortem examination having been made of the remains of Van Etten the Cellini-Tenni forger, it was discovered that his teeth had been filled with cement, and that the latter was composed principally of the effects of lard-rancid. His tooth treatment was under the effects of the poison, and the process of suppose being allowed him to the point for some cause would lead to congestion.

At Mollisville, Henderson county, S. C., on the 24 inst., a young lady named Katie Tucker was killed by a young German named Graesen. It appears that Graesen was employed by the father of this young lady, with whom he felt desperately in love. He became jealous of the attentions of a supposed rival, and in a fit of jealousy killed the young lady while in the house visiting Mr. Tucker's parlor. The murderer fled, but was arrested and is in jail at Henderson Court House.

Marriages.

Married on the 25th ult. by Rev. T. A. Boone, W. J. Cox of Lincolnville to Mrs. M. J. Watkins, of Montgomery co. N. C.

Married on the 23rd of July, at the residence of the bride's father, near Catawba station, by the Rev. P. L. Herman, Mr. Lee D. Shuford and Miss Lida N. Pearson.

Deaths.

Obituary notices of twenty lines are inserted without charge. The excess over twenty lines of such words is charged for at the rate of 10 cents per line. Count the lines and slow your words to the line. In this way you may always know the amount to enclose. Resolutions of respect are subject to the same charge.

Died in this city on the 23rd ult., Robert Oliver Wendell, youngest child of Edward B. and Sarah Thomas, aged 5 years, and 18 days.

Little Bobbie was the darling of his bereaved parents and the cherished pet not only of his household but of the neighborhood specially, affectionate, ingenious and tractable, the winsomeness of his daily child the reason for him the tender regard of all who knew him. His untimely home was sadly mourned and sorely grieved when the Good Shepherd called the lamb of the flock to reside in His bosom. But, "it is well with the child." Amid the green pastures and beside the still waters of the Heavenly Land, safe forever from the perils and trials, the temptations and sorrows of mortal life. They who sorrow most will be gladdened even in their anguish, by the sweet assurance that he who young as he was, so loved to pray to the Blessed Christ, and to hear and sing in Sunday School about the Heavenly Home, is without doubt singing praises now.

In that blest fold whence none can stray,
And pastures ever green,
Upon sultry sun, or stormy day
Or night is never seen."

and works blended, will shine as a bright light, and the fruits of her faith which works by love was always seen, and will be remembered while the generations that knew her are in existence, and will have an amen[illegible] reward in heaven. Our dear sister was confined to her bed about two (2) years during which time, she sat up but little and suffered much all the time. During the last day or two of her life, she prayed and asked others to join her in prayer to her heavenly father that the cup of such suffering might pass from her, that she said, "thy will O God, be done." When ever she had a moment of ease and breathed easy she was praying and praising God, repeating frequently a favorite hymn "Jesus Lover of my Soul &c. A little time before she expired she repeated a part of that hymn beginning with the second part of the first double stanza, "Hide me O my savior hide.—till the storm of life has past: &c. together with all of the second stanza. when she ceased with saying,

"Oh! let me hide myself in Thee,
Thy wings shall be my shelter."

She prayed she might go to sleep and awake in Heaven. That prayer was answered; during her sleep she breathed her last, crossed the Jordan at its narrowest ford. She has left behind a kind husband, one sister and three brothers, and a precious little child three or four years old. Her former home has lost its brightest jewel, the church a [illegible] member, the [illegible] a true friend. She rejoiced [illegible] religion that had vitality and power. Dr. O. Hagan the attentive, kind physician who attended her from April '73 till July '74 says, "I was struck on first seeing her with the patient fortitude she displayed under the sufferings of this [illegible] never [illegible] during her whole sickness. To this was added an angelic sweetness of temper, a thoughtful care for the feelings and comfort of others, No case says the Dr. that ever came under my care displayed [illegible] such a marked degree the christian character.

She gave her Pastor, Rev. A. R. Raven, cord use of a strong abiding faith, which no doubt made his visits in her profitable to herself. All feel assured she has gone to rest in Heaven.

Let the prisoner is released,
Lightened of her ill sibly load;
Where the weary are at rest,
She is gather-d into God;
"Let the pain of life is past,
All her warfare now is o'er,
Death and hell behind is cast,
Grief and suffering are no more."

The Lord bless the bereaved and afflicted ones that survive.

PIEDMONT SPRINGS,
STOKES COUNTY, N. C.
Opened on the 20th of June for the Reception of Visitors.

These justly celebrated Springs, whose waters are Ansonia, Dyspepsia Ancrosis, Diseases of the Skin, General Debility and Neuralgia, and wonderfully restorative in diseases peculiar to females, have been the resort for invalids for years. The hotel and cottage accommodations have been greatly enlarged and beautified—the grounds ornamented—the walks and drives extended.

The new HOTEL just completed, has an observatory from which all the beautiful scenery which surrounds these Springs can be seen. "Moore's Knob" and "Hanging Rock," spurs of the Saurtown Mountains, with their deep gorges and lofty bonders, loom up grandly amongst the clouds, immediately in front of the Hotel buildings.

HORSES AND CONVEYANCES,
for visiting the many places of interest can be obtained at trifling cost.

The Springs are easy of access, being only a short drive by a good line of stages, from Salem—Winston, the terminus of the N. W. N. C. R. R., which connects at Greensboro with all the trains going North or South.

ATTRACTIONS.
The Springs are supplied with Billiard, Bowling Saloon, Ball Room, experienced Lauudresses, and polite Servants.

BOARD:

Per Day	$ 2.00
Per Week	13.00
Per Month	40.00

The Proprietors will spare no effort to render the sojourn of their visitors both profitable and pleasant, and they take great pleasure in announcing to the public that they have obtained the services of an experienced Hotel Keeper, who will supply the tables with the best the county affords.

CARY COTTON GIN.
The Latest, Best and Cheapest.
I offer the public the latest improved Cotton Gin, as well as the cheapest. The following certificates from well known gentlemen, will be more satisfactory than any thing I can say.

NEAR CARY, N. C., Nov., 12th, 1873.
This is to certify that I am using one of the Cary Gins made by W. M. Sorrell, of Cary, N. C., and that I am well pleased with it and would cheerfully recommend it to any one wanting a good Gin.
A. B. YATES.

CARY, N. C., May 22nd, 1874.
I take pleasure in saying that the 60y Saw Cotton Gin I purchased from Mr. W. M. Sorrell, known as the Cary Gin, does far better work than any Gin I have heretofore used, though costing from 50 to 100 per cent. less money. I think any person in want of a Gin will save money by purchasing the Cary Gin, its performance has been entirely satisfactory to me, I can cheerfully recommend it to others.
A. F. PAGE.

We certify that the Cary Gin has given entire satisfaction to our neighbors, who have tried it, and we think it an excellent gin.

GREENE'S
OXYGENATED BITTERS.
The stomach is one of the most delicate organs of the human system; and the indigestible food crowded into it by the requirements of modern society, keep it in which is followed by a resort to tonics and alteratives for relief. It unfortunately happens, however, that many of the medicines used for this purpose contain alcohol, which, poured into a diseased stomach produces irritation, creates intoxication, and does more injury than good.
A STATE OF CHRONIC DISORDER.
OXYGENATED BITTERS CONTAIN NO ALCOHOL,
but are purely medicinal preparation, which, in cases of DYSPEPSIA, HEARTBURN, INDIGESTION, and other like disorders, at once restores the stomach to its NATURAL CONDITION OF HEALTH.
The OXYGENATED BITTERS have been the most popular remedy for the above complaints for the last TWENTY YEARS, and still maintain their UNRIVALLED POPULARITY.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,
Staunton, Va.,
Will begin its 25th annual session Sept. 17th, 1874. Rev. W. A. Harris, D. D., President, with an able corps of twenty-three Teachers and Officers. Modern languages taught and spoken by European Teachers. Music by seven Professors and Teachers.
This is one of the healthiest climates in the world. Its marked effect is the rapid promotion of the physical health and vigor of our pupils. Those who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, chills and climatic diseases, are entirely restored.
Buildings elegant—fanned by the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery, making it one of the most delightful College homes in the Union.
The last session, one hundred and eleven young ladies attended this school, as boarding pupils from fifteen Southern States.
EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONIALS.
From Bishop D. S. Doggett, D. D.
The Wesleyan Female Institute, located in Staunton, Virginia, under the Presidency of Rev. W. A. Harris, is, in my judgment, one of the best institutions, for young ladies, in the South. I have occasion to know and appreciate its value by the advantages enjoyed by one of my daughters, now a pupil there. It possesses all the facilities of a thorough female education. Its personal accommodations are all that can be desired for health and comfort, or taste. No location could be more healthful; scenery more magnificent; no atmosphere more salubrious. It is now in a state of great prosperity. I do not hesitate to recommend it to the patronage of all who wish their daughters to receive the benefits of a useful and ornamental culture.
D. S. DOGGETT.
From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.
The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the Church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music, advantages are offered of very high order. The most talented Professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent. The School is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.
From Prof. F. H. Smith, M. A. L. L. D. University of Va.
The Wesleyan Female Institute, at Staunton, deserves the high success it enjoys. It has a good corps of teachers, a beautiful situation, and excellent management. Having had a daughter under Mr. Harris' care, during the present session, my observation leads me to select that school to be one of the best of Female Seminaries which adorn our State.

The Gift Of Song.

A touching story is told of a little girl sent by her parents from Spain, during a time of religious persecution there, to take refuge with some friends in England. The vessel was lost on a rock bound coast during a severe storm; but the little girl was saved through the efforts of some heroic men. She was too young to tell her story, but, by a series of providential events, was brought at last to the house of the friend of her parents, just as, released from imprisonment, they arrived in England to seek their lost darling. A familiar tune that the mother had taught to her little girl in former days, became the clew that led to their joyful meeting.

A remarkable incident is that of a Scotish youth, who learned with a pious mother to sing the old psalms that were as household words to them in the kirk and by the fireside. When he grew up, he wandered away from his native country, was taken captive by the Turks, and made a slave in one of the Barbary States. But he never forgot the songs of Zion, although he sung them in a strange land and to heathen ears. One night he was solacing himself in this manner, when the attention of some sailors on board of an English man-of-war, was directed to the familiar tune of 'Old Hundred,' as it came floating over the moon-lit waves. At once they surmised the truth, that one of their countrymen was languishing away his life as a captive. Quickly arming themselves, they manned a boat, and lost no time in effecting his release. What a joy to him after eighteen long, long years passed in slavery! Should not you think he would ever after love the glorious tune of 'Old Hundred?'

Children, never let your sweet young voices be employed in using profane or unseemly words. Learn many hymns. Good Martin Luther once said, 'Singing hymns will keep the devil out of the heart.' It is a quaint saying but it is true. 'Furnish the mind with good things, and there will be no room for evil.' They will be like "mills fastened in a sure place." You know when a nail is driven in tightly, you can not wedge any thing else along side of it. But you may have a tuneful voice and love to sing, and yet remain unaffected by the beautiful words. O how sad if they who sing about Jesus on earth, shall not be of the number of the redeemed, who join in the 'new song' before the throne of God and the Lamb!—Child's World.

Among The Children

I had the other day a charming Sunday-school class of five bright little girls, aged from six to eight years.

After going over our lesson I asked a general question: 'What lesson ought we to learn from the miracle of 'Moses' Rod?' I was amused at the answers: 'Not to be afraid of snakes.' 'To do as God tells us.' 'Stop,' yes, that is just it. Obedience to God's commands, no matter how hard it seems. Are we always willing to do that? Mamie, would you have taken hold of the snake? 'Well, I would if I had known it would turn into a rod again.' Ah, yes, that is what we are all willing to do. If we only knew what God meant—if we could only see the end from the beginning.'

'Do you believe there are miracles now as of old, not perhaps in the same way, but no less miracles?' There was silence for a moment, and five pairs of bright eyes and eager upturned faces (which reminded me of five hungry little 'robbins' reaching up for food) regarded me earnestly. 'Yes,' said little blue eyed Minnie, 'He did a miracle for me this morning.' 'Will you tell me what it was, Mamie?' After a minute's hesitation (when I feared I had done wrong to press the question), she said: 'There was something for breakfast which I thought would not be enough to go round, there's such a lot of us, but we all sat down and had plenty, and when we got through there was a good deal left.' 'O,' said Kitty, 'that's like the widow's meal-barrel, that kept growing and growing, though she baked cakes every day.

O' give us the faith of little children, that in our daily lives we too may see signs and wonders done for us in each one of God's providence.—Julia Thompson in Christian at Work.

The Lord Blessed My Pennies

A little girl six years old was desirous of putting her pennies into the missionary box with others. When saying her evening prayers at her papa's knee she hesitated a moment, and then added: 'Lord, bless my two pennies for Jesus' sake. Amen.' After the child had gone to bed her father asked his wife: 'What made Gracie say that?' 'She has prayed thus every night since giving her pennies to the missionary box,' was the mother's reply. Do you, dear young reader, pray, 'God bless my pennies,' when you give your mite to some rugged school? If not, pray earnestly for the blessing; and you will soon find the prayer will do more than your pennies.

A Child's Question.

When Father Sawyer, of Maine, had reached his hundredth birthday the event was celebrated by a public service, which was attended by throngs of all ages. After his address and prayer many children were taken up to shake hands with the patriarch and receive his blessing. One very little girl, who was much impressed by the occasion, at length whispered to her mother: 'I guess he always minded his mamma.'

'Yes, dear; what made you think of that?'

'Why, mamma, doesn't God say, 'Thy days shall be long?'

She probably comprehended nothing but the great age of the speaker, but that had been a sermon to her. And is not the mere fact of a Christian's long life a testimony to God's faithfulness, so that, however infirm and helpless, they are honored with a long life witnesses?

Rural and Domestic.

Rain Water Impurities.

In a recently published work on "Sanitary Arrangement for Dwellings," Mr. Eassie points out the precautions to be adopted by householders in cases where rainfall forms the chief or only source of water supply. Generally it will be found convenient to store rain falling on the roof in an underground tank, formed of brick or concrete, and lined outside with clay and covered inside with Portland cement. But care must be taken that the down spouts conducting the rainfall to the tank do not drain either zinc roofs or lead flats. Even on tile or slate covered roofs, the water will have passed over lead flashings, ridges, hips and valleys, charging it with a small percentage of lead, but not more than one twentieth of a grain to the gallon. With a greater proportion than this, water becomes dangerous to use, being more or less poisonous. Since rain acquires certain impurities, even while passing through the air, it should always be carefully filtered before being used for drinking or cooking purposes.

In the case of a house supplied with an underground receptacle, filtration could be easily managed, by placing an earth filter on the delivery side of the down spout, as its exit from the tank. An eminent authority on sanitary subjects, Dr. Angus Smith, believes rain water can be so complete ly filtered through earth as to remove all impurities. Whenever rain water is stored for drinking purposes, the eaves of the roof, troughs and down spouts should be enameled, and the supply ought to be carried to the tank through glazed earthenware pipes. This prevents leading, but other deleterious ingredients will still remain. In manufacturing towns, soot, oil and sulphuric acid form some constituents of rain water. With these facts in view, most people will agree with Mr. Eassie in his conclusion that, "generally speaking, rain water should be excluded from the kitchen," although extremely useful in laundries and conservatories.—Scientific American.

Sugar, Cotton and Rice

An Agricultural Revolution is impending in Louisiana. It has been becoming painfully evident to the planters for some time past that sugar and cotton cannot be cultivated with profit in the delta region. Even wages within reason and negro labor to be depended upon, the low price of sugar and certain difficulties attending the production of cotton would not encourage the planters to continue to compete with more favored parts of the world. But it has been observed that while the large sugar and cotton producers have struggled along from year to year since the war with the most unfavorable results, a small class of Creole planters, mostly located in the parish of Plaquemines, have been quietly growing rich in the business of rice culture. Before the war rice was produced to a limited extent, but thought the methods of cultivation were crude and the seed was poor, and Louisiana rice stood low in the market, the planters made money. The crop in 1861 was but 9,000 barrels of clean rice. Within a few years attention has been gradually directed towards this branch of agriculture, and the product has increased annually. In 1868 it had reached 60,000 barrels of clean rice, and the estimated crop this year is 125,000 barrels. New Orleans is becoming an important rice market. With the growth of the business the quality of the rice has greatly improved, care having been taken to import the best Carolina and Honduras seed. According to the New Orleans papers the prospect now is that an area of two hundred miles up and down the Mississippi and in and out its myriad bayous will speedily be turned into rice fields. It is indeed a matter of satisfaction that a land so sorely afflicted as Louisiana has been should begin to feel the pulses of returning prosperity. When the Radical thief pressure is removed and the population returns to its normal condition we shall have no more appeals from the public authorities of Louisiana to save their washed-out people from starvation.—New York World.

LAND SALE NEAR TRINITY COLLEGE.

On the 12th day of August next, with a credit of six months, I will sell at auction upon the premises, a tract of land containing three hundred acres, lying west of Trinity, and known as the Brown place. The most choice near the College Campus, but one hundred acres of wood land, dwelling house, barn, stable and out-in School buildings. This is very valuable property and affords a rare opportunity for a good investment to any one who wants a productive farm, or desires to live near the College. The dwelling is about three hundred yards from the College Campus.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

An Unwholesome Season.

The closing days of winter and the early days of spring are very trying to the feeble and sensitive and are apt to affect unpleasantly even the most robust and vigorous. Nothing can be more uncongenial to the nerves or more depressing to the spirits than damp, chilling winds, fogs and cold rains, and of such unwelcome visitors we have a superabundance at this season. Common prudence suggests, therefore, the propriety of fortifying the system against these insidious enemies of health and comfort, and the experience of more than a quarter of a century points to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as the all-sufficient sanitary safeguard under such ambiguous circumstances. An accession of vital strength and energy is what is required to meet and overcome the unhealthy elements now present in the atmosphere. This increase of vital power, so necessary to meet the exhausting drafts which an inclement season makes upon the system and the constitution can be readily acquired by taking from two to three doses of Hostetter's Bitters daily during the winter and spring months. The nature of this celebrated restorative is well known to the public. It is composed of no objectionable purgative elements, mediated with the extracts and juices of the most effective tonic alterative, and delirious and laxative roots yet known to medical science. To the combination of these excellent ingredients, in proportions suitable to the exigencies of debility, feeble and diseased stomachs, the great tonic and curative effects may be ascribed. A course of it, commenced now, will prevent all danger. Fever and ague, rheumatism, or other ailments arising from cold and damp peculiar to the spring months, and also prove a safeguard against the attacks of dyspepsia and liver complaint which so frequently result at this period of the year.

DR. C. M'LANE'S
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder-blade, and is frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for a rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied the exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can not summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he dispairs even of a cure. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred in which few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the liver to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. M'LANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them A FAIR TRIAL.

Any one can use the Eye Cups without the aid of a doctor or medicine so as to receive immediate beneficial results and never wear spectacles or, if using one, to lay them aside forever. Warranted to cure in every case where the directions are followed, or will refund the money.

from honest Farmers, Mechanics and Merchants—some of them the most eminent leading professional and business men, and women of education and refinement, in our country—can be found at our office.

Under date of March 29 Hon. Horace Greely, of the New York Tribune, writes: "Dr. Ball, of your city, is a conscientious and responsible man, who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

Prof. W. Jacobs, of Dunlap, Knox Co., Ill., wrote, April 24th, 1872: "Without my spectacles I pen you this note, after using the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS thirteen days, and this Morning perused the entire contents of a daily in a paper, and all with the unassisted eye."

"Truly am I grateful for your noble invention. May Heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using spectacles (worst) years; I am now twenty years old.

"Truly yours, PROF. W. MERRICK."

Rev. Asa Bullard, Malden, Mass., cured of Years' Blindness of 18 years' standing, in one minute, by the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS.

S. C. Ellis, late Mayor of Dayton, Ohio, wrote as Nov. 15th, 1872: "I have tested the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS, and I am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them. They are the greatest invention of the age."

Wm. Beatty, M. D., Salvisa Ky., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions, my sight is fully restored, after being almost entirely blind for 26 years."

Alex. K. Wycle, M. D., Atchison, Pa., writes: After total Blindness of my left eye for four years, by paralysis of the optic nerve, by my attention to introducing PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes."

All parties desiring for full particulars, certificates of cures, prices &c., will please send their address to us, and we will send our pamphlet on the Illustrated Philosophical Explanation of the Eye-sight, also a hundred page book of testimonials free of charge. BY MARY [illegible]

Bewildered, [illegible], at my feet
I fall to day,
Seeing two paths of thorn and sweets,
In parted ways.
And weary, oh! I, sore distrest,
I humbly pray
For my behest.

Adown this vista clusters fruit,
Tempting and bright;
From the bare, frost-bitch and root
Spreads poisonous blight?
Ever, the precious boon bestow
Behead my sight,
The I may know!

And there, a black road stretches far
In cold gray air,
Wherein I see no single star
To make it fair;
O, tell me, is the narrow way
Always so bare
Of golden ray?

I scarcely dare to look upon
The shadowed path,
A soft it smiles within the sun,
So rich it bath
Of joy, to make the other seem Fulfillment rath
Or some fell dream.

Say thy feet were never fixed
Errorest way,
To behold me thus two roads betwixt,
In sore dismay!
In fear of wrong, yet doubt of right,
Mistrusting day,
And dreading night.

Yet, Father, if thou will but guide
We need not mourn,
Whatever bitterness betide!
For sharpest thorn
Is not all wounding if, the while
The flesh is torn,
We see thy smile.

The sun-warmed vines must all decay,
Coldest or blest,
Lead, Father, lead which ever way
Thou seest best;
The longest way is short that yields
Eternal rest
In heavenly fields.

One New York Letter

LITERARY NOTES.

There is very little doing in the publishing way just now; our publishers are saving their energies for the Fall. Scribner, Armstrong & Co. will issue early in August, three volumes of a series called "Epochs of History," gotten up in compact form and even more tastefully than the volumes in all. These first published will be "The Era of the Protestant Reformation," by F. Seebohm, author of "The Oxford Reformers;" "The Crusades," by the Rev. G. W. Cox, and "The Thirty Years War, 1618–1648," by Samuel Rawson Gardner. Bret Harte's story, "Wan Lee, the Pagan," will be given in the forthcoming number of Scribner's Monthly. This number will be unusually bright and Summery. Among other stories will be "Mortality Puffs" by the author of that charming sketch, "Miss Margedie's Thanksgiving," and "The Pepper Pot Woman," by Rebecca Harding Davis. Mr. Wilkinson's promised paper on George Eliot has been necessarily postponed till the October number. Mr. J. T. Trowbridge, editor of the late Young Folks, will write the next serial for St. Nicholas. It is no little compliment to the old Young Folks that Mr. Trowbridge should be the first choice of St. Nicholas. This new serial will be a story of boy and girl life. Mr. Trowbridge usually confines himself to the boys, but in this instance he will make a concession to popular prejudices. By the way, a series of this favorite story teller, with his portrait, will appear in a Fall [illegible] Scribner's. Bret Harte has written a poem for St. Nicholas which will appear before long. A letter was received at the office of this Magazine the other day, all the way from Kongsberg, Norway, from a little boy who had gotten hold of some old [illegible] of St. Nicholas, and became very much interested in Mr. Stock[illegible]. "What might have been Expected," and wanted the back numbers. We have just heard that Hetzel & Co., the Paris publishers, are about to issue a French edition of Mrs. Dodge's ever popular "Hans Brinker," which will be illustrated with twenty-four pictures by Scimler. This delightful story has already had several English editions and one in Dutch, not to mention its American editions.

Henry Holt & Co. issue this week a new translation of "The Notary's Nose," by Edmund About. This translation is made by Mr. Holt himself, who is a good French scholar, and will head last in the Leisure Hour series, popularly called the Linen Duster series. Messrs. Holt & Co. have just purchased the exclusive right to publish Auerbach's novels in this country. Roberts Bros., of Boston, formerly published some of this author's works. Messrs. Henry Holt & Co. have also just issued a curious little school book called English Exercises, by Henry W. Sigler, A. M. The book proposes to show a new and decidedly original way of studying English Grammar. It does away with a superfluity of rules, and impresses its lessons by striking illustrations.

"The Present Problem" is the name of a story written by Sarah K. Bolton, of Cincinnati, and just published by G. P. Putnam's Sons of this city. The book is written with the avowed purpose of showing that what is wrong or immoral in a woman is equally so in a man. The author thinks that if the women are strong for the right and earnest in their labors, that temperance and virtue will triumph.

SOME STREET VENDERS.

Among all the street venders in this city, and there is one for nearly every corner, it is the rarest thing to find a native born American. Where one does find an American, it is generally at a news stand or, sometimes, selling canes. Most of the peanut and candy stand men are Italians, the suspender and jewelry (?) men are Jews, the apple stand women are Irish, the picture dealers are Germans and the flower girls are also usually German. Once in a great while a solitary Chinaman may be found with a tobacco stand or selling what the bootblacks call "chowwow" pies. The Italians do a good business in ice cream at a penny a glass. This is not the same sort of Italian cream that one buys in tempting bricks at up-town saloons. The latest street toy is "the chimes:" an apparently silver ball mounted on apparently gold wheels. A string is attached to the middle of the ball, which, when pulled across the side-walk, rings a number of small bells inside the ball. It is a pretty toy though rather noisy, but that will only add to its popularity among the young people.

ART NOTES.

There are comparatively few artists in town at present, the most of that profession being in the country with sketch book and pencils. Mr. Bierstadt was in town for a few days, but he has a beautiful home on the Hudson, and does not spend much time in New York in the summer season.

Winslow Homer, who is well known throughout the country by his pictures drawn for periodicals, but in New York more valued for his delicious water color sketches, is spending the Summer at East Hampton, L. I. Mr. Homer is engaged at present upon a painting of the beach, at that old-fashioned watering place, into which he will introduce a number of figures, such as bathers, children playing in the sand and ladies sitting along the beach under the protecting shade of their big mabrellas.

Mr. E. Wood Perry is also at East Hampton, where he has found some quaint old interiors, which he is diligently putting upon canvass. If Mr. Perry would only confine himself to interiors, in the painting of which he excels, he would be doing both himself and the public greater justice than when he paints such pictures as the "Vespers" exhibited at the Academy of Design this year.

Mr. Thomas Moran, whose studio is over in Newark, New Jersey, left that city on Monday last to join Professor Hayden's expedition to Colorado. Mr. Moran intends to be gone for about six weeks, all of which time he will devote to making sketches of the Mountain of the Holy Cross in the Rocky Mountains of Colorado.—This mountain is a natural curiosity owing to the form of a cross made on its side near the top, by immense drifts of snow. This picture will not be as large as the "Canon of the Yellowstone," or the "Chasm of the Colorado." The subject is more picturesque than that of either of the two mentioned.

KOSSUTH'S SISTER DENIES THE STORY OF HIS POVERTY.

It is not generally known that Kossuth, the great Hungarian patriot, has a sister living in New Jersey, in a pretty little villa between Scotch Plains and Plainfield, on the Central Railroad. This lady, Mme. Ruttkay, has just returned from a two years' visit in Europe, where her time has been spent between the villa of her brother Louis, near Turin, Italy, and the residences of her nieces at Pesth, the capital of Hungary. The decree of banishment forbidding the return of Mme. Ruttkay, and her sister, Mme. Meszlenyi, to Hungary, has now become null and void. It might be well to say here that Mme. Ruttkay, who by the way is a most cultivated and accomplished lady, is almost an American, having lived for twenty years in this country. She has two sons living here, one in the West, and one East, who have both married American wives.

CHURCH MUSIC.

The constantly improving taste in musical matters is nowhere more noticeable than in our churches. The Roman Catholic and Episcopal Churches have always paid more attention to their musical services, than have those of other denominations. Now-a-days those churches that do not pay some special attention to their musical services are the exception. It is estimated that out of the three hundred and thirty or forty churches in this city, nearly two thirds employ paid musicians. Placing the average amount of money expended for this purpose by each church at a low figure, it reaches at least three hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year. In some instances as much as ten thousand dollars have been expended for one choir. Within the past two years the expenses have been of necessity considerably lessened, so that large and extravagant salaries are no longer paid.

They have excellent music at St. Paul's Methodist Church where Mr. Walter Shonston is organist. The Methodist churches depend more upon congregational singing than upon choirs; they sing the regular hymn tunes and seldom go to operas for their music.

CLERGY AND CHOIRS.

A clergyman of this city who was opposed to the music sung in his church, arose one morning after the choir had made a fine display of its powers and quietly said, "we will now commence the worship of God &c." Mr. George Bristow tells a good story of a clergyman of his acquaintance whose church had just been getting a new and really very fine choir. "How do you like your new singers?" said Mr. Bristow to the clergyman. "They appear to give satisfaction," said the minister, "but they don't understand their business very well. The other day, for example, the soprano began singing and left the others behind, the tenor, however, soon came in and finally the contralto and bass caught up. I was very much afraid they would break down but they eventually got together and I must confess it sounded very well." This story loses a great deal in not being told by Mr. Bristow. It is hardly necessary to say, however, that the choir was singing a fugue.

For the Advocate.

Minutes of N. C. Local Ministers' Conference

Solomon Pool read the Report on Education, which was adopted as follows:

The Committee to whom was referred the subject of Education, beg leave to report:

That this Conference recognizes the great importance of this subject, and the duty of its members to exert their influence in advancing the interest of the cause.

We have many children within the bounds of our communion. It is our duty to provide for their future usefulness and happiness. A good education is essential to both.

Much that has passed under the name fails to meet our views of what a true education should endorse.—Man is a triune being. He is endowed with a spiritual as well as physical and intellectual faculties—The function of this spiritual faculty is faith; its expression is worship.—That course of education is imperfect, in which the culture of this brightest of man's faculties is overlooked or neglected.

Our educators fail when their time and energy are devoted to the mental training of the young, while the garden of the heart, which should bloom with the flowers of piety, and shed abroad the heavenly fragrance of the Christian graces, is intertangled and overgrown with vice or infidelity. To educate the mind without cultivating the heart, to give learning without religion, is to throw the power of the giant into the arm of the madman.

When parents manifest so great solicitude for the intellectual improvement of their children, without a first and paramount concern for the salvation of their souls, we must expect to witness a continuance of practical infidelity in our midst.

While education shall encourage and propogate only the intellectual growth of our youth, we must expect to see our children, who bear the baptismal sign, continue to reject the very religion which we so earnestly offer to the heathen world. Until we are brought to a full appreciation of the vital importance of this subject, we may not be surprised if Satan shall annually snatch from our own households nearly as many as we reclaim from the pagan hosts.

It affords the Committee great pleasure to be able to state that our church is awaking to the magnitude of this momentous question. Within our bounds we have some of the most flourishing male and female institutions. At all these we believe the spiritual wealth of the young is made a matter of the very first consideration.

Under the immediate patronage of the N. C. Conference, are Trinity for males, and Greensboro and Davenport for females. We cordially commend them to our people. We also look with the very highest interest to that rising institution, the Rutherford College, under the care of Rev. R. L. Abernethy, the retiring President of this Conference.

In point of usefulness, and in all of those prime elements, which give weight and value to a College, this is second to none in our State. It is doing a most commendable work in educating indigent orphans and the children of ministers of every denomination, free of charge.

The effort there is to train the young for usefulness in the church and to prepare them for heaven. It is now in a very flourishing condition.

The Catalogue for the year ending May 27th, 1874, shows that there were in attendance, during the year, 238 students, of whom 23 were children of ministers, and 12 were preparing to preach the gospel. We take pleasure in stating that many others of our Local ministers are engaged in this high and noportant work, in primary and high schools, in different sections of our State, and are effecting great good. We earnestly commend to the church a careful attention to the proper culture of the rising generation.

SOLOMON POOL, }
S. D. EVANGELIS, } Com.
B. YORK, }

On motion, Article 2 Con. was amended with the words, "after the session of 1875" to be inserted between the words "and" and "of such."

Kinston was selected as the place of the next Annual meeting.

The following resolution offered by R. L. Abernethy was passed:

Resolved, That as this Conference is a Temperance body, and as Temperance is a grand element in the great cause of religion and virtue, we do most heartily recommend the Friend of Temperance, edited by Rev. R. H. Whitaker, of Raleigh, to all our people, and that we will do all we can, personally, for its advancement.

R. L. Abernethy offered the following, which was passed unanimously:

Resolved, That we do most heartily recommend the Raleigh Christian Advocate, edited by Rev. J. B. Babbitt, to all our local preachers, and request that each one do all in his power to promote its circulation.

The Report of Committee on "Missionary Work" was read and adopted as follows:

The Committee on "Missionary Work" make the following report:

We find that 80 preachers report an aggregate of 1327 sermons preached during the year: 135 Sunday school lectures delivered, 38 Sunday schools organized: 183 prayer meetings held, 118 persons baptized; 108 received into the church a large number of temperance addresses delivered, besides a great amount of miscellaneous work. In addition to this, many preachers make general reports without giving exact statistics.

It is a source of great gratification that we are able to report such a vast increase of interest, on the part of our members, in the missionary work in which we are engaged.

Many seem to be greatly aroused to the importance and grandeur of the work before us. All seem to rejoice in the privilege of working for the Master in the highways and hedges, and not a single one complains of the unpaid character of our work.

None have experienced any desire to work other than according to the disciplinary usages of the M. E. Church, South. Several have preached as high as 70 sermons, one as high as 200 sermons during the year.

We commend these as examples worthy of imitation.

We would especially call the attention of our members to the old men, who, in the midst of affliction and poverty, have labored so largely and so successfully. They are missionaries indeed, and worthy imitation of the younger members.

Your Committee would recommend the following:

Resolved, That we do prosecute our missionary work everywhere with renewed vigor, feeling this to be our greatest field of usefulness.

Resolved, That each local preacher be urged to keep a record of work done, and report to this Conference annually each year, for the encouragement of others who may have been less industrious.

L. BRANSON, }
J. B. BALLARD, } Com.

The Conference adjourned until after services at night.

10 P M.—The Conference reassembled. The minutes were read and corrected.

On motion of Amos Gregson, R. L. Abernethy was requested to take up a collection on Sabbath to aid the minute fund.

On motion of R. H. Whitaker, it was resolved that the thanks of this Conference are eminently due, and are hereby most cordially tendered to the citizens of High Point for the very elegant and bountiful hospitality bestowed upon the members of this body during the sessions of this Conference.

Resolved, That we hereby acknowledge the courteous ability of our Presiding officers.

Resolved, That we render thanks to the Rail Road authorities for the usual return tickets.

Resolved, That the Secretary furnish a copy of these proceedings for publication in the Raleigh Christian Advocate and the Friend of Temperance.

Conference adjourned with the Benediction, to meet again at Kinston on Thursday preceding the third Sabbath in July, 1875.

Our Irish Letter.

The annual sessions of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference have just terminated in Dublin where the assembly meets biennially. The Rev. George T. Perks, the President of the English Conference, occupied the chair. He was accompanied from London by Revs. J. H. James D. D Wm. Arthur A. M., and Gervase Smith A M. There were no vacancies, in the Legal Hundred. The Secretary, Assistant Secretary and the two official Letter Writers were all reelected.

The Mixed Committee met before the opening of the Conference and reviewed the financial concerns of the Conference. On the whole the report of the various committee were not discouraging.

A meeting was convened by the request of W. McArthur M. P., in aid of the Fund to assist superannuated ministers and the widows of deceased preachers. Before it closed £10,000 were subscribed which will give it an effective impetus.

The General Mission is continued. Four Missionaries were appointed—one to each province, viz. Rev. W. H. Quarry, W. G. Campbell, John Wilson and J. S. McDade.

The report of the Methodist College indicates a measure of prosperity. All the Professors were appointed.

Dr. Cather is a member of the Conference and was in attendance. He obtained permission to ascend the platform on the third day, and expound the principles, object and possibilities of this gigantic enterprise. He cannot run it himself and entreated the Conference to give him an assistant. The Conference thought he did not require one and refused his request. He complained grievously that the British Conference would not endorse his special role.

Twenty-three orphans were cared for during the year by the Orphan Society.

Lay Delegation occupied the time of the Conference and the result of the discussion upon it was the appointment of a committee to meet a similar one which it is expected the English Conference will appoint during the year. A resolution was also passed unanimously, favoring the introduction of the laity to the councils of the body.

The representative to the English Conference are the Revs. Wallace McMullen, Oliver McCutchin and George Alley, Rev. Richard Maxwell, Edward Guard, and John McKay were elected chairmen of Districts for the first time. Mr. Guard is brother of the Rev. Thos. Guard, of Baltimore.

Two ministers died during the year, Rev. Thomas Meredith and John Carey. And four became Supernumeraries, Rev. J. Donald, Wm. Cather, Samuel Patterson and Benj. Bayley.

Six young members were ordained and the same number were admitted on trial.

The Rev. C. Cruishanks, wrote the pastoral address and the Rev. John D. Powell the letter to the British Conference.

The delegation of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church North, of the U. S. did not arrive, but three ministers of that Church attended as visitors.

The Temperance question received some attention. This subject receives the consideration of ecclesiastical bodies now on this side of the sea. They seem to consider it to be their duty to antagonize it decidedly. There are some active teetotalers in the Conference.

The next Conference will be held at Belfast, July 11 1874.

The Heathen World.

MR. EDITOR: I am truly anxious to know more about the state of the heathen after death. About a year ago I published an article in the Advocate taking the grounds that all heathens are not lost. My article was attacked and ridiculed; but no effort was made to answer it. I am still of the same opinion, and I specially invite the brethren who entertain contrary views to give us the benefit of their opinions and reasonings upon the subject.

The subject at first thought may seem to be one with which our knowledge has little to do, that no matter how little or how much we may know, that knowledge still leaves the state of the heathen unchanged.

All this may be true; yet a correct knowledge of the subject may materially change our conduct toward these people.

If it is true that all who die without the Bible are lost, then a conviction of that fact upon our part creates obligations that we cannot and dare not ignore. If, on the other hand, moral heathens are saved upon the great atoning sacrifice of our Lord Jesus Christ, through the operations of the Eternal Spirit, then the almost unbounded beneficence of the Church in this direction had better be turned into our home church, to aid in the conversion of our home heathens, who we know will be lost if they die impenitent in these Bible lands.

I must not be understood as opposing the generally received opinion that the heathen should have the gospel sent to them. I only contend that not all the heathens are lost, though I admit that a majority may be lost, and that they need the Bible, not as most men contend, to teach them the ideas of right and wrong, but to serve as a motive to prompt them to do the right which they already intuitively know, and to reveal to them higher knowledge which, without a divine revelation, they could never know in our present state.

I humbly believe that many very erroneous opinions arise in the minds of men upon this subject, because they judge from wrong stand points. They look upon the heathen world from the enlightened portions of America and Europe, and somewhat imagine the heathens to be inhabitants of these countries.

But my design in this article is not to enter into a discussion of the question, but simply to invite attention to the subject, and to provoke a brotherly and Christian interchange of ideas upon it.

I trust the Editor will not only permit our articles to have a place in his paper, but that he also will give us the benefit of his views, editorially, upon the subject when he chooses to do so.

A Lesson for the Youth.

MR. EDITOR: While engaged in the business transactions of life, or lost in the giddy whirl-pool of fashion and pleasure, how seldom do we contemplate for a moment the probabilities of death, and the realities of a world to come! How prone are we to crowd our memories with the transitory things that pertain to this life and defer to the last hour of our existence the sad realities of our earthly dissolution! These thoughts were suggested to my mind, Mr Editor, by an almost inexpressible sadness that occurred in our town a few weeks since. A young man of seventeen or eighteen summers resident of this (Cabarrus) county, possessed with all the vigor of manhood, with a warm heart and a cheerful disposition came to Concord and entered upon the duties of life as a druggist clerk, which position he filled for a time, but subsequently become a partner in the business. By a course of strict integrity and politeness to all he soon made friends and won high public esteem.

Thus, while surrounded with friends and the luxuries of life and a bright prospect beaming in the future he became enamoured with, wooed and won the affections of an estimable young lady in a neighboring county which resulted in due time in the holy bonds of wedlock. Now, what more did our friend need to make life happy surrounded with friends and the companion of his bosom for whom he bore the greatest attachment? With a sufficiency of this world's goods to remove every want and with a vigorous constitution, his anticipations (and naturally too) were for much pleasure in time to come. But ere he had entered the threshhold of manhood, and when in the prime of life or the flower of youthful vigor, and before he had become in full possession of his inheritance, he was stricken down by death's unerring arm and his body carried to the tomb, there to rest in quiet slumber until Gabriel's trumpet shall arouse it with all the pale nations of the dead. It was the writer's good fortune to be with, and administer as far as he knew how to the wants of his dying young friend during the last few days of his sickness.

But despite the attention of friends and the skill of physicians the spirit left its urn of clay and took its everlasting flight. Death under any circumstances spreads a gloom, but it seems to me that that of my friend was peculiarly sad,—and to his sorrow-stricken young widow has surely bereaved who only enjoyed his companionship for a few fleeting months, would we tender our heartfelt sympathy, and commend her to that God who "doeth all things well." It matters not what our engagements may be or by what pleasures surrounded, we should think of this matter and be prepared for the summons should the Eternal fiat come forth "cut him down why cumbereth he the ground?" Young man take timely warning, boast not of pride, wealth, constitutional vigor or long life lest death should come as a "thief in the night" and bear your immortal spirit home. Be up then and doing ere the lamp of life grows dim. Toil early and late in the master's vineyard so that when death comes it will be the harbinger of joys yet to come and not the message of eternal misery.

THE FRATERNAL MEETING AT SEA CLIFF.

Bishops Kavanaugh and Doggett.

The following are the speeches delivered by Bishops Kavanaugh and Doggett, at the Fraternal Camp Meeting, which was held at the close of the great Round Lake Camp Meeting, Sea Cliff, on Saturday, July 18. We copy them from the New York Methodist of last week:

ADDRESS OF BISHOP KAVANAUGH.

Bishop Kavanaugh arose and said: Brethren, I feel solemnly impressed with the exercises this morning. We have come before you this evening to represent what God hath wrought. How encouraging is the report of the Methodist Episcopal Church, how refreshing is the report from Canada, how it warms our hearts to hear from those brethren.

I have the honor to represent the Methodist Church South. She is well nigh a twin sister. I believe she is a full twin of the North, and I am happy, Brethren, to inform you that for the last eight or nine years particularly the work of God has been going on most prosperously in the South. The unhappy and ever to be lamented war left our country in a state of very great comparative poverty to what she had been, but I have this to say of her, that even in this disadvantageous circumstance the ministry have been better supported and more churches built than ever I have known before as Dr. McFerrin told the other day. Our ministry are becoming more enterprising and more far reaching in their views and calculations and aims, and spirited in their labors; our episcopacy has been just about at the top of their labor. We have introduced district meetings in connection with our Conferences, and the Bishops, as far as possible, have been requested to attend. We have a discussion over the subject to be sure, but the impatience of our people has almost devoured us from our homes, and we have been given up to the work. I confess to you that I do the most of my reading upon the railroads. I just gather up such scraps as I can, and, as I said, my brethren, when I came here, being partly of what I used to know, I came up to Round Lake camp-meeting to get my shallows filled up. Thank God, my brethren, the stream has been running ever since I have been here, and I feel very full. I have been wondering what it will have on me when I leave. I do expect I will hardly be as grave, as I have been so animated, so refreshed, and shall carry away with me such pleasant recollections of this interval. Dr. Greene said we had fallen in love. I own up to the passion. (Laughter.) I must say, with my honorable brother Greene, that I never spent so happy a week in all my life.

Allow me to say to you, my Northern brethren, that I thought you were a cold people, but I am corrected. I used to think that the preachers here were a little cool and calculating, but I am recovered from that. There is a zeal and a bold, commanding eloquence here that I did not expect to meet, there is a vim and a fire in our ministers that I confess was mysterious to me.

Well, brethren, we are not laboring in vain in the South. Our prosperity has been continuous. These District Conferences of ours require a constant scrutiny into the spirit and condition of our people. They have led to a more real development of the real state of the character than we have adopted. It has disclosed one fact, which I hope may not be true of you. It is a humiliating fact to us. There is less of family religion than we used to have. We have turned the attention of our ministers to the fact, and hope in God that we shall soon be relieved of it. We are laboring hard to correct it; may God give us success. It is very unlike what Methodism was in its origin. Then nearly every man that was recognized as a Methodist would be called upon to pray anywhere.

I have been a little over fifty years in the ministry, and an ecclesiastically something of a mongrel. My father was an Episcopal minister, and my mother was a Methodist. At the age of thirteen I went to live with a Presbyterian minister. When I was converted, I thought when I got to be a man I would lead my mother away from the Methodist. I was inclined toward the Presbyterians, but when I began to study into Methodist doctrins and usages, I found I was a Methodist. Their theology fitted my views exactly, and their experiences filled my breast all full. I went to a Methodist meeting, and there I found humility, and a fervent zeal, which I could not see elsewhere, so I chose that people for my people, and chose their God for my God. I can not claim that I have made the progress that I should, yet God has been with me. And of late I have had a more earnest longing and thirsting after righteousness. Thank God I came to the Round Lake Camp-meeting. I do wish all my brethren were here. Oh, it is heaven on earth begun. If we keep the love we have in our hearts, all will be well, and we shall be the greatest church in the world. I shall never get from under the impressions of this meeting. I realize a joy which is sweet within, our hearts by love together joined. The affection for my Northery brethren has taken deep root in my heart. God grant that it may spread all over the land!

BISHOP DOGGETT'S ADDRESS.

Bishop D. S. Doggett, D. D., of Richmond, Va., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was then introduced by Bishop Janes, and said:

I have just reached the camp ground; I have not recovered from the fatigues of the journey; and more than that, I have been an invalid for the past three weeks. In response to an invitation extended to our Bishops assembled at the General Conference in Louisville by Bro. Hilman, I am present on this occasion.

I determined, God willing, if I could find sufficient interval between the claims of my official duties, to join you as one of the great Methodist families on this great occasion. I made my arrangements accordingly, but during the interval I was taken sick, and quite despaired enjoying the communion and fellowship of this common Methodism. I trust that it is the order of Providence—I think it is—that I am present.

I do not rise under that measure of enthusiasm generated by the occasion to which Bishop Kavanaugh refers, and which he has so largely gathered from intercourse with the brethren. I bring up the rear. I bide my time. I came to obtain a blessing, and I will be willing, if God give me grace according to my ability, to make a humble contribution in the aggregate on this occasion. I feel the demand which Methodism has upon me and the great family to mingle together on any occasion of this sort, and exchange our views and affections to one another. I am a total stranger from the far South; I am looking upon hundreds and thousands of faces that never beheld me in the flesh. And I came a little timidly to this place; but I no sooner put my foot upon the platform than the whole of it vanished like a mist before the sun. The cordiality with which I was greeted, the generous hospitality of the Methodistic type which embraced me at once, made me feel at home. I came to congratulate myself, in the name of the Lord God of Hosts, that so many departments of the Wesleyan household stand represented on this occasion. Distant and different as may be our spheres, and as ignorant as we may be of each other, Methodism has a common Shibboleth and a common dialect; we understand each other in an instant. Our ideas are one upon the great doctrine of the inner life, and the perfect cleansing of the heart by the blood of Christ. I think God for the witness of the Holy Ghost, for that power of regenerating grace that upturns our natures and makes us new creatures in Christ Jesus; and thank God, as a humble representative of Southern Methodism, that I am permitted to stand in your presence as a witness that Methodism bears in the South the consecrated sanction of the Holy Spirit.

Bishop Kavanaugh, my colleague, has sufficiently represented the present state of our work. I confirm all that he has said, and he might have said much more. We have eight Bishops, and they are running the track at the top of their speed. I can testify that there is not a man of them who has not laid his all upon the altar of God and money too, and joined with your own Bishop and representatives of other portions of the great family doing this work of spreading holiness over this great land.

I hope that if I do not catch the early, that I shall catch the latter rains. May heaven give us a good camp-meeting, may the work of God be revived, may souls be revived and multitudes be converted to God ere this great camp-meeting closes. I was converted at a camp-meeting at old Lancaster circuit, in the northern neck of Virginia, then in the Baltimore Conference, and I have never forgotten the impressions of that hour.

As the speaker was closing, he turned and faced the ministers, delivering a closing appeal to them. Bishop Peck grasped his hand warmly and shook it heartily in the presence of the whole congregation. The scene which followed is beyond description the people wept, shouted and clapped their hands, some arose to their feet, and others looked on in breathless silence; we cannot express the glorious power which seemed to rest down upon the people. Bishop Janes arose, and waited until silence had been restored, and then said: Let us bow in silent prayer, that God would bless the Church, South. After which the audience sang with a hearty will, "Together let us sweetly live," &c.

The hearts of many became so happy that it was almost impossible to keep still, so they engaged themselves for a few moments of hand-shaking and giving utterance to their joy by many a shout and smile.

Scandal.

While envy and jealousy and hatred find a home in men's breasts, scandal will be kept going. No circle is free from it, and every one, be he small or a magnate, is apt to be the subject of its attacks, to an extent corresponding with his prominence in society or before the public. No one can hope to pass through life without being subjected to its misrepresentations, suspicions, aspersion and abuse. His acts, however disinterested and noble, will by some ignorant or malicious people, be distorted into enormities, and his motives, however pure, will at times be impugned and denounced.—No one occupies so elevated a position in the estimation and confidence of the world, that the shafts of calumny can not reach him. The more esteemed a man is, the greater envy will he excite, and the more watchful and maligning will be its efforts to pull down the exalted to its own debased level. In society, in politics and in the church, those who are the favorites must endure most misrepresentation. To gain prominence therein is to get in envy's line of vision and afford a target for its poisoned arrows. The enemies, too, of the church, of societies, and of political establishments, find their most effective mode of attack to be the reduction of those who are the representatives and favorites of those institutions. To destroy confidence in the supporters of an institution is, they find, the best way to pull down the institution itself. On this account, the English law throws a special protection against aspersion, around the royalty, nobility, and ministers of government and church, and makes scandalum magnatum a grave offence to be severely punished.

All of us are too prone to accept and pass to others the little bits of scandal that are picked up by ignorance, indiscretion, envy or enmity. We accept them as true when they have little or nothing to recommend them to our belief. However disreputable the source or questionable the shape in which they come, we are apt either to give them a lodgment in our confidence or get rid of them by placing our neighbors in possession of them. A bit of scandal once started on its errand never grows less—on the contrary, vires acquirit eundo. Rumor has been described by the poet, as a monster with as many eyes as feathers on its body, as many ears as eyes, and tongues as ears,—small at first through fear and creeping on the ground, but ere long growing bold and lifting itself into the air which it fills with its rapid flight and hissing sounds;—perching on humble roof and stately tower and carrying dismay and terror to rustics and cottagets, as well as to the dwellers in city palaces.

We should be careful how we encourage a report damaging to the character and reputation of a friend or fellow being, for the work of detraction, once commenced, will end in, we know not how much, ruin and misery. Because a rumor bears the marks of truth, and is consistent with circumstances we know to be true, is no reason why we should decide hastily in its favor. A scandal set on foot is usually furnished by the shrewdness of its author, with all the cloaks and colors of verity. You may not be able to tear them off or peer through them at the deformity within, in a moment, but you may in a day;—a day may not suffice, but a year or longer will. Every one who repeats a false and damaging report, though another be the author, is all but as guilty as he who originates it; for he gives it fresh impetus and force, and lends it an influence which it had not before. To retain in your own breast a rumor that injuriously affects your neighbor can do no harm—to publish it to others will work injury which nothing can repair.

We wish to secure the services of an efficient agent, lady or gentleman, in every community in our Conference, to assist the preachers in canvassing for the ADVOCATE.

An interesting revival is in progress at Ebenezer, on the Wake circuit, under the control of Rev. T. B. Reeks, assisted by Rev. H P. Cole, of this city.

We have a good supply of Quarterly Conference Blanks on hand, which we will furnish Presiding Elders upon application.

We earnestly request all the brethren to use their best endeavors to increase the circulation of the ADVOCATE. A goodly number are actively at work for it, and we trust all will do what they can.

Bishop Cummins has sent a note to Pleasant church, Louisville, Ky., officially admitting that body to the Reformed Episcopal Church.

Good Listeners.

Most men can talk—some slowly, some indifferently, others well, but all who have the use of their tongues love to exercise them. Few can listen well and courteously and long. Some do not listen well through lack of interest in the talker or his subject—some through a habitual wandering of thought and inattention, and others through an anxiety to say something in return. Of these latter, some wish to reply to what is said for the purpose of correcting false notions and arguments advanced by the talker, others through a desire to exhibit their facility of speech and aptness at argumentation, and others to avoid the appearance of stupidity and the presumption of "slowness of speech." The last mentioned are apt to involve themselves in inextricable difficulties and confirm what they hope and intend to rebut One can learn much by attentive listening to others, but nothing by hearing himself talk. It is courteous to listen well, and is a compliment which never fails to please and win the favor of one's companion. On the contrary, to be inattentive, listless and unappreciative, never fails to beget in the mind of him who addresses you a low opinion of your good sense and merits; while to interrupt him with attempts to make yourself heard by wedging remarks between his sentences, impresses him with your utter want of propriety, politeness and good training.

In churches, where we should expect to find the best listeners, in view of the sacredness of the place, the solemnity of the services, and the importance of the message that falls from the lips of the preacher, there is often found the grossest inattention and worst form of listlessness. While the glorious promises or fearful warnings of the gospel are being held out to the church-goers, with all the impressiveness and clearness of thought which the deep anxiety and earnest preparation of the preacher can command, you may find a few listening, but more careless and inattentive. In some comfortable corner you may see nods, but not of approbation, and peace and quiet growing out of soothing sleep rather than the comfort produced by the peaceful message of the pulpit. Some are gazing at their neighbors, surveying their toilets and "checking through" their airs and bonnets "with critical inspection." Others though they gaze intently upon the speaker, and seemingly catch his every word, in reality hear nothing, but are thinking of their farms, their houses, their merchandise, their clients. Some men develop their most important business plans in the quiet of God's house and devise schemes of worldly pleasure and plots of revenge, when their eternal interests are engaging the heart and tongue of the man of God.

It is a poor return for the labors, study, and anxiety of the minister, and still more ungrateful and sinful one for the offered privileges of the gospel, bought with the blood and sufferings of Christ, to have a dull ear and cold, unmoved mind and heart, when in the temple of worship.

War of Races.

Many have been the predictions that the totally dissimilar characters of the white and black races of this country, together with the jealousies and insolence of the negroes, would produce a conflict between the two races. In those sections where the negroes are largely predominant, their insolence and barbarous conduct has brought about much and serious altercation. In one or two instances, South Carolina has been the scene of race difficulties; in Georgia attempts have been made but promptly quelled; in Louisiana conflicts have been frequent and bloody, and too recent to need recalling. In Mississippi, also, there have been frequent disturbances and we have to chronicle other and recent difficulties of which Austin, Miss., was the scene last week.

These difficulties, though in some, have not in all instances been the result of political excitement, but generally seem to have been engendered by the animosity existing between the two races. Of this nature was the cause of the difficulties in Austin last week. A private difficulty involved the friends of the original parties until the white and black citizens of the whole town were arrayed on the "color line." Whites and negroes rushed from the country-villages and farms to take part in the struggle, and reinforcements of men, arms and supplies were called for from distant points. One or two ship loads of volunteers, provisions and artillery were despatched from Memphis, Tenn., in answer to a call from General Chalmers, who was in command of the whites. Many persons of both races were killed and wounded.

We earnestly deprecate the ill-feeling between the races that results so harmfully. In many cases, if not all, it can be attributed to the bad influence that selfish and interested men have exerted over the negroes, for personal and political ends—the attempts they have made to estrange the negroes from their former owners and best friends. Upon the whole, the colored race, suddenly relieved from the shackles of slavery and clothed with the novel privileges of freedom, has conducted itself well—much better than most races, under similar circumstances, would have done. Many allowances must be made for them on account of their ignorance, inexperience and poverty, but they have yet to learn that their interests are almost identical with those of the Southern whites. They must learn, too, that they can only deserve and gain the respect and confidence of the whites by gaining intelligence and refinement and practising virtue and industry;—that being equal with the whites in the enjoyment of suffrage and the protection of the laws, they have all the rights that they can demand as citizens; and that the recognition of their claims to anything else, must await the lapse of time, the destruction of race prejudice, and their own improvement in intelligence and morals.

Our Missions.

The Richmond Advocate submits the following timely remarks on the all important question of Missions and Missionary labors. The whole church should be at prayer for a revival of the Missionary spirit in our borders, among our preachers and people.

"It pains us to write this heading. As a Church, we ought to be ashamed of our mission work. We have a membership of 676,000. Many of our people are wealthy, and a vast number in easy circumstances It is plain that we can do a great deal more than we have done. And we must do it, or fall under the heavy displeasure of the Master. A declining missionary zeal shows a declining Church. Is this our condition? If so, every member should awake, arise and ask, What am I doing to extend the kingdom of Christ in the world? What am I doing to bring on the universal reign of my Saviour? Can I meet him in the judgment and receive the plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant!" Oh, let all our members think on these things. They will bear much earnest and prayerful thought.

"Our Missions!" where are they! What are they compared with our ability? Let us see. In China, with her 100,000,000 of heathens, we have two men. In Mexico, we have two men. And this is the sum total of our foreign work And all of a Christian Church of nearly 700,000 members, with four men in the great Mission field! Shall we remain contented with this showing? If so, we shall furnish the proof that we lack the true zeal of a Christian Church. Christianity is a grand missionary movement. Christ came as a missionary, the apostles were missionaries, the great leaders of the different reformations and revivals were missionaries.

Methodism, in her earlier days, in the ministry and in the laity, was pervaded by the missionary spirit. "The world is my parish," said John Wesley. Into his preachers, both in England and America, he infused the same spirit, and they were all missionaries. Let us not lose this great distinctive feature of our Church. No Mission work in the world has been blessed like that of the Methodists. Never, never should we surrender the glory of being a missionary Church.

Brethren and friends, let us pray and labor for a revival of the missionary spirit. Let all the preachers in every charge in city and country prepare and preach missionary sermons to the people until they are fully aroused to a sense of their duty. Not less than a quarter of a million of money should come into our missionary treasury this year. The people have it; will they give it, for the sake of Jesus and for the salvation of a perishing world?

Dr. Curry, in the New York Christian Advocate, in an able editorial on Preaching, says:

The great business of preaching is to teach and to persuade, and effectiveness in this is the one crowning excellence of the pulpit. The matter to be taught is just what is read in the Bible, and, therefore, to read the Bible to the people with clear, and plain, and forcible expositions, is the true calling of the minister. And yet we seldom hear any thing of the kind. Even preaching itself is most effective when it is largely expository. In all pulpit labors the whole discourse should bristle with evangelic truth; the doctrines of Christ crucified, risen, and exalted, should be perpetually bursting out, accompanied with earnest appeals in warning, and exhortations, and ever blessed promises. Thus, and only thus, may the minister hope to present every man to whom he is permitted to minister perfect in Christ Jesus. The preacher whose people have not so learned the Gospel should distrust himself and his methods, and earnestly inquire after the cause of his miserable failure.

We acknowledge an invitation from Dr. Bucknall to partake of a dinner given to the members of the city press at his excellent Hotel, the Yarboro' House. We were unable to attend, but appreciate the kindness of the excellent host. The Yarboro' has been recently remodeled and refurnished and is now one of the handsomest, most convenient and best kept hotels in the South. It receives a large patronage and once having stopped with the Doctor, one will wish to do so again.

MR. EDITOR: Please say that our 4th Quarterly Meeting and dedication will be at Macon the 5th Saturday and Sunday in August. We invite our old pastors and the public generally to attend. Yours, &c.,

S. V. HOYLE.

Mass temperance meetings are held in Bloomington every Sabbath evening, just prior to the hour for service in the churches, under the auspices of the Ladies' League.

Thunder in the West.

MR. EDITOR: I have carefully read the articles of Dr. Redford and yourself relative to your interests at the Publishing House. As your good sense of propriety, as well as your "good taste," will not allow you to publish extracts from the brethren expressive of their approbation of your course in this controversy. I hope you will permit me to express my own views, and I know them to be the views of the brethren both clerical and lay, with whom I have conversed. The sensitiveness of the Doctor is but too apparent to every reader of the Raleigh and Nashville Advocates. If the real cause is not misapprehended by large numbers, that which provoked this controversy was the bare statement of a fact which did unquestionably exist, viz: That small amounts of books could be bought from Northern book-dealers cheaper than they could be purchased at Nashville.

It matters not why, nor how, this was so. We are glad that our good brother, Dr. Redford, was doing the best he could. We always believed him to be a good and true man. But if the interests of Methodism in North Carolina cannot be cared for as well from Nashville as from other sources, we can't help it. Yet every man must put his hand to his mouth and seal his lips fast forever! If he, with a number of catalogues before him, together with the experience of hundreds, should say that a book could be purchased cheaper anywhere else than at Nashville, he is disloyal—an invet erate foe—anticipating hearty laughs over the ruins of one of the chiefest institutions of Southern Methodism!

Recently thunder has been answering thunder between the points of Raleigh and Nashville, till we begin to suspect there is a cloud somewhere. Where is it? We fear that which is heard from Raleigh is but the echo of rumblings in the air about Nashville. There is at least the cloudy drapery of inconsistency in the West.

Our Book Agent tells us in his last article that, by the request of the brethren, he sells to large book dealers at 40 per cent off, that he may suit the convenience of those who wish to purchase in small amounts. Then what grounds has he or any one else for complaint? Let the preachers of the N. C. Conference buy books where they can get them most conveniently and on the best terms. We were glad that you, in your last, asked the Dr. the question: Why he could not furnish us with cheaper books at a paying profit, if he could circulate so large a paper at so low a price. Will you give us the price of book binding in your city, (Raleigh)? It must be cheaper in Nashville, where everything is cheap, save books.

MR. EDITOR: I congratulate you on the restoration of your health, and your return to the duties of your office.

I am glad to know that the Advocate is growing in public favor. Always a friend to the enterprise, I have reason to be better pleased with it of late than ever. I like the positive, spirited tone which it is assuming. I like its boldness and independence—I like "dash."—I like enterprise, I like "widawakitiveness." I like a bold enterprising, wide-awake Newspaper.

Your position in regard to the management of the Publishing house, is bound to meet the approval of the church generally. It is well taken and ably maintained.

The spirit which you have shown in the controversy with Dr. Redford cannot be too highly commended.

You have dealt plainly, positively, yet respectfully and kindly, while you have discharged faithfully a delicate duty and done a real good. I do not think that the Dr. has any ground for complaint, or that the interests of the Publishing House have suffered.

The public have a right to know how things are done at headquarters, and no agent has a right to assume an attitude of "bluff," however successful in his plans and upright in his purposes.

I have confidence in the capacity and integrity of the great and good men who have charge of our affairs about Nashville, nor would I for one moment lose sight of the great services which Dr. Redford, especially, has rendered the church; but I have not parted with the privilege of believing after all that they are men, that they are liable to err, and that it is our right to point out those errors when we see them; and insist upon their correction.

HUM.

August 14th, 1874.

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: I have watched your controversy with Dr. Redford with interest, and am constrained to say, since reading your issue of this date, that you have by large odds the advantage of the Dr. And what is the beauty of the whole thing, you have gotten it by fair, open and candid reasoning. I felt that I wanted to say this much to you, and while I do so, I but express the sentiments of many others in this locality. We are all glad you have had the candor to say so well what ought to have been said long ago.

To the Secretaries of the Mission Board

I send you cheering news of our work in the City of Mexico.

1. As to the protection of Protestant Missions, brother Davis writes: "I see by this morning's Monitor (a Daily published in Mexico) that two more of the Stephens' murderers have been apprehended, tried, and condemned to death. One or two more charged with active complicity, have been arraigned for trial. It was reported some days since that several of those condemned had been reprieved. The same paper reported that the two noble Mexican editors who came out so boldly in defense of the martyr Stephens, had been the one poisoned and the other kidnapped. I am glad, for the credit of the better class of Romanists, to be able to say that this is not true, and that on the majority of Mr. Stephen's colleague, the Rev. Wm. Watkins.

"Whatever may the result of these arrests and trials I desire to repeat again that I am persuaded the Mexican Government has acted sincerely and honestly in the premises: Personal, social, political, religious, and moneyed, influences have been, and may be, brought to bear in any one of your States to defeat the ends of justice, and as well might President Grant be condemned for such laiture as to condemn President Lerdo for a like misfortune."

2. As to the condition of our work materially, I have received from D. a very excellent drawing of our chapel, which is being enlarged and fronted with some expression worthy of the noble Church it represents. He writes, under date of May 26: "Our church attracts a great deal of attention. The door arches are nearly completed. It will present a beautiful front. We have now twenty-five men at work." He has for advice one of the best architects in the city, Mr. Baggally, an Englishman, who, for twenty years, was at the head of the School of Fine Arts in Mexico. The house, lot, and all, when completed, will not exceed $7 000.

It is almost impossible to rent a room for preaching purposes in this city. An excellent one has been offered for sale at $3,000. Terms: $1,000 cash, and the rest on time, $100 each month, without interest. The room is, I suppose, 70x70—part of an old cathedral. The ceiling is of square panels, with much of the gilt still on—possibly 200 years old; situated ten or fifteen squares from any Protestant church. It is now used as a school room for pupils who would most likely become a part of the congregation.

Is there no Church or Conference in our Methodism that will put down this $1,000 and be responsible for the purchase of this new center in the City of Mexico? Brother Daves presses me for an answer, and I most earnestly call the attention of St. Louis, Baltimore, Richmond, Nashville, Atlanta, and other of our strongholds, to this concrete method of declaring missionary enterprise.

3. The number of men at work. Brother Daves writes, under date of June 19: "I have at work now seven missionaries, counting the lady teacher. * * * I am satisfied that a letter from you to the public in reference to my school of now sixty scholars, and the advocacy of my plan for sending young men to colleges and schools, would do immense good."

I am happy to tell him that Rev. Tom Brown, of Woodville, Miss., is teaching a first-class private school, and offers to take a Mexican youth and educate him for missionary work, if such can be forwarded. He continues: "I wrote you last week of two young Mexican preachers proposing to go to the United States to learn English and to receive ordination."

I am sorry to add, in this connection, that our dear Brother Hernandez has been attacked with a severe paralyzing rheumatism, which has rendered him nearly useless. He writes, asking the prayers of the Churches and the preachers for his recovery. He fully sustains the first impression which Bishop Marvin received of his character as a truly converted, noble man. He has the confidence of both Americans and Mexicans as a true man, full of the Holy Ghost.

God is blessing our work, in the City of Mexico, and on the Mexican border. We need a good deal of money to sustain it, and go forward. Brother Daves has applications for occupying new fields, which are very inviting and pressing. He proves himself to be preeminently adapted to the delicate and important charge committed to him in Christ.

Truly yours

J. C. KEENER

Revival Intelligence.

Rev. A. A. Boshamer, in charge of Henderson circuit, writes:

"During the past week we enjoyed a very precious revival season at Tabernacle, on this circuit, which was the result of protracting the services of our usual quarterly meeting. Rev. Wm. H Bobbitt, our beloved Presiding Elder, was with us several days, and labored faithfully and efficiently for the salvation of souls. Eighteen persons professed conversion, and the people of God were greatly built up in the most holy faith.

May God continue to manifest his loving power in our midst!"

BRO. BOBBITT: On last Sunday evening, I closed a ten days meeting at Rocky Ridge, 3 miles from Concord, resulting in a number of conversions, and 19 accessions to the church. The meeting could have held been through another week with proportionate results, but I had no ministerial help and was compelled to close.

Methodism is doing a great work in this community, indeed. She is moving to the front; and a few more years of hard labor will give her an influence in this country equal to what she has any where. But for facts and figures, you must wait until this Fall.

Very truly.

D. R. BRITTON.

Concord N. C. April 12th, 1874.

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: We have just closed a meeting of several days continuance at Mt. Zion, Cary circuit, where we had a glorious revival of the work of grace. The church was greatly refreshed and blessed; cold hearts were made warm, and seven souls professed faith in Christ. Two of them were already members. Four persons connected themselves with the church; a number of penitents at the altar, and many persons deeply impressed, and doubtless were near the yielding point, when we had to close our meeting to attend the Quarterly Conference.

Our dear brother Smoot was with us and preached as a man of God.

Yours truly,

T. B. REEKS.

MR. EDITOR: Why is it the Liturgy is not introduced more generally in the Methodist Episcopal Church?—This question appears to me particularly pertinent, as it is known that the great and good Mr. Wesley, as early as 1784, drew up a Liturgy and recommended it to the church in America.

The Liturgy, or "Sunday Service," is published at our Book Concern in Nashville, under a revision of our Bishops, and its use is left optional with our churches, yet from some cause it has been introduced comparatively in very few congregations in the Atlantic States of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church.

Hoping my inquiry may elicit from you and other prominent members of the church satisfactory reasons for the use of the same, I shall await with interest the result.

LAYMAN.

Religious World

During the late heated term the churches in Greenville, Illinois, held union services in the courtyard, and "passed evening service altogether.

The Reformed Episcopal Church in the United States has twenty-one churches and sixteen thousand members.

The Jewish Synagogue, Montgomery, Alabama, is to be enlarged by 22 feet to its length.

The women-preachers who officiate in the various parts of the United States number nearly forty. A few of them are Universalists and Unitarians, but the most of them are Methodists and Quakers.

Bishop Cox disapproves of church lobbying, and so has declined to attend the church congress at New York, which meets just before the general convention of the Episcopal Church.

The California Conference M. E. Church has a Preachers' Mutual Society. Rev. Mr. Gibson, the Secretary, says that he has paid $400 into the hands of Mrs. Meyers, whose husband died in Stockton a week or two ago.

The New Church, (Swedenborgian,) has in this country ninety organizations, sixty-one church edifices, and 18,666 sittings. In the last twenty years the church edifices have multiplied by three, and the sittings by three and a third.

A Baptist church has been organized in Graham, Alamance co., and endeavors are being made to build a house of worship. Mr. Jas. A. Graham writes to the Religious Herald, of Richmond, for assistance from Virginia Baptists, in the erection of the church.

Full statistics have been published of the results of the labors of the Messrs. Moody and Sankey, in Glasgow. Between the beginning of the year and May, services were held in 366 congregations, in the city and surrounding country. The number of converts was 3,133, of whom 1,660, were men or boys.

An Oxford under-graduate was asked to point out which were the greater and which were the lesser prophets. For a moment this was a "poser" to the young hopeful. He soon rallied, however, and answered, with grave deliberation, "I never like to make invidious distinctions."

The ten thousand Baptists in West Virginia at the close of the war have grown to more than 26,000.

The Nashville Christian Advocate says that Prof. Lupton expects to leave that city for Europe on the 25th of August, to be absent six or eight months, in the interest of the Vanderbilt University. His head-quarters will be Heidelburg, Germany. He will take measures to have the Vanderbilt well furnished with everything necessary for instruction in Chemistry.

The new Conference, Denver, holds its session at Denver City, August 27. Bishop Pierce is to preside. The brethren will rejoice to learn that Dr. McFerrin, the Constitutional Secretary of the Board of Missions—by appointment of the Board of Missions—is to accompany the Bishop to Denver, Columbia, Pacific, and Los Angeles Conferences.

We learn that the improvements on the Medical Department of the vanderbilt University are completed. The whole building has been renovated and remodeled. The dissecting rooms have been rearranged upon a new plan, and every facility for teaching medicine will be afforded to students. The Faculy expect a very large class at the opening in October.

OUR Church at Mesopotamia, in Pacolet Circuit, South Carolina Conference, Rev. J. J. Newberry, pastor, has enjoyed a season of refreshing There have been 20 or 30 accessions and as many conversions. The Rev. F. F. Smith has just closed a meeting at Cannon, on Cherokee Circuit, resulting in about 20 accessions.

Extracts from the Religous Press.

Men's temporal affairs have great importance in the Divine economy. God has use in his plans for all the occupations of honest industry, and all the arts which improve and beautify life. He intends men to have houses, lands, cattle, merchandise, mills, shops, factories, arts and sciences. He does not, therefore, intend them to be idle. "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," is his rule. He requires his people to work and to pray. His providence never smiles on the thriftless, indolent man, on the mere spectator of other men's enterprise and thrift. He approbates well tilled lands, good fences and well kept herds. He expects men who have strength and opportunity to acquire, to be prepared to be dispensers of comforts, distributers of bounties, his stewards to gather and use for the well being of men and the Divine glory, the wealth which his providence has put within their reach.

Christ's kingdom is not of this world—not merely earthly and temporal—but, nevertheless, it is now in this world. The nations of the earth include in their future the future of that kingdom The Church rises and falls with the nations to which it ministers; its progress and triumphs can not greatly exceed theirs. Hence, the truest, noblest Christian is the truest, noblest citizen.—Western Christian Advocate.

What we want is more clear, ringing Anglo Saxon in the pulpit, and less artificiality of language and voice which makes the preacher seem to be either an improved automaton or a cachinnans stop taken out of the organ and set up in the public. This dismal wailing which we sometimes meet with, mixed up with weak metaphor and redundancy of speech, is often put forth as the offspring of culture; but culture does not acknowledge the wayward child." This reverend gentleman is right. More nature and less artificiality among the clergymen would tend to swell the size of their congregations and increase the number of converts. —Talmage, in Christian at Work.

We should avoid the appearance of evil for the sake of our example and influence, though it is not the real reason of the injunction. It is generally taken so, however, and this interpretation often leads to miscehief. It is generally admitted, that it is well to avoid doing what seems to be wrong. Yet there are independent spirits who argue that it is nobody's business what a man does, if he knows what he is about. If scandal arise he contends that people have no right to talk so much, and they better mind their own business. All such reasoning may ease a conscience easily opinted, but it does not go far with men or God. Every man's influence is a talent for whose increase he is held strictly accountable. If it does not increase as a force for good, but decreases through the folly of the man, his Lord will take away that which he seemeth to have. Society is framed of God, and its universal disposition to lose confidence in the man who abstains not from the appearance of evil can be nothing but the voice of God saying, "Take away this man's possession."—Religious Telescope.

His whole business life has been marked with strict integrity and fair dealing to all. He is receiving and is justly entitled to the patronage of our people. Orders from a distance promptly filled.

The North Carolina Election.

North Carolina has always claimed to be a democratic State, and no one is surprised that she has proved it. The republican party carried the State in 1872 only by those extreme and exceptional exertions which are made in Presidential elections. The heavy pressure of the administration having been withdrawn, North Carolina takes her place among the conservative States of the South and is likely to keep it unless the radical party becomes much worse than it was in 1872, which is impossible, or, much better, which is improbable. The administration cannot force this through again, and it is not likely it can per-made by for the victory of the democracy is decisive. A majority much larger than any one had reason to expect, a democratic Legislature and seven democratic Representatives out of the eight which North Carolina sends to Congress, are facts which should make it impossible to change her political complexion in the next two years. The victors have the situation in their own control. They can entrench themselves impregnably if they will only practice honesty and economy, and enforce in the government those principles of reform which have almost disappeared from public affairs in the South This is what the conservatives must do if they would use to their opportunity. They should strive to make North Carolina everything which South Carolina is not. It has not matter-of-fact, business men in the legislature, but simply reckless demagogues. The great Southern State of the south, which can control negro majorities, remains untouched by this victory It only shows and in a few degree than the democratic gains in Tennessee that the Civil Rights bill is weakening the republican party in the South and that the attempts of the North to force it through Congress have inspired the white Southern people with a new and energetic spirit of resistance. It will be interesting to watch the effect of these democratic successes upon the third term question and to see if they may not suggest to the South the inquiry whether General Grant is absolutely necessary to her restoration.—N. Y. Herald.

TO THE

Wholesale Trade.

Judging the future by the past, we enter with confidence upon this our new enterprise, of separating our Wholesale from our Retail Trade, by having a separate and distinct House for each; and in doing so we flatter ourselves that it will not only meet the approval of our numerous customers, but that an "Exclusive Wholesale House" will bring us a large influx of new trade, and of a character not heretofore enjoyed.

It must be obvious to every buyer that a strictly "Wholesale House," arranged and adapted for that Trade only, with a corps of experienced Wholesale Salesmen, within stock carefully selected for that Trade only, and moreover, the facilities for quoting and coming to contact with retail buyers. Such a house, we assert, must and will commend itself to the trade.

Four years ago we established the "Retail House" in Charlotte a wholesale mart and ours "The Wholesale House." We now have the grand satisfaction of seeing it an accomplished fact.

We now call attention in the fact that we have converted our superior three-ply an exclusive Wholesale House, where you can find all lines of goods necessary for a country store, to wit: Dry-goods Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Notions, Groceries, Hardware, Millinery, all in complete lines, bought in large quantities and from the very first hands.

Our stock is now arriving, and will be complete about the 1st of September, and will be the largest of any here, the presumption of others to the contrary notwithstanding. We respectfully invite your personal inspection, or write to us for circular.

Very truly yours,
WITTKOWSKY & RINTELS.

—:o:—

RETAIL

Now, a few words about that. We now occupy the superb house heretofore so favorably known as the Messrs. Bean, Brown & Co.'s Dry Goods House, to carry on our Retail business, and as "Excelsior" is, and has always been, our motto, we claim also in that line to excel in stock, to excel in lowness of prices, and to excel generally. We will, in that house, have a corps of thirty Salesmen and Sales-Ladies, all experienced, affable, and obliging.

We will make the Millinery branch a specialty.

CARY COTTON GIN.

The Latest, Best and Cheapest.

I offer to the public the Latest Improved Cotton Gin, as well as the cheapest. The following certificates from well known gentlemen, will be more satisfactory than any thing I can say.

NEAR CARY, N. C., Nov., 12th, 1873.

This is to certify that I am using one of the Cary Gins made by W. M. Sorrell, of Cary, N. C., and that I am well pleased with it as I would cheerfully recommend it to any one wanting a good gin.

A. B. YATES.

CARY, N. C., May 22nd, 1874.

I take pleasure in saying that the fifty Saws Clinton John I purchased from Mr. W. M. Sorrell, known as the Cary Gin, for better work than any Gin I have ever used, though costing from 50 to 100 per cent. less money. I think any person in want of a Gin will save money by purchasing the Cary Gin, its performance has been entirely satisfactory to me. I can cheerfully recommend it to others.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,

Staunton, Va.,

Will begin its 25th annual session Sept. 12th, 1874. Rev. W. A. Harris, D. D., President, with an able corps of twenty-three Teachers and Officers. Modern languages taught and spoken by European Teachers. Music by seven Professors and Teachers.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world. Its marked effect in the rapid promotion of the physical health and vigor of our pupils. Those who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, chills and chronic diseases, are entirely restored.

Buildings elegant—famed by the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery, uniting in one of the most delightful College homes in the Union.

The last session, one hundred and eleven young ladies attended this school, as boarding pupils from fifteen Southern States.

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONIALS.

From Bishop D. S. Doggett, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, located in Staunton, Virginia, under the Presidency of Rev. W. A. Harris, is, in my judgment, one of the best Institutions, for young ladies in the South. I have occasion to know and appreciate the value by the advantages enjoyed by one of my daughters, now a pupil there. It possesses all the facilities of a thorough female education. Its personal accomodations are all that can be desired for health and comfort, or taste. No location could be more delightful, scenery more magnificent; no atmosphere more salubrious. It is now in a state of great prosperity. I do not hesitate to recommend it to the patronage of all who wish their daughters to receive the benefits of a useful and ornamental culture.

D. S DOGGETT.

From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the Church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music, advantages are offered of very high order. The most talented Professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department excellent. The School is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

From Prof. F. H. Smith, M. A. L. L. D. University of Va.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, at Staunton, deserves the high success it enjoys. It has a good corps of teachers, a beautiful situation, and excellent management. During [illegible] daughter under Mr. Harris' care, during the present session, my observation leads me to prefer that school to be one of the best of Female Seminaries which adorn our State.

FRANCIS H. SMITH.

Farmers' Girls

Up in the early morning,
Just at the peep of day,
Stealing the milk in the dairy,
Turning the cow away—
Sweeping the floor in the kitchen,
Making the bed in the attic,
Washing the breakfast dishes,
Dusting the parlor chairs.

Brushing the crumbs from the pantry,
Hunting for eggs in the barn,
Roasting the veal for dinner,
Spinning the stocking yarn,
Spreading the snow white linen
Down on the bushes below,
Romancing every meadow,
Where the red strawberries grow.

Churning the rich golden butter,
Skimming the creamy cream,
Ranging the pales in the entry,
Down in the milk room to skim,
Feeding the geese and the poultry,
Making the puddings and pies,
Jogging the cradle once in a while,
Driving away the flies.

Grace in every motion,
Music in every tone,
Beauty of form in the future,
Thousands to right the wrong—
Checks that rival the roses,
Teeth the whitest in pearls,
One of the earthly problems is worth
A score of your gaudy girls.

"He Gets Drunk."

"He's the smartest young man in our class."

"Yes, but he gets drunk."

"O, but he's so fine looking, so noble, and so talented withal. His composition yesterday was the very best in our division. He writes splendidly. They say he's written for a magazine. Only think of it! written for a magazine, no older than he is, and not out of school yet. Won't he be a great man, though, some day?"

"No, I don't think he will."

"Why not?"

"He gets drunk."

"O, that's nothing, a good many smart men get drunk. Every young man has his wild cuts to sow, and because a fellow gets a little boozy once in a while, I wouldn't condemn him forever. Quite likely he'll on grow it when he gets older and sees the folly of it."

"More likely that will outgrow him, and as to his getting a little boozy, I'm afraid he was a good deal so when the boys found him the other night beside the walk, and had to carry him to his room, dodging around street corners, and skulking through by ways, so that none of the Professors would see him. I tell you a person that drinks at all is not to be depended on. The only young man that I have any confidence in are those who let intoxicating liquors entirely alone."

"Well, I don't care, he's good and smart, anyhow, and I like him."

"I don't, he gets drunk."

So the conversation ran on between two schoolmates who were talking just ahead of me. Ah, how those words, "He gets drunk," rang in my ears. Possessed of a noble manhood and a glorious intellect, blessed with the greatest and best of God's gifts, having the love and approbation of teachers, admired and looked up to by associates, the pride and hope of a fond father, intertwined in the heart and life of a doting mother, united in close and tender bonds with brothers and sisters, holding in his hand the honor and good name of the institution with which he is connected, of the society in which he mingles, and yet "gets drunk."

What a Little One May Do.

There was once a little English girl, only just three years old, living in India. This little girl used to go out walking with an old Hindu servant, and one day, as they passed a ruined heathen temple, the old man turned aside to make his "salaam," or bow, to the dumb idol.

"Sammy," asked the child, wondering, "what for you do that?"

"O, missy," said he, that my god."

"Your god!" cried the little girl, "your god, Sammy. Why, your god can no see, no can hear, no can walk, your god stone. My God see every thing, my God make you, make me make every thing."

The old man listened, for he loved the child, and though he still bowed down to the idol, he would often let her talk to him about God. At last he heard that she was going far away from him.

"What will poor Sammy do," he said one day, "when missy go to England? Sammy no mother, no father."

"O, Sammy," said the little one quickly, "if you love my God He will be your father and mother too."

The old man, with tears in his eyes, promised to love her God. And so she taught him her prayers, and very soon he learned to read the Bible, and became a good Christian man. So you see even this little bit of a child could be God's messenger. She had the honor of leading a soul to Christ. Try and be like her.

The Labor Problem in the South

The Baltimore Gazette thus reviews the question of labor in the Southern States:

"The South has been discussing the labor problem, immigration, capital, large and small farms, different crops, State inducements to foreign laborers, and private energy and enterprise directed to the same end. The solution appears no nearer than before. We in Maryland are no better off than our neighbors to the southward except in one very important respect. We have no predominant negro element to assimilate. We leave Maryland and Virginia out of the question, and ask what is the far South to do. It needs capitalists of large or small means; it wants skilled mechanics; it has a soil that will support tens of thousands of additional agricultural workers, and its necessity is that all these should be whites. It has the blacks and it has done the best with them; but they have been found by no means that

Honest peasantry, its country's pride,
Whose place, once lost, can never be supplied.

And yet, the white and black, will they mingle, ever exist side by side as laborers, compete with each other on an equality? Will the climate of the Gulf States suit the foreign workmen, the unaccustomed food, the distance between planter and laborer, the lowness of wages, the difficulty of purchasing lands in suitable situations? What answer is to be given to the difficulties?"

SWEET POTATOES AND FERTILIZERS.—Mr. E. H. Judd, of South Hadley, Massachusetts, in an essay read before the Franklin Harvest Club, said:

"After experimenting with most kinds of fertilizers and methods of planting and cultivating the potato, I have solved the problem to my satisfaction. I am confident that the best results can be obtained on the majority of our soils by first plowing; then thoroughly pulverizing and drilling at least two inches deep. Then apply in the manure of first quality at the rate of five cords per acre, after dropping the seed, in bottom of drill, the manure to be put top of seed, and only leaving one eye on a piece, and putting only one piece in a hill. Having tried different sized tubers, I am satisfied that the larger the potato you use for seed the greater will be both crops. Two different years I have experimented by cutting my potatoes into pieces, leaving only one eye on a piece, and putting only one piece in a hill, with the following results. In the spring of 1868 I took one bushel of potatoes and cut them into pieces, leaving only one eye on a piece, and planted them one piece in a hill. They went over nearly one third of an acre. The following fall I harvested from that field one hundred and five bushels of merchantable potatoes. I have since tried the experiment of putting in two eyes, but have diminished the yield nearly one third."

CANNING OF VEGETABLES.—The cleanliest bath in which the cans of vegetables are immersed before their final sealing is used only for the purpose of getting a temperature higher than the boiling point of water. The necessity for this high temperature is due to the fact that the air contained in the can and its contents is more thoroughly expelled, and if the can is entirely void of air there can be no change in the condition of its contents. A boiling heat will expel all the air, but longer time is needed than with a higher temperature. For domestic purposes the bath of boiling water is sufficient. It is only necessary to cook vegetables (without salt) in the can, to solder the cover on perfectly air tight, to make a pin hole in the cover, and then immerse the can in a boiling water bath without covering the upper parts, and, when it has been exposed to the boiling heat for fifteen minutes, to seal with a drop of solder upon the pin hole.

BARREN FIG TREES.—There are a great many fig trees all over the State that will bear two and three crops of figs each year, but will drop off when half grown. Nothing will make such trees bear, let them grow where they will, and almost every one that has such trees thinks they cannot be grafted. But they can, and budded too. Have to graft on the small limbs all over the top of the tree. Will not grow to saw off a large limb to graft. The best time to graft the fig is from the first of February to the twenty-fifth. Last March I set some fig grafts on one of my trees; parts of them grew well; more would have grown if I had set them earlier. Some of the grafts grew over four feet. Last fall I picked ripe figs from these grafts; also where the grafts don't grow there will be young shoots growing that can be budded in the summer.—F. River, in Pacific Rural Press.

CLOTHES which are put into boiling water when washed will certainly become yellow. They should be allowed to come to a boil slowly and boil twenty minutes.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

An Unwholesome Season.

The closing days of winter and the early days of spring are very trying in the Middle and Southern States, and are to be regarded unpleasantly even by the more robust and vigorous. Nothing can be more uncongenial to the nerves or more depressing to the spirits than damp, chilling winds, fogs and cold rains, and of such unwelcome visitors we have a superabundance at this season. Common prudence suggests, therefore, the propriety of fortifying the system against these insidious enemies of health and comfort, and the experience of more than a quarter of a century points to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as the all-sufficient sanitary safeguard under such unfavorable circumstances. An accompanying vital strength and energy is what is required to meet and overcome the unhealthy elements now present in the atmosphere. This they eliminate more promptly than any remedy acquired by taking from two to three doses of Hostetter's Bitters daily during the winter and spring months. The natures of the celebrated restorative is well known to the public. It is composed of an ale of choice quality, delicately aromatic, medicated with the juices and virtues of the most effective tonic, alterative, and diuretic vegetable roots and herbs known to medical science. To the combination of these are added in due proportions suitable for neutralizing excess of acidity, and directed to act on the general system, the bowels, liver and kidneys, with the least possible irritation. Every ingredient is of the purest and best quality, and the compound is skilfully prepared by experienced chemists, which on the score of purity alone is a guarantee of the genuineness of the article.

LAND SALE NEAR TRINITY COLLEGE.

On the 12th day of August next, with a credit of six months, I will sell at public outcry upon the premises a tract of land containing Ohio hundred acres, lying west of Trinity, and known as the Brown place. The land crosses near the College Camp, is in one hundred per acre wood land, dwelling house, barn, stable, and all the usual buildings. This is a very valuable property and offers a rare opportunity for a good investment to any man who wants a producing farm, or desires to live near the College. The dwelling is about three-fourths of a mile from the College Campus.

Historical Society.

Mr. Editor: I am glad that brother Hook Read has taken the pains to get up the facts about the first Conference held at Green Hill's. The facts will be filed away for the use of the Society. I have received some important facts from Bro. J. W. Lewis in reference to the locality of Meshach's meeting house. The document referred to by Bro. O. M. Sherrill I think I shall be able to get.—Bro. Henry Asbury, of Rock Spring circuit, has put me on the track of much important material in reference to the early history of Methodism in Shelby District. Prof. W. C. Doub has offered, through me to our Society, the Historical manuscript of his father, Rev. P. Doub, D. D. I regard this by far the most valuable contribution yet made to the Society. I hope the brethren will be active and diligent in searching for the desired information in their respective localities. It requires a combined effort to get up the material. It is comparatively easy for a brother, when in a neighborhood where Methodism first began, to get up the facts. We need more enterprise, more enthusiasm, more zeal for the ancestral glory of our pioneering fathers, who worked so hard to hew down the forest trees, break up the new ground and sow it down with gospel seed. We have entered into these harvest fields wi h our looking back with feelings of gratitude to the heroic toilers of the past who acted the noble part of John the Baptist in preparing the way for us. Shall we let the noble, self-sacrificing deeds of these hardy pioneers sleep in the grave of oblivion? Shall our children be unable to relate to future generations how and by whom Methodism was first introduced into our State? Shall the Presbyterians, Baptists, Lutherans and other churches in N. C. embalm their deeds in History, and the Methodists so much richer in the glory of pioneering the Gospel through the wilderness, be too careless to secure that crown? When the general History of American Methodism is written up, how will the North Carolina Conference stand in that noble sisterhood of Conferences, if ample material is not found gathered up and arranged in a local history? She will stand at the foot of the class almost unseen in the shade of ignorance. Besides all this, our people want such a history written. It will sell readily. Its perusal will quicken their piety. Look how zealous the world is in getting up the history of their heroes. How many histories you find piled upon the shelves of our people. We have histories of the fabulous heroes of Greece, of Rome and other heathen nations.—Now our people might find something of home worthy of all praise and generous emulation, if we had enterprise enough to get it up. We have educated sons and polished daughters, who can read their diplomas in Latin, who can tell you about the heathen gods of far off empires, who are familiar with the mock heroes of French and English novels, yet who are profoundly ignorant of the spiritual heroes, who introduced Methodism into their native State, and spread it from the sea to the mountains. They will not be able to tell when or by whom was Methodism planted in N. C. They do not know to day the names of the early pioneers of N. C. Methodism.—The fact is, neither our children, nor our preachers, nor the outside world can know the History of N. C. Methodism unless the facts are gathered up and thrown into a historical form. The history then is sorely needed. All we want is the material—the facts. Will our preachers who are now walking over the ground, made hallowed by the early struggles of Methodism, take a little trouble and pains to get them up? Of course it will require a little industry, but nothing excellent can be achieved without work.

Dr. Kane braved the perils of snow storms and icebergs to learn the facts about the Polar region; Humboldt broke his way through the tangled wilds of South America to get up facts about the natural world; Dr. Livingston plunged into the heart of sun-baked Africa to search out geographical facts. If these men have done so much for so little, we ought to do a little for a great deal. Suppose you do have to go a little out of your way to see some old meeting house, or some good old Methodist patriarch, who is able to give much information; and suppose you do have to take out your blank book, and sharpen your pencil, and set down what you hear carefully; is such work of this so very great for you to do for future generations compared to what has been done for you? You see treading roads ready made to your feet—preaching in churches built by others—singing hymns composed by others—reading books written by others; why then do you think it a hard matter to do something for the instruction of future generations?

H. T. HUDSON.

For the Advocate.

Jehovah Jireh.

Many generations of men have passed away since faithful Abraham strengthened the confidence of his obedient son, with the assurance that the omniscient eye of his Creator was watching over and providing for his people. A son had been given him in his old age, with the promise "In Isaac shall thy seed be called." His faith in the fulfilment of the promise failed not in the darkest hour of temptation and trial. The supreme ruler of the universe required the supreme affections of his soul: and the readiness with which he went forth to offer the heart cherished sacrifice in obedience to the command of his God, shewed his thoughtfulness and willingness in the performance of his duties. With his eye of faith he looked to the accomplishment of God's purposes even if it required his life giving power to raise him from the dead. In days gone by his faith and confidence had been strengthened and sustained by the soul accredited premise, "I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." And, however mysterious the ways of Providence, how would he doubt the fulfilment of the promise, that he would establish his covenant with him (Israel) for an everlasting covenant, "and with his seed after him"? As the voice of sovereign mercy stayed his uplifted hand, strengthening his faith, and inspiring deeper gratitude in his trusting soul, well might he exclaim "God will provide." What is better calculated to assure the hopes, and inspire the confidence of man, than exhibitions of protection and love in the unfolding mysteries of Providence?

What intimations Sarah had of the intentions of the patriarch as he went forth on that memorable morn, with his beloved son, toward the land of Moriah, we know not.

The inspired penman discloses nothing on this point. Revelation reveals nothing for the gratification of man's idle curiosity. Whether or not the patriarch, as he silently erected the altar of sacrifice amid the solitudes of Moriah, revolved in his troubled mind the deep emotions of grief the announcement that her much loved boy was sleeping in pulseless silence on the shadowy slopes of Moriah, would awaken in the soul of his mother, we shall not stop to speculate on.

Although the venerable patriarchs no longer unfold to the minds of their offspring around them future events in their history, and the finger of prophecy points no longer to the coming Saviour, as a sacrifice for sin; the great idea of God's upholding and sustaining power and goodness has cheered, and still sustains, myriads of inquiring minds on their pilgrimage to the brighter land. Ere the great apostle to the Gentiles suffered martyrdom by the bloody axe of Nero, he loved to trace, for future generations to read the history of the old testament saints, "Who through faith subdued kingdoms, obtained promises, waxed valiant in flight—turned to fight the armies of the aliens." With what unshaken confidence he presents to our views the characteristic traits in the lives of those faithful ones, "of whom the world was not worthy."

We love to think of the father of the faithful, looking with reverence and gratitude upon the ascending smoke of his sacrifice, with his eye of faith looking through coming centuries to the great sacrifice upon Calvary for the redemption of man. Though the patriarchs and prophets, who invoked blessings, and rejoiced in the kindling fires upon their altars, are reaping the reward of the righteous, to day, as the light of the morning sun brightens o'er their tombs where their silent dust reposes, ambassadors for Christ, rejoicing in the out-beaming brightness from Calvary's summit, can point the mind of erring man to the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world—the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." In the brighter light of the gospel dispensation, descending fires kindling upon altars of sacrifice no longer point the mind of man to the coming Saviour as the sacrifice for sin. We no longer, like faithful Abraham, have to assure the hopes, and strengthen the faith of man, with the assurance that "God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt offering." The ministers of God proclaims the great truth, announced by the Savior from the cross. "It is finished" and points to the "blood of Christ Jesus, which cleanseth from all sin." God has provided himself a lamb, and left on record for man's comfort that He "will give grace and glory; and no good thing withhold from them that walk uprightly." In conclusion I will say, as Paul said to his Philippian brethren, "My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

Notes from Virginia

Mr. Editor: I think if you will examine a map that you will find that you are very near to us in Va. At least as near as we are to you. But there are other senses besides the geographical one, in which we feel a nearness to you, and you to us, doubtless. The advancement of your State, in any or all her material interests, is a source of rejoicing to us. The success of your educational enterprises, the lifting of the pall of political night that has been upon you for ten years past, all the grand advancements that you are making as a people, brings you very near the heart of all these in this State, who, like yourselves, are struggling for better things. But it we then fail in all these things to fill the nearness spoken of, we should meet and feel as one, under the glorious banner of our common Methodism, as typical of the one and same thing the world over. In the battle we are waging against the world, flesh and Devil, your triumphs are mine, your conflicts are mine, your defeats I feel, your sorrows and tears I partake of. In this we are all one in Christ Jesus. But I did not intend to write after this fashion. I have felt for a long time like communing with you in some way.—I have not been able as of yore to visit you, break bread with you at your table, and enjoy the pleasure of an old fashioned family talk with you, sister B. and the little ones. Nevertheless, you have been in my heart; you, yours and all the dear brethren of the old North State that I have known, and they are not a few. For the past ten years I have watched the movement of things in your Conference. You men, your plans, the manner of working, the grip with which you take hold and hold on to a good thing. All this I have watched with great solicitude, because you have had some big jobs on hand, and I have been struck with the devotion and energy with which you have worked, succeeded, triumphed. And I have said many times—"these N. C. Methodists are a great people," and I told the truth. But our faith especially has been pleasant to me. I have heard it said repeatedly, "these N. C. preachers are the most pushing and emphatic men in the connection." Now I liked that, because I knew there was so much truth in it. The fact is, I have seen so much good in you North Carolinians that I have almost been sorry I was not one myself. But part of my family is, so I shall have to compromise on that. I sometimes see your paper—I like it. I have read your controversy with Dr. Redford's policy—I say nothing as to the merits of it here; but this much as to the general policy, be it good or bad, we are suffering greatly in Virginia for the publications of our church. With the present system I fear it will not soon improve. I knew Dr. R. has good cause to fear the system of depositories, but we have been trying here for several years to have a larger stock of our books kept in Richmond. We yet hope to succeed. We must succeed in some way, for our people will quit reading our works, and singing our hymns. Much is said here of the utterances of our Southern visitors to Round Lake and Sea Cliff. Bishop Doggett and Dr. Lee were very badly reported. They did not say the things as reported in the papers. It is time for them and all others concerned to set themselves right, and from what I can learn, many are demanding this. Sure I am, that while our people are for fraternity, they are not for union, and never will be with all the incompatibilities now existing. When I write you again, I propose to tell you more of what we are doing over here, and what we propose and hope for the future, for we too, be a great people, in some things—in our way.

Mr. Spurgeon's Conversion.

In the course of a sermon preached at Rochdale, Mr. Spurgeon said he would never forget the period of his conversion. From place to place he went hoping to find peace. At last one snowy cold morning he dropped into a little Primitive Methodist chapel. There was a man who preached Christ very much for the same reason that he (Mr. Spurgeon) did now namely, because he did not know much about anything else. The text was, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." The preacher, pointing towards him (Mr. Spurgeon,) said, "There's a young man under the gallery, who looks very miserable;" and he added, "You will never be happy until you look to Christ." Then, shouting with all his might, he said, "Young man, look now." He did so, and as he gazed his burden fell away; and he who before had been so wretched, left that little house of prayer so happy that from that day to this, with many troubles and a great deal of care, he would not change places with anybody on earth or in heaven.

A Minister's Wife.

Much has been said and written of the needed qualifications of a Christian minister; and truly the subject is of great importance. Why is it that the suitable qualities of a minister's wife have elicited so little attention? It is undeniable that a pastor's success is largely dependent on the character of his wife. We have known ministers whose usefulness has been greatly increased by the kindly influence and hearty cooperation of their wives; and others whose labors have been hindered or rendered unprofitable by the follies of their companions. In all cases, the acceptableness and efficiency of pasters are much modified by the influence of their wives.

We are taught, indirectly at least, the importance of this subject, by the pen of inspiration. "Even so," says Paul, "must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things." Now, whether this language refers to the wives of deacons, or to deaconesses, it equally shows that women occupying a prominent position in the church should possess a high moral character; and it will not be denied that the wife of a bishop fills such a place.

It may be supposed that as ministers select their own wives, they should be left to the exercise of their own taste and judgment in making the choice. That is true; but as the selection may deeply affect their usefulness and the welfare of the churches, there can be no good reason why they should not be instructed and cautioned in regard to this duty, as in reference to other things; especially as they are inexperienced, and very liable to be influenced by impulse, rather than by reason and a desire to glorify God, in making the selection.

It is very easy to tell what sort of a woman a minister should not marry. A frivolous, gay, pleasure loving, fashionable young lady he should avoid, particularly if she is proud and high-minded, even if she is handsome and well endowed. To marry her is to peril, if not to sacrifice, his success in life, and to betray the cause of his Master. It may not be indispensable, but it is certainly desirable, that his wife should be of his own communion, and of congenial tastes and habits.

It is important that all the qualities which enter into the character of a good wife, should be possessed by the wife of a pastor; but there are some endowments that it is especially needful for her to have. She should possess a good constitution, that she may be able to bear the privations and to perform the duties to which her station may subject her. She should have good sense and fair culture, that she may know how to behave herself in the house of God, and not to cause her husband to be ashamed of her. She should have a good temper, that she may not, by her irritability and censorious gossip, involve herself, and her husband along with her, in trouble. Above all, she should have sincere and consistent piety, that she may be the comforter of her husband and an example to his flock. Of course, the higher her qualifications are the more intelligent, refined and devoted she is—the more suitable will she be for her post, and the more will she contribute to the respectability and usefulness of her husband.

We do not maintain that the pastor's wife should be, ex officio, a sort of feminine bishop: but only that she should be fitted to perform, creditably to herself, such services as her age, circumstances and position may devolve upon her. Her first duties, after those she owes to God, are to her husband and her children, if she have children. A bishop must be given to hospitality; and in this department only the wife can gracefully preside. He must rule "well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity;" and the influence of the wife is indispensable in the maintenance of this authority. Whether the pastor's wife should preside in meetings of the female members of the church, and take the lead in prayer meetings and benevolent enterprises, should depend entirely on her comparative fitness for such services. She should be a modest, earnest woman, equally ready to lead or to follow in every good work.

There are two evils which, in ministers' wives, are most likely to embarrass their husbands and to diminish their usefulness. The first is, extravagance, fondness for show and for indulgence. This leads to debt; debt to doubtful measures to obtain money; and these finally to ruin. The other is, an improper use of the tongue. We will not call it slander, or falsehood, or exaggeration, or even equivocation but indiscrete gossip. It is a little matter; but how great a fire a little matter frequently kindles!

We close this article by a word of advice to young ministers on the subject of matrimony. You should hear it candidly; for, in a certain sense, you belong to the churches, and on their behalf we address you. Don't be in haste to marry. We have known great evil to result from the precipitate, ill-advised marriages of ministers. Remember that you profess to have been divinely called to the ministry, have, it may be, spent several years in preparation for the discharge of its duties, and are bound not to select companions who will be a hindrance and a curse to you in your great life-work. You may not be able to obtain wives, in all respects, such as you desire, but see to it that in their selection you are governed, not by blind affection or the love of gold, but by an honest desire to please your Lord, and promote your usefulness, as well as to augment your own happiness.

A Charge to a Pastor.

Make up your mind you must work; but if you consider yourself a fellow-member, do not work alone. Help your Church, but do not carry it. If you find meddlesome busy bodies, give them plenty to do; they hate real work as a musquito does smoke.

Be neither a baby nor a king.

Your main buisness is to preach; but to do this you must know your people and ascertain their wants. Do not visit just to please, but to help on your work. Some families will need six visits to another's one. Go where you can hurt the devil most. Be governed by men's wants, not by their complaints.

Preach not as others do, but as you and God can best arrange it. Fill your hearers with good, sound reason, then cork them tightly with good, sound application, binding them with a "Thus saith the Lord." Be sparing, if not a little stingy, in using old sermons. Remember, when the stream of study stops flowing the pulpit pond lowers. Give no counsel unless there is love enough to prevent their drowning in hatred. It requires much love to praise, more to reprove. Attack measures and "hit" people only when they stand between you and the devil.

You must begin in time, and not be too long in uttering what you have to say, if you would have this busy age stop and listen. If you would preach your best sermons, practice them faithfully beforehand. When you hit the heart, do not forget the head, and vice versa.

Endeavor to be the greatest man in the parish, and that by being the servant to all.

Be childish enough to think you never can be left away from Christ. Run to show him all you have, and ask him for all you want.

Work when you can, retire when you must, and you shall have favor with God when you will.—Congregationalist.

English Church Expenditure.

A tabulated record has been issued of capital sums expended during the last thirty years in the Diocese of Peterborough, England, in providing endowments, buildings, restorations, and elementary schools in connection with the Church of England. In towns with a population above 10,000—Leicester, Northampton, Peterborough, and Loughborough — £199,192 has been expended; and this does not include the Howe Memorial Church in progress at Leicester, or the money spent on the Cathedral, and on St. Paul's Church, built by the Great Northern Railway Company. In towns between 10,000 and 5,000, £39,430 have been expended, in towns between 5,000 and 2,000 £94,768; in parishes between 2,000 and 1,000 £146,443; and in parishes below 1,000, £5-89,449. These figures make a total of £1,069,282; but when the statement from which we quote was drawn-up, no return had been received from one place of the second class, two of the third, eight of the fourth, and thirty of the fifth. Under the heading "Endowments (including Parsonage House and Land)" we find £5-6,579 in 1844—54; £49,601 in 1854—64; £96,813 in 1864-74. In the building of new churches £37,574 was spent in 1844-54; £18,224 in 1854,64; £50,016 in 1864-74. Churches were restored at the cost of £106,525 in 1844-54; of £157,754 in 1754-64; and of £274,425 in 1854-74. Elementary Church Schools (exclusive of Government grant) absorbed £38,044 in 1844-54, £61,809 in 1854-64, and £121,918 in 1864-74. No account is taken, in the first of these lists, of money spent in restoring or enlarging parsonage houses or farm buildings, nor of grants from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners; in the second, of land given for sites or devoted to the enlargement of churchyards: in the third, of mortuary chapels, monuments, organs, or church furniture, nor of money promised for restorations now in progress; and in the fourth, of money expended in providing Board Schools, nor, unless the value was distinctly stated, of land given for sites.

Perils of the Sea.

Our readers who sit quietly and safely in their homes have no conception of the awful scenes which occur daily on the seas. The following is a thrilling sea story, and there are thousands just like it that never come to record:

The Arracan, sailing from Shields, England, to Bombay, with a cargo of coals, took fire from spontaneous combustion and went down. The crew escaped in three boats, which were soon separated. In one of them, which was under the command of the second mate, David Webster, the food gave out on the twentieth day. Shortly afterwards, according to the barbarous custom which has obtained a sort of traditional sanction among sailors, the crew cast lots for one who should be killed and eaten, and the lot fell upon the ship's boy.—Webster was asleep at the time, but awaking, he interposed so vigorously as to save the boy's life. Next the crew tried to kill Webster in his sleep, but the boy in turn aroused him and saved him. For days this grim contest was maintained. Repeatedly, Webster only saved the boy by the threat of shooting. One man in desperation tried to sink the boat, and only the snapping of a cap saved him from dying by the mate's hand. Soon after Webster killed a bird, which was devoured to the last feather. Some sea blubber was procured by diving, and barnacles were gathered from the bottom of the boat. Some of the men became delirious, and fought with each other. To the last, the gallant mate held out against the cannibal project, and, with the help of the boy, withstood the rest. At last, on the thirty-first day, they were picked up by a ship, and all their lives were saved.—The circumstances were carefully investigated by the authorities, and the British goverment has presented Webster with the "Albert Medal"—which is to seamen what the "Victoria Cross" is to English soldiers.

How to be Profited by Preaching.—"How came you to leave your congregation?" asked a friend, of a faithful and laborious minister of the gospel, who, a short time before, had given up the pastoral care of a church over which he had been settled for years. "Because my people did not continue to pray for me," was the answer. "When I first settled with them," he continued, "their prayers for me were constant and fervent, and my labors among them were abundantly blessed. But when I found their prayers for me grew less frequent and fervent, my work seemed less and less prospered, and I became discouraged, and have now gone to another field of labor, where the people earnestly pray for me, and where I feel that I am not toiling in vain, but every sermon seems blessed from on high."

The reply brings to mind the remark of another faithful minister of the cross, who in deep sadness told his people that he was discouraged in his work, and felt that he was doing little or no good among them. And when asked for the reason, he said, "I suppose it is because I have lost my prayer book."

"Prayer book!" said the other, in surprise; "I did not know you ever used a prayer book!"

"Ah, yes!" said the minister, "and my prayer book is the prayers of my people!"

History of "Come to Jesus."—In one of his interesting letters from Europe, Dr. Cuyler gives the history of Rev. Newman Hall's most remarkable little work, "Come to Jesus," as received by himself and others who were in company with him, from the lips of Mr. Hall. Mr. Cuyler says: "He told us that during his early ministry at Hull, he was dining at the house of a gentleman, and when the wine began to circulate, he said to a clergyman present, 'Let us go out and preach to the people in the streets.'—A crowd soon collected, and they began to sing that familiar Methodist chorus (which has since been introduced into America):

'Come to Jesus! come to Jesus!
Just now, just now!
Come to Jesus just now!'

He caught up the words, and preached an off-hand sermon on them to the crowd. Some time afterward, he was confined to his room by sickness, and during his convalescence he determined to turn his street discourse into a little book. He divided it into thirty-two 'heads,' and wrote a brief chapter on each. After a long labor of condensation, he produced that matchless little guide to inquirers, 'Come to Jesus.' It has been translated into nearly every language, and over three millions of copies have been printed. Hundreds of souls have been converted by its perusal. It never wears out."

When God threatens, that's a time to repent; when he promises, that's a time to believe; when he commands, that's a time to obey.

SCIENCE.

The Italian Government has purchased the valuable collection of specimens of natural history, collected by Signor D'Albertis during his travels in New Guinea.

In reference to the approaching transit of Venus, Lord Lindsay announces that his nights will be devoted, while at the island of Mauritius, to observations of the planet Juno, whose opposition occurs in November, in hopes that he may by these determine the solar parallax with an accuracy but little inferior to that resulting from observations of the transit.

At the London Physical Society, recently, Dr. W. H. Stoneread a paper on wind pressures in the human chest during performance on wind instruments. The author's object was to ascertain (1) what was the extreme height of a column of water which could be supported by the muscular act of expiration transmitted by the lips; this was found to be about six feet; and (2) what was the actual pressure corresponding to the full production of a note on each of the principal wind instruments. It was found that with the majority of wind instruments the pressure required for the high notes is considerably greater than that required for the low notes, each instrument having a pressure-ratio of its own.

It is asserted by some astronomical observers that constant changes can be observed in the crater Linne in the moon. The astronomer Schmidt maintains this view. These changes have been variously explained, some observers asserting, however, that they were only apparent changes owing to differences of illumination at different times. Others hold that there are such great changes in the temperature of the moon's surface, in the course of its revolutions, that a movement of portions of its surface may result. From observations by Lord Rosse and others, it is inferred that the difference in temperature between night and day on the moon is probably not less than 5000 Fahrenheit. This is owing to the absence of any atmosphere comparable with that which surrounds our planet.

Dr. Burden Sanderson recently delivered a lecture, at the London Royal Institution, on the Dionæa Mucipula, or "Venus's Fly Trap," an account of which is given in Nature. After the insect has been caught by the plant, a process of digestion goes on, which is thus described: For a week or more the leaf remains closed on its prey, the two lobes being at first pressed flat against each other. The two lobes indeed close round the fly so completely, that its body gives rise to two projections of the outer surface of each lobe, which correspond to it in form. The result of this is, that the secreting glands on the part of the leaf against which the body of the fly presses, are irritated and begin to pour out a quantity of secretion. Gradually, this effect extends to the rest of the leaf, and consequently its cavity becomes gradually extended. The meaning of this bulging is, that the fly is becoming digested. The liquid juice which the glands pour out has the property of so acting on the tissues of the fly's body that they at first become diffluent, and then are absorbed. This process of "digestion" is of the same nature as that by which we ourselves, and the higher animals in general, convert the food they have swallowed into a form and condition suitable to be absorbed, and thus available for the maintenance of bodily life. The nature of animal digestion is best explained by examples. If we take some starch, which is not soluble, and put it into our mouths, and keep it there for a certain time, it has become first soluble and finally transformed into a sugstance quite different in properties. If we examine into this process, we find that the change of starch into sugar takes place, because there exists in saliva a ferment called ptyaline. We call it a ferment, for two reasons—first, because, like leaven, it acts in small quantity, a mere trace being sufficient; and secondly, because it does not itself take part in the transformation. This is one example, and a very simple one; but it is not with this that we compare the digestion of Dionæa, but with that which in man and animals we call digestion proper, the process by which the nitrogenous constituents of food are rendered fit for absorption. This takes place, not in the mouth, but in the stomach. It also is a fermentation, i. e., a chemical change effected by the agency of a leaven or ferment which is contained in the stomach-juice, and can be, like the ferment of saliva, easily separated and prepared. Between this process and the digestion of the Dionæa leaf, the resemblance, as Mr. Darwin has found, by a most elaborate comparative investigation, is complete. It digests exactly the same substances in exactly the same way, i. e., it digests the albuminous constituents of the bodies of animals just as we digest them. In both instances it is essential that the body to be digested should be steeped in a liquid, which in Dionæa is secreted by the red glands on the upper surface of the leaf; in the other case, by the glands of the mucous membrane. In both, the act of secretion is excited by the presence of the substance to be digested.

THE ARTS.

A statue of Dr. Livingstone is to be erected in Edinburgh.

Mr. Ruskin has declined the medal awarded to him by the Royal Institute of British Architects.

A school of music is to be established at Dusseldorf, in connection with the local scheol of painting.

The concerts which Anton Rubinstein gave recently in St. Petersburg and Moscow—two in each city—yielded the enormous sum of 23,000 rubles, silver, about $17,000.

A work on Michael Angelo is to be published in connection with his fourth centenary anniversary, in March, 1875, in Italian, German, and French. It will contain about 700 of his letters.

The Paris papers notice in terms of praise Miss Cassatt's picture painted in Rome last Winter and now on exhibition in the French Salons. The Evenement in mentioning the picture says: "Miss Cassatt is a young American who has been to Venice in search of color, and to Paris in search of grace, and found them both."

How to Cook Beefsteak.—Some time since a complete encyclopedia of useful knowledge in human form became an inmate of a family. When this learned guest came among them he was consulted as an oracle in many cases, and was asked one morning:

"Would he tell or show them a better way to cook the steak for breakfast!" He took the thin, long-handled frying-pan from its nail, and, putting it on the stove, heated it quite hot. In this he put the pieces of steak, previously pounded, but, to their surprise, did not put a particle of butter in the frying-pan, and did not salt his steak. He allowed the steak to merely glaze over, and then turned it quickly to the other side, turning it several times in this manner until it was done. Four minutes were not employed on the operation, but a juicier piece of steak was never eaten. It was, when done, laid on the platter, previously warmed, and was buttered and salted and set a moment in the hot oven. Allowing the steak to heat but a moment on each side helped it to retain all its sweet juices, and putting on the salt the last moment after it was on the platter drew out its juices.

Cure for Snake Bite.—Mr. Editor: It may not be generally known that saltpeter is a good neutralizer of poison, as by snake bite. Mr. West, residing near this place, told me the other day how quickly it relieved his son, bitten by a moccasin. Hoping you might render such unfortunates a good service by publishing it in your widely circulating paper, I send you the recipe. Anoint the part bitten, as soon as possible, with a strong solution of saltpeter, and then bind a saltpeter poultice to it. I like it the better because it supersedes the use of whiskey, so frequently given, and which so few now have.

The Cross (X) Mark is to remind you that your subscription has expired. Let all renew promptly.

We publish this week a long list of revival notices which will be read with great satisfaction by our people.

We are pleased to learn from Bro. Trawick that his school at Shelby has opened well, and that the indications for a full school are flattering.

We return thanks to many of our friends, both of the ministry and laity, for their zeal in behalf of the Advocate We have added, through their agency, quite a large number of new names to our list within the past few days.

The Baltimore Episcopal Methodist of Aug. 22nd is in mourning for its editor, Rev. Wm. S. Baird, who died on the 13th ult. For more than a year his health had been failing. He was a good man, a good writer, and a good preacher. He died in the faith and has gone to his reward.

TO OUR AGENTS.—We repeat the notice in a former issue that in view of the great scarcity of money, the preachers may forward us the names of new subscribers and renewals to be collected and settled for at Conference. Let all who wish the paper upon these terms avail themselves of this offer.

We learn from Bro. D. K. Moore that an interesting meeting has been in progress at Soapstone, on the Rolesville circuit, for several days, under the pastoral labors of Rev. J. E. Thompson, assisted by Rev. Hines Whitaker. Eleven persons professed faith in Christ.

We are indebted to Rev. A. J. Finlayson for a club of eleven new subscribers. Most of these were secured at one protracted meeting. Will the preachers endeavor to place the Advocate in the hands of all young converts? It will help to cultivate them in the faith, and to inform them in the doctrines of the church.

Said a gentleman outside the church the other day: All the temperance societies in the country cannot put down the vice of drinking. What can? he was asked. The church. How? By turning out those members that drink liquor. Let the christian reflect over this. Did he ever take a drink that his conscience didn't cry "shame?"

WE have recently enjoyed a visit to Beaufort, where we spent a short time with friends of other days. To one fatigued and worn with the duties of editorial life there is nothing more invigorating than to enjoy for a season the refreshing sea-breeze. We but add to the testimony of hundreds who have visited Beaufort this season, when we say that the sea-side is a delightful summer resort.

While there, we enjoyed the company of Bro. Wheeler, the laborious pastor of the church at that place, and Bro. Yates, the Presiding Elder of the District, and Rev. J. A. Cunninggim of Greensboro. We were most comfortably quartered with our little family at the popular boarding house of Miss Sarah A. Davis. Her rooms are large and comfortable, and the fare excellent. Persons who stop at this house once never think of going to others when they visit Beaufort.—Want of space prevents a more extended notice of our trip.

Week of Prayer at Person Street Church.

The week set apart by our Bishops was observed at Person Street Church in this city. Prayer-meetings were held on every night and large and attentive congregations attended at every service. Much interest was manifested and at the close of the week several penitents offered themselves for the prayers of the church. Rev. Mr. Cole, the popular and devoted young pastor of the church, was indefatigable in his labors to render the meetings successful, and was assisted in his labors by Rev. B. B. Culbreth, and Rev. Mr. Carlisle, a member of the South Carolina Conference, who is in Raleigh enjoying a respite from his work as pastor of the church at Sumpter S. C. The services at Person Street Church will doubtless be protracted and much good may be looked for.

This church is in a good and growing condition. Large congregations attend the preaching of Bro. Cole and the building is frequently crowded to its fullest capacity. We trust that the movement which is on foot for its enlargement and improvement may prove successful. The section of the city where it is located needs and will be greatly benefited by the establishment of a large and comfortable house of worship.

General Roger A. Pryor, has been retained by Tilton as counsel in a suit against Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, in which the damages are laid at $50,000.

The Week of Prayer.

The week set apart by the Bishops of our Church for prayer and supplication to Heaven for the increase and advancement of all the interests of the church, closed on last Friday. We trust it was observed by all our congregations and people, and feel assured that its sincere observance will result in great spiritual good. We learn of several protracted meetings that have been and are being held on various charges, growing out of and following the services of the week and all attended with interest and profit.

As Christians and followers of Him who, as our great Example, so frequently engaged in supplicating the favor and assistance of his Father, in the midst of his temptations and sufferings—who, in the wilderness or in the solitude of the garden and quiet of the night, or on the painful cross, lifted up his soul and voice in earnest prayer,—we say, as followers of him we must believe in the efficacy and comfort of prayer. If we omit it, we neglect our greatest privilege and only hope of comfort and salvation. If we employ it, we obtain a hold upon the mercy and favor of the Father whose promises are abundant to those "who diligently seek him."

A man who attempts to be a Christian and enjoy the solace of religion, without frequent and earnest prayer, bases his hopes on a "baseless fabric." His religion is a pretence and his professions hollow. The outward observance of religious duties—the attendance on divine worship—the long faces, mumbling lips, humble genuflections and prompt payment of mint, anise and cummin—are all solemn mockeries and sinful shadows of a sacred substance without the saving, sanctifying influences that are called down by the earnest travail of the soul in prayer and supplication. A church, too, that is without praying men and women is an empty shell containing no meat or sweetness—a lifeless corpse in whose eye there is no brightness, in whose cheek there is no warmth or color, and whose body is void of strength and vigor.—A church without prayer is emphatically a paralysed—a dead church. None of its interests or enterprises can flourish; no more than the naked branches of a decayed tree can put forth leaves and flowers and fruit.—Its ministers may preach with the fervor of an Appolus,—its services may be attractive and imposing and solemn, its wealth and numbers uncounted, and all its appliances strong and perfect, but unless its members come near God on the knees of prayer and trusting faith, all will be as "sounding brass or a tinkling symbol."

It was wise to designate a period when all our churches should pray with and for one another. We are too often selfish in our prayers as in other things, and while we approach Heaven for mercy and blessings upon ourselves, have little thought for our neighbors and brethren. Others' woes and sorrows should, through the sympathy of our common nature, burden our souls and carry us to the closet and altar as our own grievances do. Heaven will hear us when we call for its blessings upon others—upon friends and communities and churches,—no less than when we remember ourselves only. The sick and afflicted and sorely troubled can be healed through our prayers, and the ungodly can be led into the way of salvation by the intercessions of the righteous.

St. James, whose short letter to the churches is so full of love and warning and precious advice, says: "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the Elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. * * * * Pray one for another that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

It is not an infrequent occurrence for requests to be made by persons for special prayer in their behalf. A letter of this character was received by us last week from a lady giving no clue to her identity, but signing herself "an unknown friend," and making an earnest and touching appeal for our supplication for grace to be given her to endure a severe illness, and to be resigned to the will of the Father.

We call upon our readers to join us in earnest supplication in behalf of this unknown friend, that she may enjoy in rich abundance the comforts of that religion which alone can satisfy the desires of the immortal spirit.

The SOUTHERN Christian Advocate says:

We regret to learn by a note from Rev. W. P. Rivers, that Bishop Pierce was so much indisposed as to be unable to preach at the Athens District Conference, held last week at Washington, Ga. He attempted to preach once, but became so ill, that he was compelled to desist from proceeding with his sermon. Dr. C. W. Smith informs us that he traveled homeward with the Bishop, and that he was much better when they separated; so we are encouraged to hope that it was a transient attack, which will not be followed by any serious results. We utter the sentiment of the whole church, when we express the hope that the Bishop's zeal will not lead him into disregarding distinct intimations that he is attempting more than his overworked frame will bear.

The Tilton-Beecher Matter.

We have studiously avoided all allusion to the great and disgusting scandal which has been for several weeks the theme of newspaper discussion, and has excited throughout our country interest, sorrow and disgust, according to the bent of the minds which have contemplated it.—We determined not to lend our columns to the circulation of the scandal and to refer to it only when the committee appointed to investigate it should give their decision upon the testimony brought before them. We did not believe any good could possibly result from making mention of it, even in general terms, and felt that harm only could follow the parade of the disgusting details of the matter.

Now that the committee (after being in session for several weeks, and receiving the testimony of all who were known to have any acquaintance with the matter) have made their report, acquitting Mr. Beecher of the charges laid at his door, we feel it our duty to refer to it.

As common charity demanded that we should not condemn until the matter had been thoroughly sifted, so now common justice requires that the accused should have the benefit of a public announcement of his acquittal of the charges which have shocked the sensibilities of all decent people. Henry Ward Beecher, in point of ability, is the foremost preacher of the age, and wherever he is known, the story of his alleged defection from religion, morality and humanity, has gone.

We say nothing of the character of the committee which had the case in hand—the mode of its appointment and the bias which may have rested on the minds of its members in favor of the pastor of their church. We will not say it was a "whitewashing" committee, selected with a view to cover up the guilt of Mr. Beecher. We would prefer that it should have been differently constituted, but the members who composed it are regarded as able and honorable men. The accuser, though not compelled to do so, appeared before them and contrasted his statement to them; so also did many others,—all recognizing the committee as a respectable and truth-searching body. And now that the committee to which the public submitted the matter and trusted for a decision, has said that it has founed no testimony to convict Mr. Beecher, we should accept it until further developments prove if they can that the committee is wrong and that Beecher is guilty.

In any view of the case, whether the accused be innocent or guilty, great injury has been done to morality and religion. The maligners of everything good and virtuous have derived comfort and strength from the scandal which they have spared no endeavor to circulate. Vice, always proud to be thought a companion of the great and honored, has lifted its head and stalks impudently in the face of the world, while virtue blushes that men should think her cloak has been worn to cover the deformities of sin and crime. An opportunity has been given to skeptics and worldy men, and eagerly used to sneer at and ridicule the church and its ministers. There has never been a time, however, when calumny has not been heaped upon the church—men cannot escape it, nor the church or any good enterprise. Malicious men have always reviled and persecuted the good. Calumny is the venom that devils spit at whatever opposes and seeks to destroy their influence.

But while injury may have been done to the church and its influence impaired to some extent in some sections, it is only for a time. True religion will only shine the brighter when contrasted with the counterfeit that excites derision and sneers.

Compliment to the Press.

The Rev. W. G. Starr, in a sermon delivered at the Granby street Methodist Church, recently says the Norfolk Virginian, paid the following just and deserved compliment to the press:

"We live in an age of light. Darkness may live for a time under craven roof, but there she cannot dwell forever. The mighty voice of the people will be heard, and the people are shouting for light.—The pulpit gives her imperial answer every Sabbath; the press rings the echo back through all the year. The newspaper reaches the man who never enters the sanctuary. Give to any land the freedom of the press, and you bring the very sun out of the sky to kindle the light of truth in that land. The wrong may be hidden for awhile, but the press will unearth it. The foot of the criminal may be fleet, and the barrier behind him strong, but the hand of the press will drag him from his retreat among the rocks and scourge him to the scaffold in the presence of all the people. Yes, I say, thank God for the liberty of the press."

We have been favored with a call from Bro. Carlisle, of the South Carolina Conference, who is in the city on a visit to his sister, Mrs. J. M. Blair.

TO AGENTS.—Issue to delegates attending District Conference M E. Church, South, convening Lexington on 2d September, tickets to that point and return for one first class fare.

Notice of Books and Periodicals crowded out this week.

Bro. BOBBITT: During my brief sojourn at this attractive resort, I must confess I have become very much attached to the place and the good friends—both resident and visitors—whom I have met. I am both a believer in Bishop Pierce's theory that ministers should not take an occasional vacation to recuperate. I protest against his judging preachers in general by himself, in any respect. Nature was almost as lavish in endowing his physical as his mental—extraordinarily lavish in both respect. He told me once that when he was born there was a snow on the ground, and that his father (or some other relative) carried him to the window in his first hours and pressed his little feet in the snow. Even then he seemed proof against the foes to life and health, and his long career of Pauline labor whispers of a more than Achillean invulnerability. What does he know of people who are not hearty and strong, and who cannot help sometimes staggering under burdens of toil? As soon let the well-fed man lecture the hungry for sticking to bread, or the eagle eyed youth deride the week-eyed brother for visiting the optician. No, Sir—all men in exacting pursuits are the more efficient and useful for occasional recreation. A jaded body disordered nerves, mental depression, weariness of the flesh and spirit disqualify a man for the highest efficiency in his labors. Bishop Pierce, we know, is a magnificent man in his sphere, but he would have made a dangerous railroad engineer. According to his theory, he would run the engine too long without taking it to the shops. The consequence would be an untimely "smash up" or running-off-the-track. I am not, you see, writing about mere pleasure-seekers but health seekers. When health is impaired those who have the opportunity ought to seek to have it restored. When the requisite strength is too much diminished to contend with the work to be done, let the first offer of invigoration be accepted. And I am equally clear in the opinion that with overtaxed mind change is indispensible. As a rule, this is only effectually fulfilled by those who go from home. How can a man rest and repair wasted energies amid the crowding duties and cares which have enslaved him? In few words,

"He that fights and runs away,
May live to fight another day;
But he that is by foes slain,
Can never live to fight again."

In deciding where to go, many things are to be considered as comfort, expenses, convenience, travel, rest, air, water, company, and not the least, moral and religious advantages. The time has come when to North Carolinians the dear old State offers an aggregate of inducements that should, as a rule with rare exceptions, keep her sons and daughters within her own borders.

The sea breathes its benediction over the wide plains of the East and the majestic mountains distil the purest, most salubrious air in the West; while the hills and valleys and rivers of the interior invent their own breezes and combine a multitude of benefits. As to mineral waters, there is a most valuable variety. It would pay the proprietors of those springs now visited to have a work published containing an analysis of the waters, cures effected, and the various incidental advantages connected with them. Take this place for example. Here are White Sulphur, Blue Sulphur and Chalybeate. The atmosphere is the very essence of vigor and health. Its enlivening effect is felt at once. The undulating hills, the long, green slopes, the virgin groves of oak and the little, meandering brook make it appear as one of Nature's favorites. Near by are several excellent views of mountains. From the portieoes there is a charming prospect of a neighboring range of lofty hills. For a short walk to the West, one is rewarded with a distant view of the Table Rock and other towering peaks. Another walk to the East reveals a wide extending, glorious view of a double range—the farther being the careering, kingly heights of the Blue Ridge. Between the Springs and Hickory there is another prospect which embraces that old giant slumberer—the Grandfather mountain. As I saw it, a few mornings since, it appeared as though the indulgent sleeper had just drawn the covering of the thin, blue cloud over him and composed himself for a quiet, morning dream. Taking all into consideration, I verily believe that this is one of the most inviting places for a liberal investment of money—even as a matter of precuniary profit, to be found in the country. It is destined to be a favorite place of resort to the weary and the afflicted and the seekers of pleasure. Remarkable benefits have been realized by those who have visited the place for health. One rather amusing case I mention. A young lady in delicate health came here some time ago and after a few days complained to the proprietor that she must go home because she was improving too fast. The secret was that she had actually outgrown her wardrobe and had to fly for help to the milliner.

Raleigh has been represented here by Judge Merrimon, Richard H. Battle, Esq., and Dr. Rice, with their respective families. Prof. Martin of Davidson is here. It is charming to see such gentlemen as these unbending from their arduous toils and telling in happy recreation that the buoyant spirit of boyhood still lives within them. How much are those to be pitied, who cannot thus unbend! Among recent arrivals is a lady of Columbia whose throat must be the home of the nightingale's song. If there be one who can sing more sweetly, it is one I have not heard. It is very pleasant to know that so rich a gift is given every Sabbath to the sacred songs of the church. When she sings, you forget all but the melody and awake to consciousness to find that you have been enchanted, that tears are in your eyes and that a new pleasure, for which you can thank kind Heaven, is in your soul.

As my visit is drawing near its close, I desire to frankly record my warm and grateful approval of the general management of the place by Dr. Elliott, the proprietor. He has been unvaryingly kind, polite and careful of the comfort and interest of his patrons. He and his excellent lady move about very quietly and all works on with charming regularity. The fare is the best I ever saw for the charges. I hope I may enjoy again the same pleasure and improvement I have realized in my short sojourn.

Thanking you for the paper sent me, allow me to express my regret that the discussion about the Publishing House should continue so long. I feel sure that your first little piece did not justify the severe reply of Dr. Redford and regret that he should be so sensitive. He ought to know that both duty and policy require plain facts kindly and christianly given, and that every preacher of the church has a right to discuss in a proper way the conduct of any one or all of the institutions belonging to the church. Because you criticise the management of the Publishing House is no more evidence of your hostility to it than any criticism you or I might make on the conduct of a Conference college would indicate hostility to the institution or any one connected with it. I believe in the liberty of the press and liberty of speech. It isn't good for a minister or anybody else to be held to silence when he is responsible.

Loyalty to the church is a great thing, but no one is loyal to the church who is afraid to think for himself or too cowardly to express the truth and to boldly espouse the right. The spirit of the kneckling Catholic will not fulfill the obligations of Protestants. We love our church above all others. We believe her the best of the churches. We cherish all her agencies and institutions, and because we cherish them, we would have them always what they should be, and in all prospects in which they fail, we would kindly and in brotherly regard strive to improve them. Those who would lecture against such a spirit, have reason to overhaul their Protestantism and their prejudices.

However, let us have peace! If we do not seek peace, we are not of our Savior's true followers. As his ministers, how careful we should be to discharge all duty in the spirit of love!

During my visit, we have had regular divine services on the Sabbath in the little chapel. I have been, as to the pulpit, on half rations. The deportment here has been less exceptionable than is often found at such places. There is a scrupulous avoidance of profanity and intemperance. "Good will" seems to control everybody. I have never seen a heterogeneous company so completely governed by kindly feeling. Reason: A ruling majority fear God and try to keep His commandments.

Please Respond.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Our new building at Trinity College is without a roof—and the work cannot go forward unless we can collect some funds. Will not those, who have pledged to help us, come to the rescue? If you cannot pay all, send us as much as you can, and we will be very grateful.

B. B. CULBRETH,
Raleigh, N. C. Agent.

REV. J. B. BOBBITT—Dear Bro: The Fall Session of Davenport Female College opened to-day with 56 scholars, which is by far the best opening we have yet had under the present administration; and the prospect is, that we will, within the next month, have as many as can be accommodated this year.

Yours affectionately,

T. J. GATTIS,
Ag't Davenport College.
Lenoir, N. C., Aug. 17th, 1874.

For Davenport F. College.

Rev T. J. Gattis, our Agent, will leave Goldsboro on Thursday evening, Sept. 10th, with young ladies for Davenport.

Persons desiring to send their daughters to this school can place them in his care at any point on the Railroad between Goldsboro and Salisbury at that time.

This will be the last chance, as the institution is rapidly filling up, and will probably be crowded by that time.

W. M. ROBEY.

August 19th.

Alexander, the Great, had a cowardly son, who dishonored his name, and the Senate voted that as that man did not sustain the character of his father he should not be permitted to bear his name. And every one who has taken on the name of Christ, ought to adorn the doctrine or renounce it.

Among the graduates of Oberlin College this Summer is a young Turk, a preacher, who is going back to minister to his own people.

Revival Intelligence.

From Rev. T. W. Guthrie we have received the following:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: I have just closed an excellent revival meeting at St. John's, one of the Churches on Laurinburg circuit. We had 65 conversions and 68 additions to the church. Nearly all grown people, a large number married.

Your paper is doing good on my circuit, and in the Fall expect to largely increase list of subscribers.

Rev. J. J. Renn writes:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: I have just closed a meeting of eleven days at Orange church. The Lord was with us in power. The membership was greatly revived. Twenty-five professed faith in Christ, most of whom attend very quietly and all works on with charming regularity. The fare is the best I ever saw for the charges. I hope I may enjoy again the same pleasure and improvement I have realized in my short sojourn.

Rev. L. J. Holden, in charge of Nashville circuit, writes as follows:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: We closed a meeting at Sandy Cross last Saturday, resulting in the conversion of 32 souls and 28 accessions to the church. We had a glorious time indeed. Brother Johnson came down from Nashville and helped us, and the spirit came with him. We commenced a meeting Sunday morning at White Oak; it now promises good results.—May the Lord continue to bless us, and to him shall be all the glory!

We closed a meeting at White Oak Church, resulting in the conversion of 18 souls and eleven accessions to the church. Bro. Johnson was with me and did me much good service. We have had over one hundred conversions on my charge this year. May the Lord continue his good work!

We hope to commence a meeting at Bethlehem soon. May the Lord be with us and bless us!

Rev. J. W. Lewis writes:

"We held a meeting at Hopewell last Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, which resulted in the conversion of six souls and seven accessions to the church, and a glorious building up of the membership. Bro. C. M. Pepper was with me two days in the fullness of the blessing of the Gospel."

Rev. D. R. Brnton, in charge of Concord Station, writes Aug. 27th, as follows:

BRO. BOBBITT: Our meeting to night closed the "Week of Prayer." Services were held twice each day, during the week, and I do not remember ever to have enjoyed a stronger sense of the presence and power of God. A large proportion of our people were much improved in their Christian experience, which will result in great good to the church in our town.

Rev. S. V. Hoyle, Pastor of Warren circuit, sends gratifying intelligence of the work of grace on his charge.—He says:

"The work of grace still goes on, on this circuit. We are now at Hebron, and the Lord is giving us a work of great power. Up to last night 42 have professed faith in Christ and there is no abatement in the interest among the unconverted, and the church is fully alive to their responsibility. We expect to continue the coming week. Up to date over one hundred have been hopefully converted, and we are looking for at least double that number on the circuit."

Rev. H. H. Gibbons sends us cheering news from Tar River circuit:

"We have a good work at Plank Chapel; twelve persons have professed conversion, and twenty or more penitents at the altar. Revs. C. B. Riddick and M. J. Hunt are with us."

Rev. A. J. Finlayson, in charge of Lenoir circuit, writes as follows:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: I commenced a meeting at Sharon, Lenoir circuit, Saturday evening, the 8th inst., continuing until the 15th, resulting in 32 accessions to the church. The membership was greatly blessed, and a good impression made on the community. Our prospects are bright and promising. Bro. John R. Brooks, of Kinston Station, was with us two days, and labored zealously for the salvation of souls. Bro. W. R. Wine, local preacher of our church, and John Grubbs, minister of the Baptist Church, rendered efficient service.—Bro. J. M. Horton, an exhorter, made himself very useful in talking and praying with the penitents. In May last we dedicated a new church at that place. Sermon preached by our beloved P. E., Bro. E. A. Yates, with great power, and we are now reaping some of the benefits.

I have held three other protracted meeting on my circuit this year, particulars of which I will give you some time soon.

I send you eleven new subscribers to your paper; (this is some of the fruits.) All praise to God for the good work! Pray for us that it may still continue!

Rev. T. B. Rocks sends us cheering news from his circuit:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: Let me say to our friends through your most excellent paper, that we have just closed a meeting at Ebenezer church, (Cary circuit,) where the Lord was with us in great mercy;—most of the church members were enabled to rejoice in hope of the glory of God; many sinners were deeply convicted and eight persons professed to have found the pearl of great price. Our beloved brother Cole was with us two days and preached and labored very successfully and greatly to our benefit. We also left at Mt. Zion a most interesting young man at the altar of prayer, from which he went to a neighbor's house and was there happily converted to God. The Lord is with us also in our meeting at Holland's. Glory be to his holy name!

Rev. A. D. Betts, sends us the following.

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: We have had gracious revivals at Harmony, Mt. Bernon and Barnsville Churches on Ansonville Circuit. Rev. T. W. Kendall and his father, Rev. J. S. Kendall, assisted me.

A number of happy conversions and some very valuable accessions. A young man in each church, who modestly leads in public prayer the day he joins the church. Happy love Feasts, in which large numbers of men and women tell "what the Lord hath done for their souls."

The Bath circuit is enjoying a gracious visitation of the spirit. Bro. L. L. Nash, the pastor, sends us the following:

MR. EDITOR: I desire to say through the Advocate, that we have been again blessed with a gracious revival of religion on "Bath Circuit." We commenced a meeting at Pantigo on Wednesday night before the 4th Sunday in July, so as to include our quarterly meeting, and the Lord was with us. Bro. Raven come down from Washington and preached three sermons, that made a good impression on the large congregations in attendance.

Dr. Closs heard that we were going to commence on Wednesday, and came in time to be with us at the commencement of the meeting, coming as he did from a revival at Plymouth, where God had poured out his spirit. We were soon blessed under his powerful preaching. He preached some times with great effect. There was twenty one accessions to the church, and a deep religious feeling manifested by the entire community. Our church at this place was greatly strengthened.

Here we had but a few members, and would not have had a church but for the liberality of Bro. Joseph. B. Clark of sainted memory who gave us our house of worship; and whose son, Walter Clark, is one of our leading members, exerting an influence for good, that is worthy of his sire. Since the time of our meeting at Pantigo, I have had the pleasure of visiting Roanoke Circuit, where I attended an interesting revival conducted by Bro. Burton. Large congregations were present, and I never saw preaching more effective; there were four conversions, and a number of penitents when he closed his meeting; having to close to give the church a chance to erect a new edifice, which I understand they propose to do immediately. The place I refer to is Edmonds Chapel.

Bro. Burton is making progress on the good old Roanoke circuit, he preaches the gospel and it tells.

Religious.

Twenty-two societies in China have established more than 300 mission-stations and out-stations, and the number of Church members is estimated at 10,000.

At the recent election of trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Flushing, N. Y., the right of voting was for the first time exercised by the ladies of the congregation.

A committee of the (Dutch) Reformed, (Northern) Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist and Baptist missionaries has been formed to translate the Bible into the Japanese language.

For the families of the three delegates to the Evangelical Alliance who were lost at sea, about fifty thousand dollars have been raised in Europe, and nearly twenty thousand in the United States.

The first annual meeting of the Methodist Episcopal Mission in Japan was held in Yokohama, commencing June 27th. Rev. Dr. R. S. Maclay, Superintendent of the Japan Mission, occupied the chair.

An exchange says: "There are five Protestant Episcopal parishes in New York in which the confessional is used, and penance taught as one of the sacraments. The marriage of Dr. Dix obliged him to hand over the confessional at St. Mary's to the rector of the Church of the Advent, Boston, Rev. C. Grafton."

—POOLE & HUNT, MACHINISTS, BALTIMORE.—In another part of our paper will be found the business card of this well known house, whose manufactures are in use from Maine to Mexico and South America, and every where regarded as first-class in their design, material and workmanship. With facilities for manufacturing and shipping largely increased and improved from year to year, they are prepared to fill all orders promptly and will guarantee their patrons thoroughly reliable work. Those in need of anything in their line would do well to apply for their circular and prices.

State and Local.

—General Vance's majority in the 8th District is 4,240.

—Mrs. Goodman Uzzell recently died suddenly at her residence at Flat River Orange county.

—A little son of Mr. Thomas Webb last week, at Hillsboro, fell out of a tree and broke his arm.

—A hail storm a few days ago swept over a portion of Union county. A good deal of damage was done.

—The burned wall of the government building has been commenced.

—The advance in the price of cotton is gratifying to the farmers in the cotton growing sections, and will put new life into every class of business.

—We are glad to hear that the market eating houses are to be broken up.

—The debt of the city of Raleigh; the total bonded debt and interest to 1st January, 1874, inclusive, is in round numbers, about one hundred and twenty-six thousand dollars, and of scrip in circulation forty thousand dollars, making a grand total of one hundred and sixty-six thousand dollars.

Col. Geo. V. Strong of Wake is prominently spoke of for the speakership of the house of representatives. We do not think a better selection could be made.

—There are eight prisoners now in our jail. No whites are among the number. One of the prisoners is charged with murder, one with burglary, four with larceny and two for assault and battery.

—From the official vote to hand from all the counties in the State, except twelve, the Pool majority over Purnell for Superintendent of Public Instruction foots up 9,785, while the reported majorities in the remaining counties will reach some 2,000, making the total Democratic majority in the State between 11,500 and 12,000.

—An attempt was recently made to perpetrate highway robbery upon Elijah Hewlett, the treasurer of New Hanover county.

—We learn that Senator Merrimon has bought the Hon. Samuel F. Phillips residence in Hillsboro, and will build a magnificent house there. His family during the time will sojourn in the valley of Virginia.

—Now, when wood and coal are cheap, is the time to lay in your supply of fuel for the coming winter. We notice a number of our citizens thus taking time by the forelock and making a considerable saving in the reduced price.

—The next Legislature will have in the Senate 38 Democrats and 12 Radicals. In the House 80 Democrats, 36 Radicals and 4 Independents.

—The Richmond and Danville Railroad, N. C. Division, agrees to sell tickets to the State Fair at the rate of ½ cents per mile, good from the 8th to the 20th of October.

—Capt. James L. Robinson, of Macon county, the efficient Speaker of the last House has been elected to the Senate: Messrs. Stanford, Dem., of Duplin, J. G. Marler, Dem., of Yadkin, R. G. Steed, Rep., of Granville, John M. Paschall, of Warren, and John Bryant, of Halifax. The negroes in the Senate will be John Bryant, of Halifax and W. P. Mabson, of Edgecombe.

AN EXCURSION FROM SALEM.—We copy the following from the Salem Press:

"An excursion will leave the depot for Raleigh, on Saturday morning, September 5th, at 7o'clock, under the charge of experienced engineer and conductor, insuring neat coaches and comfortable seats.

"Don't fail to embrace this opportunity to visit the capital of our State in the most pleasant month of the year.

"The Salem Cornet Band will entertain the excursionists with choice music.

"Arrangements will be made to enable the passengers to visit the public buildings and institutions."

—We regret to learn that the rust has made its appearance upon the cotton in this section, and that considerable damage is being done to the growing crop.

Resolutions of Respect.

Having been appointed a committee by the third Quarterly Conference of the North Gaillord circuit to draw up resolutions of respect for our deceased brother Ellis Haskins, we present the following.

Resolved, 1. That we bow with pious submission to the unerring wisdom of God's providence in the removal in great peace in a green old age our much loved Ellis Haskins.

Resolved, 2. That Ellis Haskins was a model christian and a faithful official member of our quarterly Conference for many years; attending promptly to all his duties. He was a pattern to be imitated, he has taught us both how to live and how to die and we will try to meet him in the better land.

Resolved, 3. That we sympathize with his aged companion, who after raising a family of nine children, is now left alone without husband or child.

Resolved, 4. That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of our Quarterly Conference, that they be published in the Raleigh Christian Advocate, and also that a copy be sent to our venerable sister Haskins

Died in Stanley Co N. C. July 30th 1874 of consumption Mrs Ellen Smith, wife of Rev. Douglas Smith, and daughter of Rev. A. Wood. She was fully prepared to die. Her end was indeed peaceful and happy. She left a loving farewell to her friends and closed her eyes in death, Whist a happy reunion has taken place with her friends and especially a dear child that preceded her a short time to the better land.

O may we triumphing so,
When all our warfare's past,
And dying find our latest foe,
Under our feet at last."

R M B.

Sister Ann T. Wells, wife of Rev A. N. Wells was born in the year 1832, converted in her fifteenth year and soon after joined the M. E. Church, South, at Salem camp-meeting in Lancaster S. C. In the year 1858 she was married to B. F. Tipton of Ky., left a widow in 1859 and married to Rev. A. N. Wells of the S C Conference in 1862. She died in peace July 25 h 1874, at Pineville where she had been engaged in teaching. In her acquaintance with sister Wells was short but the more I knew of her the more I loved her. I learn from one who knew her long and well that she was an affectionate wife, a devoted mother and a warm hearted, earnest christian. For some time before her death she was called to suffer severe trials but these were sanctified to her good and doubtless made her nearer to Him who has said: 'Fear not I only desire thy dross to consume and thy gold to refine.' In the midst of these fires she felt more of the Divine presence than ever. I visited her during her sickness and found her generally incoherent. At times she was in full consistency, clear—and confidence in her conversion about Jesus and his sustaining grace. She expressed the most perfect confidence in his presence, power and love. The last time I saw her she said to me 'There is not a single cloud—all is clear.' Among her last words were 'O Jesus, I commit myself to thee.'

The greatest grief of her declining life was, that her two sons by her first husband are not christians. To them she was greatly devoted and she clung to them with a mother's love to the last.

Southern Christian Advocate please copy.

W. D LEE.

Mrs. Nancy P. Price, relict of the late Needham Price of Wake, county was born June 4th 1810, and died at her residence Saturday morning July the 25th 1874. Sister Price had been for many years a faithful member of the M. E. Church, South. Her powers intelligent, deep and seriously—controlling, chastening, purifying and adorning her whole life. She loved the church of her choice and esteemed her ministers, "highly for their works sake." After the decease of her excellent husband which occurred in 1857 she had charge of a large estate which she managed with remarkable success. She was a woman of a very superior intellect and great force of character.

For many long weary months she had suffered severely from asthma and rheumatism. I think I have never seen any one who suffered more than she did.

While she gave expression to her excruciating pain, the words of complaining at her Heavenly Father's will escaped her lips. She took to whom she had believed, and to his wise dispensations she submitted in the spirit of a true christian. During her protracted sufferings I frequently saw her, and freely conversed with her in reference to her hope and faith. Her hope was well founded.

The last time I saw her she said to me 'I am still suffering and waiting for rest to come.' My office hours are showing me my weaknesses, and I am putting all my trust in the savior. He is precious to me in this trying hour.'

When the hour of her departure came she serenely, and joyfully passed away, repeating on the last failing breath the words of Jesus "within that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out."

How still my very dear christian friends, we can but a little while, and we shall meet, where all strife and sorrow cease.

All is love and joy and peace."

Mrs Elizabeth R. Miller, wife of Mr. Alford Miller, died of typhoid fever at her new home in Rowan County N. C. July 22nd 1874 aged 35 yrs. She leaves a husband and nine children to mourn her loss together with a large circle of friends. She was for a good number of years a member of the church where she resided. C. D.

Died in Franklinsville, N. C. of Bilious Fever, 12th of August, 1874, in sixteenth year of her age; Miss Susan Steed, daughter of Joseph W. Steed deceased late Sheriff of Randolph County. Susan was an interesting promising young lady, cut down in the bloom of youth; but her friends had hope in her death; and feel that they have another strong cord to draw their affections to God.

TO THE Wholesale Trade.

Judging the future by the past, we enter with confidence upon this our new enterprise, of separating our Wholesale from our Retail Trade, by having a separate and distinct House for each; and in doing so we flatter ourselves that it will not only meet the approval of our numerous customers, but that an "Exclusive Wholesale House" will bring us a large influx of new trade, and of a character not heretofore enjoyed.

It must be obvious to every buyer that a strictly "Wholesale House," arranged and adapted for that Trade only, with a corps of experienced Wholesale Salesman, with a Stock carefully selected for that Trade only, and moreover, the avoidance of coming in contact with retail buyers. Such a house, we assert, must and will commend itself to the trade.

Four years ago we advertised that we intended to make Charlotte a wholesale mart and core "The Wholesale House." We now have the proud satisfaction of seeing it an accomplished fact.

We now call attention to the fact that we have converted our superb store into an exclusive Wholesale House, where you can find all lines of goods necessary for a country store, to wit: Dry-goods Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Notions, Groceries, Hardware, Millinery, all in complete lines, bought in large quantities and from the very first hands.

Our stock is now arriving and will be complete about the 1st of September, and will be the largest of any here, the pretensions of others to the contrary notwithstanding. We respectfully invite your personal inspection, or write to us for circulars.

Very truly yours,
WITTKOWSKY & RINTELS.

RETAIL

Now, a few words about that. We now occupy the superb house heretofore so favorably known as the Messrs. Brem, Brown & Co.'s Dry-goods House, to carry on our Retail business, and as "Excelsior" is, and has always been, our motto, we claim also in that line to excel in stock, to excel in lowness of prices, and to excel generally. We will, in that house, have a corps of thirty Salesmen and Sales-ladies, all experienced, affable, and obliging.

☞ We will make the Millinery branch a specialty.

PIEDMONT SPRINGS,

STOKES COUNTY, N. C.

Opened on the 20th of June for the Reception of Visitors.

These justly celebrated Springs, whose waters cure Anaemia, Dyspepsia Anorexia, Diseases of the Skin, General Debility and Neuralgia, and wonderfully restorative in diseases peculiar to females, have been the resort for invalids for years. The hotel and cottage accommodations have been greatly enlarged and beautified—the grounds ornamented—the walks and drives extended.

The new HOTEL, just completed, has an observatory from which all the beautiful scenery which surrounds these Springs can be seen. "Moore's Knob" and "Hanging Rock," spurs of the Sauratown Mountains, with their deep gorges and lofty boulders, loom up grandly amongst the clouds, immediately in front of the Hotel buildings.

HORSES AND CONVEYANCES,

for visiting the many places of interest can be obtained at trifling cost.

The Springs are easy of access, being only a short drive by a good line of stages, from Salem—Winston, the terminus of the N. W. N. C. R. R., which connects at Greensboro with all the trains going North or South.

ATTRACTIONS.

The Springs are supplied with Billiard, Bowling Saloon, Bath Rooms, experienced Laundresses, and polite Servants.

The Little Armies.

There are two little armies
On the world's great battle field;
Though mounted oft by mortals,
To the eyes of God revealed,
Though we hear no shouts of triumph,
Though we see no fearful fray,
Those little armies battle
For the right or wrong each day—
The right and wrong each day.

They must fight, no ground is neutral,
And watch the sides they take;
One little army chooses
To fight for Truth's dear sake;
The banner floating o'er it
Rises grandly up to view,
And I read the glorious motto:
"Fighting for the Good and True—
The Beautiful and True."

How brave that little army!
What a halo o'er it shines;
And even angels welcome
Every soldier to its lines.
How sweet the stirring music
Of the tramp of little feet,
That in God's holy highway
Swiftly onward, upward beat—
Onward and upward beat!

Alas, the other army,
'Neath a gloomy flag unfurl'd,
Marches with the ranks of evil
Treads the dark ways of the world.
Not for the True and Beautiful
Does it grow brave and strong,
For lo! upon its banner
I read, "Fighting for the Wrong—
Old sin's hey-hearted Wrong."

The Great Fountain.

An aged gentleman was on a visit to one of the noted American watering-places. Whilst taking a draught of water one morning at the spring, a lady came up to take her usual glass at the same time. He turning towards her, in a pleasant, yet thoughtful manner, asked: "Have you ever drank at that GREAT FOUNTAIN?'

The lady colored and looked surprised, but turned away without a word of reply.

In the following winter the gentleman was in Rochester, when he was invited to attend a meeting for religions conference and prayer. At the close of the meeting he was asked to visit a lady who was dying. As he entered the sick room, she fixed her eyes upon him and said, with a smile, 'Do you not know me?'

'No; are we not strangers to each other?' was the reply.

'Do you not recollect asking a woman at the spring last year, 'Have you ever drank at that Great Fountain?'

'Yes,' said the gentleman, 'I do remember.'

'Well, sir, I am that person. I thought at the time you were very rude, but your words kept ringing in my ears. They followed me to my chamber, to my pillow. I was without peace or rest till I found Christ. I now expect shortly to die, and you, under God, were instrumentally the means of my salvation. Be as faithful to others as you have been to me. Never be afraid to talk to strangers on the subject of religion.'—Good Words.

Harry's Chickens.

Sammy Brent lived way down South,' and was just as full of mischief as a boy of thirteen could be. One evening he came home after a ramble through the woods and by the river, and asked his brother Harry, who was eight years younger than himself:

'Harry, wouldn't you like to have some funny chickens?'

'I'm just sure I would,' answered Harry.

'Well, you take these three eggs and put them in a box of sand and set in the sun, and after a while you'll have three of the funniest chickens you ever saw.'

Harry followed his brother's directions, and morning, noon and night he might be seen watching for his brood to poke their bills up out of the sand. At last, one hot day, just before noon, the sand began to move, and the queerest kind of chickens came out. It had a long, horny, bill, a long, flat body, without feathers or wings, four feet, and a tail nearly as long as its body. As soon as Harry's excited eyes could see clearly, he exclaimed:

'Oh! oh! it's an alligator! it's an alligator come out of the egg.'

If Harry had been a little older he would have known that the alligators bury their eggs in the sand and wait for the sun to hatch them, and as soon as the young alligators appear, the mother conducts them to the water.—Hearth and Home.

Rural and Domestic.

Bee-Keeping.

Bee-keeping is honest, honorable and easy. It needs but little capital and no unusual skill; neither great strength nor profound learning. It does not depend on political favor or the smiles of the rich. Rural, but not rude; royal, but not rigorous—it asks but the smiles of nature a quiet spot. It makes by saving, and does not injure by taking. It requires many operatives, but they board and clothe themselves, requiring of their employer only a cheap, suitable place to store the product of their skill and industry, ready for his or her use, or for market. It can be done almost anywhere, and more money made from the same amount of capital and labor than in any other business.

Many a farmer loses more than he makes by not keeping bees, or not keeping them properly. He and his family grow prematurely old with plowing and reaping, mowing and hoeing, and all the drudging incident to tilling, while every flower is saying to them: "Send us bees, and we'll relieve you from wasting toil." These sable servants challenge competition in converting the sweet treasures of nature to their master's use. Spare them life; it is short at best. Let inventive genius protect and aid them: they will appreciate favors. We cannot afford to do without bees, much less to keep them in a profitless manner. The profits of bee keeping may, no doubt, be doubled; and whoever shall provide a feasible way to do it will deserve a niche with him who makes two blades of grass to grow where one grew before.—F. R., in Bee Journal.

CULTIVATION OF CORN.—It is important to make horse cultivation as cheap and expeditious as possible, for the oftener the surface of the soil is rendered mellow, even where there are no weeds, the heavier will be the crop. A large farmer in the central part of this State, who makes it a rule to cultivate his corn at least once a week till it is too large for a horse to pass, estimates a gain of at least ten bushels per acre by the operation, and in some extreme cases the improvement has been nearly twenty bushels. The practice is now increasing of harrowing over the whole surface of the field, irrespective of the rows of corn (fifteen or twenty acres a day,) both before and after the plants have come up, and where this can be done while the annual weeds are just emerging to the surface it is a rapid and economical mode of destroying them. The harrow employed must of course be fitted to this particular work.—Country Gentleman.

CRACKING OF PEARS.—One of the most intelligent and successful of the pear growers of America, according to the editor of the Gardners' Monthly, writes that journal that pears do not crack when the soil is sufficiently supplied with lime and potash, and that they crack most where these salts are deficient. Common wood ashes contain these salts nearly in the quantity and proportions that pear-trees on such soil require—forty per cent of potash and thirty of lime. Reasoning from these facts, he applied wood ashes at the rate of four hundred bushels to the acre after the fruit had formed and cracked. Many of them healed up and made perfect fruit the same season, others not until the next season. A friend, at his suggestion, applied them heavily to a favorite Butler pear-tree in his own garden for several years in succession, and has had, during that period, perfect and delicious fruit. He says he will guarantee it to cure any case where the ashes are fairly and abundantly applied. He was told by an experienced hand that he would kill the tree, but he cured them. He says, therefore, do not be afraid: if one application will not suffice, give them a larger dose next year. A moist atmosphere, he adds, undoubtedly encourages the growth of the tree and fruit, while the insufficiency of proper food prevents the perfection of either; hence cracked fruit and rough old bark."

HOW TO PRESERVE FLOWERS.—Take a deep plate, into which pour a quantity of water. Set a vase of flowers upon the plate, and over the plate set a bell glass with its rim in the water. The air that surrounds the flowers, being confined beneath the bell glass, is constantly moist with water that rises into it in the form of vapor. As fast as the water becomes condensed it runs down the side of the bell glass into the dish; and if means be taken to inclose the water on the outside of the bell glass, so as to prevent it evaporating in the air of the sitting-room, the atmosphere around the flowers is continually damp. The plan is designated the "Hopean apparatus." The experiment may be tried on a small scale by inverting a tumbler over a rosebud in a saucer of water.

LAND SALE NEAR TRINITY COLLEGE.

On the 12th day of August next, with a credit of six months, I will sell at auction upon the premises a tract of land containing three hundred acres, lying west of Trinity, and known as the Brown place. The land comes near the College Campus, has one hundred acres of wood land, dwelling house, barn, stable and all the usual buildings. This is very valuable property and affords a rare opportunity for a good investment to any man who wants a profitable farm, or desires to live near the College. The dwelling is about three fourths of a mile from the College Campus.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

An Unwholesome Season.

The closing days of winter and the early days of spring are very trying to the feeble and sensitive and are apt to affect unpleasantly even the more robust and vigorous. Nothing can be more uncongenial to the nerves or more depressing to the spirits than damp, chilling winds, fogs and cold rains, and of such unwelcome visitors we have a superabundance at this season. Common prudence suggests, therefore, the propriety of fortifying the system against these insidious enemies of health and comfort, and the experience of more than a quarter of a century points to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as the all-sufficient, sanitary safeguard under such untoward circumstances. An accession of vital strength and energy is what is required to meet and overcome the unhealthy elements now present in the atmosphere. This increase of vital power, so necessary to meet the extraordinary drafts which an inclement season makes upon the system and the constitution can be readily secured by taking from two to three doses of Hostetter's Bitters daily during the winter and spring months. The satire of this celebrated restorative is well known to the public. It is composed of an absolutely pure diffusive stimulant, medicated with the extracts and juices of the most effective tonic, alterative, and bilious and laxative roots and herbs known to medical science. To the combination of these excellent ingredients, in proportions suitable to the exigencies of infirm, languid and diseased systems, is due the great invigorating and cheering influence it is universally admitted to exert over the whole animal economy. A course of this genial tonic will prevent any attack of fever and ague, rheumatism, or other illness incident to damp, cold and changeable weather. Dyspepsia, biliousness, and also prove a safeguard against the attacks of epidemics and over complaint which so frequently are fatal to persons in the fall of the year.

DR. C. M'LANE'S
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder-blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for a rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness on exertion; he is easily startled, feels as if he had left undone something, and has a painful sensation of the skin. The appetite may be variable, although in most cases there is a voracious appetite. Dyspepsia may be present, but not always. In fact, he complains of nearly every symptom of the deranged state of the digestive organs. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where a few of them existed, yet examination after death, the body, after death, has shown the liver to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. M'LANE'S LIVER PILLS, (WITHOUT QUININE) ARE A CERTAIN CURE FOR AGUE AND FEVER, when taken in connection with Dr. C. M'LANE'S CELEBRATED LIVER PILLS. Quinine, are preparations of the most highly powerful nature, and should not be taken except by the advice of a physician. No better cathartic can be used in preparatory treatment for, or after taking QUININE. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give these Pills a fair TRIAL.

What is this Great Remedy and what is its effect? They are the question which the great American public has a right to ask, and it is upon a just and candid and satisfactory reply. The preparation has been before the people for many years, and is most extensively prepared in the form of a snuff, while powder, consolidated in the wonderful purified properties of the Cocoa Plant.

Seltzer's Spring Chemistry.

Of its effects, those who have tested the preparation are the best judges, and by the accompanying signatures, that the preparation will not supply relief in disorders, regardless to class of the disease, every species of ills liable to equalize the nerves, operate, refresh and invigorate the weak subject to the pangs of rheumatism, or other ailments to name, cold and damp weather brings. Agriculture, and also proves a safeguard against the attacks of epidemics and over complaint which so frequently are fatals prevail the year.

RESTORE YOUR SIGHT.

Spectacles Rendered Useless.

Save Your Eyes,

BEFORE YOUR SIGHT,
THROW AWAY YOUR SPECTACLES.

Old Eyes Made New.

All diseases of the Eye successfully treated by

Dr. J. BALL & CO.'S
NEW PATENT IMPROVED IVORY EYE CUPS.

Read for yourself and Restore your Sight.

Spectacles and Surgical Operations rendered useless. The Inestimable Blessing of Sight is made perpetual by the use of the new PATENT IMPROVED IVORY EYE CUPS.

Many of our most eminent physicians, oculists, etc., of Europe and America have had their sight permanently restored for life, and cured on the following diseases:

1. Impaired Vision; 2. Presbyopia, or Far-sight; 3. Amaurosis, or Obscurity of Vision; 4. Amblyopia, or Weak Eyes; 5. Epiphora, or Running or Watery Eyes; 6. Sore Eyes—especially treated without the Eye-cup—save yourself; 6. Weakness of the Retina, or Optic Nerve; 7. Ophthalmia, or Inflammation of the Eye and its appendages, or imperfect vision from the effects of Inflammation; 8. Photophobia, or intolerance of Light; 9. Overwrought Eyes; 10. Myiodesopsia—moving specks or floating bodies before the eyes; 11. Amaurosis, or Obscurity of Vision; 12. Cataracts; Partial Blindness; the loss of Sight.

Any one can use the IVORY EYE CUPS without fear of doctor or medicine so as to receive immediate beneficial results and never wear spectacles; or, if using now, to lay them aside forever. We guarantee a cure in every case where the directions are followed, or will refund the money.

2,309 CERTIFICATES OF CURE

From honest Farmers, Mechanics and Merchants—some of them the most eminent leading professional and business men, and women of education and refinement, in our country—can be found at our office.

Under date of March 29 Hon. Horace Greely, of the New York Tribune, writes: "J. Ball, of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

Prof. W. Merrick, of Lexington, Ky., wrote, April 30th, 1870: "Without my spectacles I pen you this note, after using the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS thirteen days, and this morning perused the entire contents of a daily newspaper, and all with the unassisted eye. "Truly am I grateful for your noble invention. May Heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using spectacles twenty years; I am scarcely years old.

Truly yours, PROF. W. MERRICK."

Rev. Joseph Smith, Malden, Mass., cured of Partial Blindness of 18 years' standing, in one minute, by the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS.

E. C. Ellis, late Mayor of Dayton, Ohio, wrote us, Nov. 15th, 1870: "I have tested the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS, and I am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them. They are the greatest invention of the age."

Wm. Bewly, M. D., Salvisa Ky., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions, my sight is fully restored, after being almost entirely blind for 26 years."

Alex. K. Wyeth, M. D., Atchison, Pa., writes: After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by paralysis of the optic nerve, to my utter astonishment your PATENT EYE CUPS restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes."

All persons wishing for full particulars, certificates of cures, prices, &c., will please send their address to us, and we will send our pamphlet on the ILLUSTRATED PHYSIOLOGY AND ANATOMY OF THE EYE-SIGHT, of one hundred pages, free of charge, by return mail. The Wise and Foolish Builders.

MATT. vii., 24 27.

Hear what good lessons the parables of Christ our Saviour told.
Hearest thou these words of mine, and do the work?" said He.
"Compared may be
[illegible] who own a rock doth leave
The firm foundations of the house, and there
Builds, with strong, massive work, his dwelling-place;
The rains may fall,
The current of the stinky floods may rise,
And raging winds come howling through the skies;
Against them all
His house shall stand secure, he needs not care,
Who the that hears my law, and, hearing heard,
Keeps and My word,
Like wise man he,
Upon the wet
And treacherous ground sank of the drifting sand,
When the rains fall, and waters flood the land,
And on some blow, and beat upon its wall,
It shall not stand,
For it shall fall, and great shall be its fall."
Make us hear Thy word and keep Thy way.
Teach us, we pray,
O Lord, that as the labor of our hand,
On the true Rock of Ages founded fast,
May at the last,
In the great day of trial, firmly stand!

Communicated.

For The Advocate.

To the Patrons and Friends of Greensboro Female College.

At the opening of the second year of this Institution, since it was rebuilt, we are glad to send you greetings, and acknowledge the liberal response you have made at the beginning. Our patronage last year was fully up to the expectations of the most sanguine friends of the college; and notwithstanding the extraordinary financial pressure upon the country for months past, bearing with special weight upon some sections of the State from which we have always received a liberal patronage, our present fall session opens nearly or quite as well this year as last. We have, however, ample accommodations for many more young ladies, and shall be glad to receive the increased patronage of our friends until our full capacity is met.

The special object of this communication is to call attention to, and as far as I may to remove, a misapprehension in reference to our charges, which to some extent exists, and may have the effect to keep from us some of the daughters of our people who ought to come to college, unless they can understand the facts and considerations upon which these charges are based. Allow me to call attention to a few facts. Give them candid and fair consideration.

1. The trustees of Greensboro Female College, and many friends with whom they advised from time to time, believed there was a pressing necessity to rebuild the college, and in doing so to make it in all respects a first-class institution. This required ample and comfortable accommodations, the best men and women that could be obtained for the Faculty, care of the young ladies, &c. We will not show a want of modesty by claiming that we have succeeded better than other folks in our effort, but it would be unjust to admit that we have been excelled by any. Our rooms are large, well finished, furnished and ventilated, with a good fire place in each one. In one of these rooms only four young ladies are domiciled. Living with so little crowding as in many cases they are at home. The table and other provisions for their comfort are under the watchful eye and active hand of one who has herself passed through college life and knows what a school girl needs, and who as a mother is in full sympathy with our children who are committed to her care. Those who have charge of the college believe that pupils study best while they neither live sumptuously on the one hand, nor on the other have to submit to the hard fare that usually and of necessity follows too great an effort to conduct a school upon a scale of low prices. A home-like contentment and healthful plenty will promote successful study. The children at school should fare as well as they do at home; and but few parents feel willing to deny this to their children, even if thereby they might save a few dollars. As to the general supervision of the college, and the scholastic training of the pupils, the unsurpassed ability of Rev. Dr. Jones, President, and Profs. Doub, Alderman and Hale, aided by accomplished ladies, is a sufficient guarantee.—These gentlemen have a high and justly awarded reputation, not only in our own State, but among literary men of other States. To our patrons of North Carolina, no praise from me is needed. The capability of the lady teachers is guaranteed by Dr. Jones, who selects them, and we feel confident that his selection will be endorsed by those who patronize us.

2. In order to provide such a school as was needed by our people, it became necessary for the public and for individuals to carry a financial burden, until from the income of the institution as from any other business enterprise, or from the generosity and liberality of the friends of education, this load should be lifted from their shoulders. The public aided some—a few individuals aided much more. Thus it now stands. But the college has been put in useful operation, leaving those who manage its finances with the duty of so discharging their trust that its success may be permanent. To do this, two objects must be kept in mind. 1st. To so adjust the charges as not to run the institution in debt, and thereby crush it, and with it its best friends. 2nd. To make the charges as low as will keep the college alive by paying current expenses and preventing an accumulation of interest upon its debt—thus giving the benefit of college training to as many of our daughters as practicable. To bring these two points together was the aim of the trustees. None have been more anxious to fix the charges at the lowest rate of safety than those who have fixed them as they are. With these ends in view the trustees, after a most patient and careful examination of the whole matter, fixed the charges as they are published.

3. In reaching the conclusion to which the Board of Trustees came, we were glad to find that our scale of charges was no higher, and as compared with some were lower, than similar institutions. When compared with the best schools of the leading Christian denominations of the State the charges are substantially the same.—Comparison with some of the leading Methodist Colleges outside of our State will be equally favorable to us. For example: The "Wesleyan Female Institute," at Staunton, Va., which is extensively patronized, and deservedly so, by the Baltimore and Virginia Conferences, charges $300.00 per session for board, regular tuition and music, while we charge but $10 more for two sessions—our two being something longer than their one.—This shows our charges and theirs to be almost precisely the same. The "Wesleyan Female College" at Macon, Ga., under the control of Rev. Dr. Myers, justly a favorite of several contiguous Conferences, and organized and conducted very nearly on the plan of our College, charges $200.00 for the same service for which we charge $155.00, making forty-five dollars in our favor. If we go beyond our State and church both, the difference in our favor is more decided. In the city of Baltimore the leading schools, such as Mrs. Jones of "Mount Vernon Institute," and Mrs. Cary and Mrs. Genl. Pegram's "Southern Home School," the charges are more than double ours.

4. The present charge for Board and Tuition per session is $125.00.—Add $10 for French or Latin, one of which is required of pupils who graduate. Add also $25 for music, and $5 for use of the Piano, and the total sum charged, if the pupil graduate, is $165.00 for one who graduates in the regular course and in music. A small addition for washing, lights and incidental tax, with the books needed by her, is all the necessary scholastic expenses. If parents choose to lavishly expend money for the clothing and other gratifications of their daughters at College, it will be difficult to name any sum or the aggregate cost of sending them to college. The same is true of the expense of keeping them at home. We should be held responsible only for necessary expenses, and what is expended by them under our direction and approval. The actual difference per session between our charges now and the charges of G. F. College fifteen years ago, for board, regular tuition necessary for graduation, and music, is about $60.00, or a little more than one-third of the present charges. About two-thirds of the cost of a boarding pupil is her board. The general cost of living, as all know, has increased at least up to this advance. I have before me an old set of books used by one of our leading merchants before the war. In these I find G. F. College and other parties charged with sack of flour $2.50 to $3.00. The same article now sells here at from $4.00 to $5.00 per sack. The average advance upon meal, meat, poultry, butter, eggs, &c., &c., the leading items that make up the cost of feeding young ladies, is not less than the advance upon our prices. So that if we make the estimate upon the cost to us, the necessity for our prices is shown; or if our patrons are producers of any of these articles that we consume in the college, it takes no more in kind to pay the expenses of a daughter now than it did fifteen years ago. Does not the same fact exist in favor of our patrons who pay the board, tuition, &c., of their daughters by fees and earnings—as lawyers, physicians, farmers, cotton and tobacco planters, merchants, manufacturers, mechanics and preacher,—all?

5. I have heard it said, "Your trustees are divided in opinion between high prices and low prices." I call special attention to this point, as a true statement will show how little ground there is for this misapprehension. A minority of the trustees, say one third of the number present, thought we might safely fix the charges $10 or $15 per session less for board and tuition—all agreeing as to the price of everything else. So that the only difference of opinion was in reference to this inconsiderable sum. This is the only abatement from the present prices ever proposed by any trustee in the sum total of charges for board, tuition, extras, and everything connected with the expenses of a young lady during the session. If therefore it is meant simply to say there was this difference of opinion, amounting to perhaps 5 per cent the aggregate cost of sending a daughter to college, the statement is true; but if it is meant that any of the trustees favored "old prices," or any greater abatement than I have stated, injustice has been done to them, and to the majority who fixed the charges as they now are.

I have made this statement long, perhaps too tedious. But we submit to the fair judgment of our friends, whether we are not entitled to their cordial support and approval. In our struggles to give the country and church a first-class college, and make its existence and blessing permanent, we have fixed our charges as low as other similar institutions of other churches in our State—as low, and even lower, than similar institutions in our own church in other States—and very far below many of the higher class of schools outside of our State and church. Will a generous and fair minded public ask as to do more than we are now doing—giving them full value for all they pay us? In doing so would they, if they could, dry up a fountain of knowledge opened with such effort? Give us your prayers, a just approval, and your patronage, and posterity will bless your memory and ours.

Supply of Rail Roads with the Holy Scriptures.

The circular below will explain itself, and I respectfully ask the papers of the State, friendly to the Bible cause, to publish it, together with this note.

The Western N. C. Rail Road, and the Atlantic, Tennessee & Ohio Road have been supplied with Bibles by the liberality of one individual: and now that the only expense will be that of racks to hold the Scriptures, I hope to be able to secure the necessary amount among the auxiliary societies thro' whose fields the other roads pass, and from the authorities of the roads.

As soon as all the information necessary to further action is obtained, I will communicate, if spared, with the auxiliaries referred to, and in the mean time, will gladly receive contributions for the great purpose indicated from liberal minded parties in any section of the State.

C. H. WILEY,
District Superintendent
for A. B. S. in N. C.
Winston, Aug. 28th, 1874.

TO THE PRESIDENT AND DIRECTORS OF THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY—

Gentlemen: During the past few years several thousand volumes of Scripture have been placed upon the Cars of many of the leading Rail Roads, for the use of Passengers and Employees. The repeated assurances received from travellers, of the satisfaction afforded them in having the Bible within their reach while journeying from place to place, and the very general interest manifested by the friends of the Bible, have induced the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society to offer to all the Railroad Corporations in the country a supply of Bibles and Testaments for their Passenger and Caboose Cars, on condition that suitable Racks are placed in the same for the reception of the Books.

A special edition, convenient and ornamental, has been published for this purpose, viz: the "Brevier Bible," bound in two volumes, and the "Pica Testament and Psalms," also bound in two volumes. These four volumes are an adequate supply for one Passenger Car. For each Caboose Car a single "Brevier Bible," in plain binding, will be furnished

I am charged by the Board of Managers to make this special communication to you, and it is hoped you will be able to accommodate the public in this matter.

Awaiting your official action and response, I remain

Yours truly,
ALEXANDER MCLEAN,
Cor Sec. A. B. S.

Fraternity North and South.

VIEWED FROM A FOREIGN STANDPOINT.

A correspondent of the Christian Guardian, the able organ of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada, furnishes an article on the "M. E. Church, South, and Fraternity." He begins:

"If at our approaching General Conference fraternal correspondence should be opened with the M. E. Church, South, no doubt many of our people would like to know something about the numercial strength and influence of that body. In supplying this information we shall also see that the offer of fraternity on the part of the M. E Church of the North was not made to a mere handful of schismatics—an acknowledged secession—but to a large, influential and respectable branch of genuine Methodists."

Then after noticing at length the progress of Southern Methodism subsequently to the war and its present prosperous condition, this correspondent sketches the history and character of "union" and "fraternity" propositions of the M. E. Church, enlarging upon certain features of the report on Fraternity adopted by the General Conference at Brooklyn, particularly the utter and studied disregard of the Plan of Separation, and likewise the withdrawal of that part of the report which provided for settling church property difficulties. "We mention," he says "these facts because the M. E. Church through its official press has boasted so much of its magnanimity toward the Southern Church in offering them their fraternal greetings; and because the South did not reply just to suit their fancy they have been all up in arms, denouncing them as hostile, exclusive and unfriendly." He then gives a summary of the report on Fraternity adopted by our General Conference at Louisville and adds these just and sensible remarks:

"This is a fair synopsis of the report against which so much exception has been taken. The language is dignified, but not unfriendly nor unfraternal. They present an honorable, straight forward, and unreserved statement of their views of the whole subject. They do not want a sham fraternity, but a genuine, Christian fraternity, if any. What is the use of healing over the top of a wound, while beneath the surface there is an angry festering sore which will soon break out, probably worse than it was before? There are bitter disputes between the two Churches. It was only last month that a valuable church property case was decided in the Chancery Court of Jonesboro,' Tenn. The property is in the suburbs of Johnson City, and consists of four acres of land and a parsonage. It was deeded in 1811 to the M. E Church, but passed over to the M. E. Church, South, by the Plan of Separation in 1844. Since the war, some of the trustees having gone over to the Church North, put the property into the possession of the latter. The suit was decided in favor of the trustees of the M. E. Church, South, and rents allowed from the date of the filing of the bill. But the trustees of the M. E. Church 'prayed an appeal to the Supreme Court.' There are many cases of this kind. What then is the use of fraternity that will not recognize these difficulties, nor take any steps toward settling them upon 'principles of equity and Christian charity?' And yet this was the course adopted by the M E. Church. Why condemn the M. E. Church, South, because she alluded to these things? It seems to us that men might just as well condemn the Apostle Paul for the reply he sent to the magistrates at Phillippi. Some would say to Paul: 'Why, Paul, you ought to be thankful for your liberty, and the privilege of going about your business How dare you remind them of their treatment of you, and demand them to come and bring you out of prison?' But Paul says: 'They have beaten us openly, uncondemned, being Romans, etc. The members of the M. E. Church, South, are Roman citizens, (genuine Methodists.) But how have they been treated by the M. E. Church? They have called them schismatics—their Church a secession; they persecuted them before the war as the upholders of slavery, they have persecuted them since the war as the aiders and abettors of treason and rebellion; they have enticed from them a large portion of their colored members; they have taken possession of, and still hold a number of their churches; and now that the tendencies of the age demand that the Churches draw nearer together, they say: 'We'll acknowledge them as our brethren, but we won't say anything about their property which we hold.' Is it to be wondered at that the Southern Church should kindly remind them how they had rejected their offer of fraternity in 1016, because there were 'serious questions and difficulties existing between the two bodies?' And can we blame them for stating their honest convictions as to what they conceive to be the only method of securing formal fraternity, honorable alike to all? After a careful perusal of the whole subject, we fail to see just cause for reprehension."

The drift of this correspondent's argument is discernible in the question at the close of his article: "As there is no difficulty between them and us, would it not be well for us to be on fraternal terms with them?" But it puts the case of South vs. North in so clear a light, and from a standpoint so unlikely to be partial toward the South, that it is worthy of acceptance as a conclusive judgment.—Western Methodist.

What will you do in Heaven.

About thirty years ago, when stage-coaches were the usual means of conveying passengers from one place to another, a minister of keen habits of observation happened on one occasion to ride from Norwich to London. It was a cold winter's night, and the minister was obliged to ride on top, the inside of the coach being full. The driver, vexed with the difficulties of the way, poured forth an almost uninterrupted stream of oaths and curses, greatly to the digust of all the passengers. The minister, who sat with him, said nothing, but kept looking at him with his sharp and penetrating eyes.—The driver at last could no longer endure it, and, turning suddenly upon him, he asked in a harsh tone:

"Why do you look at me so, sir?"

The minister replied:

'I was thinking what you would do in heaven, where there are neither bad roads, nor stage-coaches, nor harnesses, nor reins, nor hotels—where there is nobody and nothing which you can curse, or on which you can expend your ungodly reproaches. I really cannot think what you will do in heaven."

The coachman, convicted, answered not a word. The preacher, too, was silent; and at the end of his journey each of them went his way, apparently regardless of the other.

Many years afterward, when the preacher had perhaps forgotton all about the occurrence, a messenger one day informed him that a dying man wished to see him at the country inn.—He went, and found the sick man lying on a bed in a room hung around with curry-combs, saddles, and the like.

"Sir," said the dying man, "do you remember a coachman some years ago who drove you over Newmarket heath one cold night, and uttered the most dreadful oaths?"

"Yes,' replied the minister.

"I am that driver,' said the dying man; "and I could not die in peace without telling you that the words you then said to me—'I cannot think what you will do in heaven'—awakened in me great anxiety. When I was driving over the heath, it seemed to me as if the flames of hell were raging and rising between the wheels of my stage coach. And though I drove my horses furiously, your words followed me, sounding continually in my ears.'

How the minister directed this poor swearer to a new and nobler life we need not say: for what way is there to heavenly peace for an anxious soul except through the Cross?

Without pursuing the narrative further, let us look a moment at the words, 'I cannot think what you will do in heaven.' These words have a message for every one who seeks his happiness anywhere out of Christ. In heaven a man cannot "make money," nor gain honor, without the only indispensible qualification, true humility; he can pursue neither "the lust of the flesh, nor the lust of the eyes, nor the pride of life;' he can no more give himself up to back-biting, nor excess, nor envy, nor passion, nor strife; and those who find pleasure in these things, cannot enter it.

This being so, now many who are called the children of God are unfit for heaven! What a change they must undergo before they can see God, who purges his people like gold tried in the fire, and who leads them to glory through the Cross! Judgment must "begin at the house of God.' "If they do these things in the green tree what shall be done in the dry?' 'I do not know what you will do in heaven.' Only one thing can shut us out from heaven—sin; and only one thing can secure for us admission—righteousness.—Watchman and Reflector.

Models of Prayer.

We have been interested in looking through the Scriptures for the purpose of comparing the prayers therein recorded with those which we hear from time to time in public, and we are astonished to see how they differ in point, expression, directness, and, above all, in length, from those heard in these days in the Christian pulpit. It is not exaggeration to say that we have listened to a single prayer longer than the whole ten that we find in the Bible put together. The first is in Genesis xxiv, 1214, and contains one hundred and ten words, and it is not more than one minute in length. The next is Exodus xxxiii, 12-15, and contains one hundred and eleven words, and is not over a minute longer. The third is in Joshua vii, 7-9, and contains ninety words. The fourth is in 2 Kings xix, 15-16, the prayer of Hezekiah; it is composed of one hundred and thirty-four words, and two minutes would be ample time to repeat it. Another is found in Nehemiah i, 5-11 and is about two minutes in length; another in Ezra ix, 6-15, and is about three minutes long; another is in 1 Kings viii, 23-61, and important dedicatory prayer, offered by Solomon himself at the dedication of temple, and it did not occupy more than six minutes; while that of Daniel ix 11-19 was probably four minutes long. In the New Testament, the prayer of our Saviour (John xvii) is well known; it is contained in twenty six verses, and is five minutes long, while the model prayer—the Lord's Prayer—is far briefer still. Now here are ten prayers, from those who certainly knew how to pray, and they are all less than thirty five minutes long, or an average of three minutes each; and yet we sometimes hear men praying thirty and forty minutes, and after wandering all over the moral universe, and wearying their fellow worshipers with vain repetitions, utterly fail of the prime object of all public prayer—to lift up the hearts of men to commune with heaven. It must be an extraordinary occasion, equal at least, to the dedication of the Jewish temple at Jerusalem—an occasion that none of us shall ever see—to justify a prayer more than five minutes long. There are few "Ohs" and "Ahs' in these models. These authors do not often say, "O Lord, Lord,' but tenderly, simply, they ask the blessing they desire, as though they were children who knew that they were addressing One who was more willing to give them good gifts than they were to ask them at his hand.—Gospel Banner.

A Leaf From A Diary.

On a late Sabbath we heard a young minister preach his first sermon. He was well equipped for the service, and not unfamiliar with public speaking, and expounded like a veteran. Such good fortune did not fall to a certain Helper some sixteen years ago, on his first Circuit not far from this city. He had not been a member of the Church over four months, and was ill-fitted for the work of a large field. His preparation for the pulpit was rude, and the execution clumsy. The only plan of sermonizing he knew was taking a text and making a short speech on it. Heads, division, subdivisions, inferences, applications—"the six-teenthlies" were names and tools he was ignorant of. He bungled, but it was his best, and he ought to have had encouragement. In every congregation there is a person who "pitches" for the rest,—the criticism on the new preacher. He leads—the balance follow. The Oracle of the Amen Corner gave his opinion that the young brother had missed his calling. A second sermon only confirmed the correctness of the first decision. There are always kind friends to tell a poor stripling Circuit-rider of any adverse opinions. The criticism cut to the quick, but didn't kill. The Junior took the measure of the Sage and set a snare for him.

There was a copy of Maffit's Sermons in an out-of-the-way preacher's home on the Circuit. The young and sore "second man" borrowed it. He began to memorize the biggest one in the book—the one on "Peace on Earth," etc. It was hard to get by heart. The sentences were so long, swelling, and breathless. Happily, the Circuit was six weeks around. By the time he was nearing the church of the Sage, every word of Maffit was well in mind. The pauses were carefully marked in the rehearsal, and every sentence came up as it sat on the page. Sunday was at hand, and there sat the Sage. The text, "Peace on Earth," made the solemn sitter in the Amen Corner wrinkle his brows in amazement at the rashness of such deep wading by such short legs. The Junior in calm confidence rolled off in measured periods the eloquent discours. The Sage looked at the opposite wall, and probably thought of the frost catching his tobacco more than "good will to men."

The girls were tickled at the rainbow rhetoric. The devout women not a little moved at some stirring sentences. The boys, sure of their own sweethearts from any capture by a Junior under a cloud, where generous enough to admit he was improving. They all were anxious for the opinion of the Oracle. He shook his head, and hinted swapping off the Junior to another appointment. This of course came to the ears of the young preacher, who quietly passed around the printed sermon, with the comment that the man who could not tell his stuff from Maffit's Best must be dozing or a donkey.

The critic wilted.

Brethren, be gentle with the boys just starting.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

The Grace of Gladness.

One spring of gladness is wholesome noble work. No man is glad when living to himself. Man is made for the life of communion; the perfect form of human life was the life which found its blessedness in giving itself to mankind. There is physical gladness in the glow of a healthy body.—That glow is the fruit of energetic action. Thus sluggards, laggards, know nothing of the physical joy of life.—Work for God, work for man, work that is twice blessed, which blesseth him that gives and him that takes, is the correspondent condition of a vigorous, glowing health in the spiritual sphere. The old monks were glad because their lives were fruitful. I speak of their best days; they became the laziest and dreariest men in Christendom. But when the institution was young they had work on hand which they believed the world would rejoice in. They believed themselves the saviours of society; that by their toils, their tears, their prayers, they were helping it, beyond the power of kings and captains to help it; that their uplifted hands kept heaven's gate open; that their constant service was a heaven's ladder by which angels of God descended upon the world. Let loose the wings of your loving ministry; stir your soul to some work which shall scatter blessings. If you would taste joy, fresh and pure from its fountain, do good, be ready to communicate. It is this which makes the soul instinct with vigor, aglow with health, and radiant with joy. Man is a crippled, a half developed being, until his unselfish ministry is drawn forth. When he has tasted the joy of doing good, he is like the lame after Peter's touch; he goes ont into a great temple of life, walking, and leaping, and praising God. Try it. If life is sad, make it glad by service, service that strains your power, that a higher power only can make you strong enough to render. But here we touch the deep perennial fountain of gladness—the joy of the Holy Ghost. The joy of a man who believes that God is with him is exuberant, irrepressible. The delight of doing the will of God, to those who have tasted it masters all other joy. "My meat and my drink is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work."—London Congregationalist.

Where Are the Sermons?

Perhaps upwards of a hundred thousand of them are preached every week, heard by millions of people, yet where are they afterwards? Men sit studying at them for days, reading, transcribing, comparing, digesting, writing, reviewing; and in fear and trembling, and with much effort preach them on the Sabbath, after which they seem to have no existence. Many of them are sermons full of deep, strong thought, tinged with poetry, made to glow with passion, and abounding in the best moral lessons, all of which appear to waste as distributed—as spilled, like water on the ground, where it cnanot be gathered. But the rain-drops which cannot be collected are not lost; they show existence in the growth of flower and fruit, and in the fountains gushing from the hill-side. So the sermons live in the improved lives of those who hear them, and in the streams of influence and Christian power which are gushing forth from the church of God.—United Presbyterian.

Alarming Sins.

If I were called to point out the most alarming sins to day—those which are most deceitful in their influence, and most soul-destroying in their ultimate effects—I would not mention drunkenness with all its fearful havoc, nor gambling with its crazed victims, nor harlotry with its hellish orgies; but the love of money on the part of men, and the love of display on the part of women. While open vice sends its thousands, these fashionable and favored indulgences send their ten thousands to perdition. They sear the conscience, incrust the soul with an impenetrable shell of worldliness, debauch the affections from every high and heavenly object, and make man or woman the worshipper of self. While doing all this, the poor victim is allowed by public opinion to think himself or herself a Christian; while the drunkard, the gambler or the prostitute is not deceived by such a thought for a moment.—Dr. Crosby.

The last but one of the English Government expeditions for observing the transit of Venus, has sailed from Plymouth, for New Zealand. The last—that for Egypt—will leave England in October.

SCIENCE.

Mr. ANDERSON, the giver of Penikese Island for Agassiz's scheme of a school for natural history, announces that he will give $50,000 more to further aid the enterprise, if others will make up a fund of $200,000. The school opened on July 9th, for the season, with forty-seven pubils, and the number will be increased as the season advances. It is urged that Mr. Anderson's generosity should be responded to by the contributions of others, inasmuch as hitherto the school which he established has been maintained solely at his expense.

It is stated by Les Mondes that the organization of the French National Observatory will soon be complete. The French Government has voted 30,000 francs to the meteorological department, and M. Le Verrier is about to resume the work of international meteorology, with the fixed intention of abandoning local meteorology to the departmental observatory of Mont-Souris. The printing has been begun of a very large catalogue of stars observed at the Paris Observatory. MM. Fizeau and Cornu are measuring anew the speed of light under conditions which encourage the expectation of definite result.

Health Hints.

EFFECTS OF SHOES ON HEALTH.—Wooden shoes are highly recommended by some of the scientific societies, and in some instances by the governments of Europe, it having been ascertained that not a few diseases, resulting in impaired constitutions, and even in the loss of life, have resulted from the practice of wearing leather shoes in wet weather. An experienced workman from France was a short time since called to Germany to superintend the manufacture of wooden shoes on an extensive scale in the latter country.—These are represented as being light and easy to wear, and are provided with a small cushion with the upper side, to obviate any pressure on that part of the foot. They are also said to be of neat and pleasing appearance, blackened or varnished; are made large enough to accommodate comfortable stockings, and are furnished with leather straps.

COFFEE VS. GOUT.—Dr. Monchaux, in the Revue de Therapeutigue, recommends to persons troubled with gout to put a tablespoonful of green or unroasted coffee in half a tumbler of pure water, of the temperature of the surrounding air, and after it has stood some 24 hours to drink off the liquid immediately upon getting up in the morning. The glass is again to be filled with water, and the drinking practiced as before. The liquid obtained in this way is of a green color, more or less tinged with blue, according to the kind of coffee used. Without undertaking to determine the chemical composition of the water, Dr. M. states that the grains swell considerably and sometimes sprout, throwing off small bubbles of gas, which he presumes to be carbonic acid, and he is inclined to think that the liquid attacks rather the effects of the malady than the disease itself, suppressing the former from day to day, while the latter remains, thus rendering a daily use of the remedy necessary.

REMEDY FOR CANCER.—Colonel Ussery, of De Soto, Louisiana, says that he fully tested a remedy for this troublesome disease, recommended to him by a Spanish woman, a native of the country. The remedy is this: Take an egg and break it, pour out the white, retaining the yolk in the shell; put in salt, and mix with the yolk as long as it will receive it; stir them together until the salve is formed; put a portion of this on a piece of sticking-plaster, and apply to the cancer about twice a day. He tried the remedy twice in his own family with entire success. It has also been tried on two cases in Rhode Island with perfect success. Such a remedy is within the reach of one, and should be made known to the whole world.

CURE FOR SORE THROAT.—Phillips' Southern Farmer gives the following remedy for this troublesome complaint:—"Dampen a flannel cloth with coal oil and fasten it around the neck just before retiring, and if the soreness be not entirely gone in the morning it will be greatly lessened, and by repeating the treatment for several nights it will disappear. Many persons will shudder when the remedy is even mentioned, but our advice to all such parties is, don't cry until you are hurt. Coal oil has many curative properties which coming ages will know and appreciate. We assure our readers it is as harmless as turpentine, and far more efficient that many patent nostrums which you have swallowed with enthusiasm.

Rev. S. V. Hoyle, from Warren circuit, writes us that the recent meetings at Hebron and another part on his circuit, resulted in 122 happy conversions.

We learn from Rev. W. J. W. Crowder, that at an interesting meeting which he has been conducting near the city, there have been 32 conversions. There is no church organized, as yet, in that neighborhood, but steps will be taken immediately to form a society

We call attention to the article on our first page from Rev. Dr. Wilson, giving some important facts relative to Greensboro Female College. It is not necessary for us to add a word to what he has so well said. Read carefully his article, and by your influence, means and patronage, help this cherished institution of our Conference.

Mrs. Wightman is in company with the Bishop attending District Conferences. The Christian Neighbor says that her sincerity, plainness and modesty, evince without effort, her eminent fitness for the position of helpmeet to a Bishop.

Rev. A. W. Mangum, the popular Pastor of Edenton Street Church, who has been absent from his charge for several weeks, on a visit to Catawba Springs, returned last week. He shows that rest has been of great service to him, and he resumes his labors with renewed zeal. He is now holding a series of religious meetings in his church.

We have received a catalogue of Davenport Female College for the year 1873-74. It is neatly published by J. J. Bruner, Salisbury, and contains lists of the Trustees, officers, instructors and pupils, together with other matters usually contained in catalogues of similar character. Davenport has opened well for the present session and we trust it will continue to prosper. For catalogue, address the President at Lenoir, or the agent, Rev. T. J. Gattis, at Hillsboro.

Rev. J. M. Carlisle.—This excellent brother and member of the South Carolina Conference has been spending some time in Raleigh on a visit to his sister, Mrs. J. M. Blair. We regret to find him in such feeble health, and trust that his visit to our State will prove beneficial to him. His preaching while amongst us was very much enjoyed by our people. His sermons are characterized by great clearness and simplicity. May his life be long spared to the church!

Our State Fair.—The premium list of the approaching State Fair is full and attractive. It affords us pleasure to say that among the rules and regulations by which it is to be governed is that:

"Drunkenness, gambling, quarreling, loud talking, cursing, obscene language, and the like are offensive, for which ejection from the grounds will be summarily enforced."

All drinking and gambling of every description should be kept out of our Fairs, and we believe it is the purpose of those having charge of our State Fair to remove all objectionable features which so often characterize such occasions. It begins October the tenth and closes on the seventeenth.

Stewards.

There is no office in our church of more vital importance to its success that the stewardship. We have known small, and comparatively poor churches to grow and prosper under the wise and liberal administration of good Stewards. And we have known large and wealthy churches to languish under inefficient Stewards.

A penurious Steward will make, almost invariably, a penurious Society, and a liberal Steward will be very apt to infuse his spirit into his brethren. A negligent Steward, like the barren fig tree, cumbereth the ground. His duties are peculiar to his office, and can only be done by himself. If these duties are not performed by him they will never be performed, and the church must suffer by it. The discipline requires that the Stewards shall be men of solid piety, who both know and love the Methodist doctrine and discipline, and of good natural and acquired abilities to transact the temporal business of the church."—Tryon Sc. Record.

Maj. J. M. Blair has removed to Concord and taken charge of a Hotel in that place. He and his excellent lady left last week. We wish them abundant success. Sister Blair is an earnest Christian and a true Methodist. We commend her to our Methodist people in Concord.

Getting Ready for Conference.

Our Conference year is rapidly drawing to a close. It is only about two and a half months before we shall assemble in annual session.—There remains much yet to be done. The Conference collections are to be raised. The habit of putting off the several collections ordered by the church to the close of the year, may in some instances work well, but in the majority of cases we believe it would be better to divide the work so as not to throw these collections so near together. The amount would be larger and those who contribute would do so more cheerfully and with less inconvenience. In certain portions of our work, however, especially among the farmers these collections might, without detriment, be put off until their crops are ready for market.—Each pastor in taking up these collections will of course endeavor to select the best time and use the most effectual means to get the largest amount of money possible. The amount assessed for Conference fund at our late session is $6.000.00. The amount is apportioned among the several Districts and each pastor knows the amount apportioned to his charge. This amount is to be divided among thirty-eight claimants, and we trust every dollar of it will be paid.—The Bishops fund for our Conference is $1.660.00. Of course this amount will be raised. Of the Missionary collection we propose to speak hereafter.

There are other things necessarily implied in getting ready for Conference. The law of the church requires that each pastor shall keep a directory in which the residences of all the members shall be noted, wherever it may be necessary to facilitate pastoral visiting. To see that all the people within the bounds of his charge be duly supplied with our books and periodicals: to leave his successor a particular account of his charge—including an account of the subscribers for our periodicals. Added to these and other important considerations in getting ready for Conference, is the duty of carefully revising the church records. It is always embarrassing to a preacher to enter upon a pastoral charge with a confused church record. To the young preachers, a thorough acquaintance with the course of study as prescribed by the church, is of prime importance in preparing for Conference. The following is the course prescribed:

COURSE OF STUDY.

For Admission on Trial.—The Bible in reference to doctrines generally; Wesley's Sermons on Justification by Faith, and on the Witness of the Spirit; Book of Discipline; the ordinary branches of an English Education.

First Year.—The Bible in reference to its historical and biographical parts and chronology; Book of Discipline, with special reference to Chap. I, Secs. 1 and 2; Manual of Discipline, Chaps. I and II; Wesley's Sermons, Vol. 1; Ralston's Elements of Divinity; Watson's Institutes, Part IV; Preacher's Manual; History of the organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by A. H. Redford; Written Sermon on Repentance.

Books of Reference.—Watson's Biblical and Theological Dictionary; Theological Compend; Fletchers' Works; Watson's Life of Wesley.

Second Year.—The Bible in reference to its prophetical parts; Wesley's Sermons, Vol. II; Watson's Institutes, Part III; Smith's Elements of Divinity; Book of Discipline with special reference to Chaps, II, III and IV; Manual of Discipline, Chaps. III and IV; Coppee's Rhetoric; Written Sermon on Justification by faith.

Books of Reference.—Newton or Keith on the Prophecies; Angus' Hand-book of the Bible; Claude's Essay on the Composition of a Sermon; Watson's Sermons; Bickerstith on the Spirit of Life; Whately's Rhetoric.

Third Year.—The Bible in reference to the Life of Christ: Wesley's Sermons, Vol. III; Watson's Institutes, Part II; Coppee's Logic; Rivers' Mental Philosophy; Edgar's Variations of Popery; Book of Discipline, with special reference to Chap. V, to the end; Manual of Discipline, Chap. V, VI and VII; Written Sermon on the Witness of the Spirit.

Books of Reference.—Young's Christ of History; Neander's Life of Christ; Hickok's Mental Science; Vinet's Pastoral Theology; Stevens' History of Methodism; Paine's Life of McKendree; D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation; Whately's Logic.

Fourth Year.—The Bible in reference to the Acts and Epistles, their analysis and design; Wesley's Sermons, Vol. IV; Watson's Institutes, Part I; Powell on Apostolical Succession; Hickok's Moral Science; Mosheim's Church History; Summer's on Baptism; Book of Discipline, reviewed; Manual of Discipline, Chaps. VIII and IX; Written Sermon on Regeneration.

Books of Reference.—Butler's Analogy; Bingham's Antiquities; Rivers' Moral Philosophy; Hoppin's Homiletics; Wall on Infant Baptism, Litton's Church; Neander's Church History; Liddon on the Divinity of our Lord; Conybeare and Howson's Life and Epistles of St. Paul.

Commentaries.—Clark's. Watson's Exposition, Wesley's Notes, Summers on the gospels, Stiers Words of the Lord Jesus, Lange on the New Testament, Olshausen on the New Testament, Alford on the New Testament, Bloomfield on the New Testament, McKnight on the Epistles, Henry's Exposition, Whitby's Commentary.

Note.—The Examination will be confined to the Course of Study. The Books of reference are recommended to be read, and the Commentaries to be consulted.

Dear Bro. Bobbitt: Our dedication comes off at Macon next Sunday. We would be glad if you would come down and participate in the services. We have a gem of a church and hope to have a nice time and look for a revival. Our Hebron meeting was successful resulting in 61 conversions making, in all at two meetings, 122.

S. V. H.

Warrenton, N. C., August 25th, '74.

Rev. A. H. Redford, D D.

The name which heads this article has become familiar to our readers through the discussion touching the management of the Publishing House. The distinguished Doctor retires from the field of controversy which he, of his own record, entered with so much zeal and self-assurance. In what plight he withdraws can be readily seen from the style of his last article. More than a month ago we proposed to dismiss the matter, but the Doctor, fond of battle, raised the black flag and proposed to "fight it out on that line if it took all summer." We congratulate the Doctor and his readers that he has at last become convinced of the wisdom of retreat and quits the contest which his own temerity brought upon him. His desperation has led him into palpable errors, and his warmest supporters are grieved that he should have resorted to personalities, in order to avoid a fair and honorable discussion.

We knew that the Doctor had grown desperate, but were not prepared for the style which characterized his last flimsy attempt at a reply. We were grieved, amused and astonished, in turn: grieved that one, clothed with such honorable titles and occupying so responsible a position in the church, should so far forget the amenities of discussion and the demands of Christian feeling as to descend into a style more befitting the heated harangues of the hustings, than the columns of a religious journal. We were amused that the Doctor, who at the outset, assumed the mien and manner of a Sir Oracle, whose dicta dare not be gainsayed, should forget his role of unruffled serenity and display the weakness of a spoilt temper. We did not expect Brother Redford to indulge in the rude personalities which his last article directs against us: and were therefore greatly astonished at the turn he would fain give the discussion. We are not sore from the unbrotherly thrusts he has made at us personally. We can stand them if he can afford to make them. But the Doctor ought to reflect that, like the boomerang which the South Sea Islander sometimes finds returning with deadly force upon himself, the weapon he has adopted will recoil and hurt himself more than it can injure us. He grows angry like the bees which kill themselves in stinging. If the Doctor will allow us to be his Mentor for once, we would advise him never to grow angry in a discussion:—it is not only naughty but unsafe. He who indulges in it gives his opponent great vantage ground. It may be excusable in people of inferior associations and fewer advantages of good training, but it is highly improper in a Doctor of Divinity and a trusted officer of the church.

The little item which we published in the Advocate of June 10th, contained nothing to excite the Doctor to such a harsh and nervous reply as he was pleased to make. It did not assail the Publishing House or its agent. It was a simple statement of a fact.—It may, in the estimation of Dr. Redford, have been wrong and disloyal in us to make a statement that included a criticism upon his management, but we were somehow possessed of the idea that the Publishing House was the property of the Methodist Church, South,—that we were publishing a paper for a Southern Methodist Conference, and that we had, somehow, a right to know why it was that Southern Methodists were compelled to pay more for books at their Publishing House than in Northern book markets. We had heard of the existence of no gag law, either common or statutory, in our church, enforcing silence on public church interest, and were modestly exercising the prerogative of free-speech, when lo! the vials of the Doctor's wrath came uncorked and emptied themselves on our head.

Why the agent should be so sensitive we do not comprehend any more than the thousands who have recently seen the evidences of his nervousness. Nor do we understand or appreciate the sense of fairness that enables him to get under cover of the Publishing House and cry 'treason!' 'disloyalty!' and 'persecution!' when it is proposed to examine into the wisdom of his management. The only interpretation that can be placed upon his conduct is that he has a weak cause and loose harness into which an arrow would too easily enter.

Brother Price, the able editor of the Holston Methodist, in his paper of the 29th ult., says of this discussion:

"We have read Brother Bobbitt's articles and we see in them no evidence of any intention to injure the Publishing House. The Publishing House is public property, and our ministers and members have a right to discuss its interests publicly. There is no need of any gag law on this subject."

The opinion of Brother Price is the opinion of a large majority of our people, and we take it, of a majority, if not all of our church papers. The statement of one of the Doctor's nameless correspondents that we opposed the passage of a resolution endorsing the Nashville Advocate at the Shelby District Conference, is wholly without foundation as the President and members of the Conference will bear witness. We spoke of the Nashville Advocate in language which would have met the approval of the Doctor himself had he been present. The statement, too, that our paper is losing subscribers in consequence of the discussion is untrue. If we have lost a single subscriber by the controversy, the fact has not been made known to us. On the contrary, we are happy to say that we added more new names to our list during the month of August than ever before during the same month since our connection with the paper. Its prospects were never so bright as now. If a discussion with one Doctor of Divinity will kill it, it ought to die, and the sooner the better, although that Doctor may "lay the flattering unction to his soul" that in him is centered the rising and setting of the great ecclesiastical sun of the Methodist Church, South.

We do not regret anything we have said since the discussion commenced. We have fulfilled our duty and called attention to the need of reformation and change in Dr. Redford's policy.—We will be satisfied if that need is met. We repeat that the books of our Publishing House are too high for general circulation. The church is too poor to pay such extravagant prices. If they were lower a much larger circulation could be secured, our people would be better informed in the literature of the church and the sales being larger, the profits would be greater. While the books are too high the Nashville Advocate is too cheap. There is no paper North or South, with which we are acquainted, of like size with the Advocate, which is published at a lower figure than $2.50 per annum. When Dr. Redford reduced the price to $2, he was severely criticised by most of our church papers. We took no part in the warm controversy which ensued, thinking that the Doctor could realize a profit to the Book Concern at the price he set upon the Advocate. Having become better acquainted with the publishing business, we are convinced that the Nashville Advocate cannot, with profit, be published for less than $2.50 per annum.

We asked the Doctor to point out the inaccuracies in the calculation we made of the cost of the Nashville Advocate, but he refused to do so.—We asked him how it was that the paper could be published for so little, while the books were higher than those of other publishing houses.—To this he gives no answer. We appealed to the Doctor to explain why it was that Northern houses could buy our publications from him and sell them to our preachers at a better per cent than they could get them from head quarters, but he declines to answer and repeats the cry of 'hostility to the Publishing House.' We hold that these are questions which we, in common with all other members of the Methodist Church, South, have a right to propound, and when the agent refuses to answer, he places himself in a questionable light before the church.

We now dismiss the subject from our columns, and beg that those who have sent us articles upon the subject will accept this as our reason for withholding the same from publication. In quitting the subject, we wish to assure the irate Doctor of our hearty good-humor and to beg that he will reduce the temperature of his feelings a few degrees at least. We hope that as the hot days of the summer have passed, the Doctor may find some relief.

We desire, also, to assure him and all connected with the Book Concern that we are ready and willing to assist them, in any way, in promoting the interests of the great and cherished enterprise of which they have control. We are a Southern Methodist, proud of Southern Methodism, fond of her pleasant paths and cherished highways, attached to her interests and loyal to her every institution. Despite the cry of treason which may be hurled at us to divert attention from the main fact in issue, our voice shall ever be heard in defence and praise of what is good and commendable in the management of our institutions. Our paper and our energies are subject to the commands of the church, and will always be found among the first to respond to her call.

Bro. Bobbitt: In obedience to the call of the Bishops of our church, Friday the 20th inst. was almost, universally observed as a day of fasting and prayer in the neighborhood of Bethel church. Divine service was held in the church by our beloved pastor, the Rev. R. O. Barton and the meeting has been protracted and is still progressing. The truth as presented by our pastor from time to time, is proving the power of God unto salvation to those who hear. A feeling of deep solemnity pervades the entire congregation—indeed, save on one occasion, at a camp-meeting at Peirce's, years ago, I have never witnessed such a manifestation of divine power in the conviction of sinners and conversion of penitents. All seem impressed, the young and the old. As the result of these labors up to this time, we have to report the baptism of eight infants and two adults—38 conversions, twenty-seven added to the church, and 17 penitents at the altar crying for mercy. To God be all the praise!

The indications are for a general good work in the circuit. We have a beautiful and commodious church nearly completed at Weldon, one in process of construction at New Hope, and have commenced to get the timbers for still another at Edmund's. When these are completed we will have a comfortable house of worship at every appointment in the circuit.

Yours &c.,

E. A. Thorn.

Roanoke circuit, Aug. 29th. 1874.

Letters and Funds crowded out.

Mr. Editor: In your last issue a correspondent from Virginia, refers to the utterances of our Southern visitors to Round Lake and Sea Cliff.

He assures us that "Bishop Doggett and Dr. Lee were badly reported," that they did not say the things reported of them in the papers."

Now, the visit of these honored men of the M. E. Church, South, to Round Lake and Sea Cliff, has been noticed by every paper, I read from the Nashville Advocate down, and this is the first intimation that I have had that they were not correctly reported in the New York Herald and other papers. When we remember the universal sentiment of the late General Conference, and then the things reported as having been said by these brethren at the two places mentioned, some of us have been greatly astonished.

Every member of the General Conference, who spoke, avowed his opposition to organic union with the M. E. Church, (North).

Yet in a few weeks quite a number of our prominent men visit the North some of whom are reported as saying: "I have come North to promote the patriotism of the church. Union is the order of the day. I expect to live to see the day when there will be but one Methodism in this grand country, spreading over the North, South, East and West."

I would not believe them to be true when I read them, and expected to see them put right before the church. But as no explanation was given or denial made, I began to be troubled about it.

What does this silence mean?

It is due the M. E. Church, South, and themselves, that Bishop Doggett, Bro. Lee, Poisal and Seargent should formally put themselves right.

I am not opposed to their visit North, or to the good time they had, but to somethings reported to have been said by them.

I am for "fraternal relations," on the plan of separation, but am opposed to organic union on any terms.

W. S. Black.

Magnolia, N. C.,

Dear Bro. Bobbitt: The new church at Macon on the Warren Circuit was dedicated on the fifth Sabbath in August, by Rev. Dr. Closs the P. E of the District.

This church is one of the best country churches I have ever seen. It was estimated that between eight hundred and a thousand people were present. One of the most gratifying incidents of the occasion, was the raising of $779, to pay the debt incurred in erecting the building. We regard this a very handsome collection, in view of the scarcity of money. A protracted meeting is now being conducted in the church by Dr. Closs and Bro. Hoyle, which promises happy results. X.

"Blessings Brighten as they take their Flight."

Dear Bro. Bobbitt: We, the people of Ansonville, feel the sentiment of these words.

During the past ten months our beloved brother, Rev. J. K. Tucker, has been laboring in our midst as President of Ansonville Graded School. He faithfully discharged his duty as a teacher and as a minister of the Gospel, or, in other words, he was a blessing to our community.

He, from a sense of duty, will at an early day depart from his beloved native country to the far West.

For the love we have for him, we unwillingly give him up, but wish him and his family success in this life and a home in Heaven at last.

May the ties of brotherly love, which bind us together, be severed only in death.

A Friend.

Ansonville, Sept. 1st, 1874.

For Davenport F. College.

Rev. T. J. Gattis, our Agent, will leave Goldsboro on Thursday evening, Sept. 10th, with young ladies for Davenport.

Persons desiring to send their daughters to this school can place them in his care at any point on the Railroad between Goldsboro and Salisbury at that time.

This will be the last chance, as the institution is rapidly filling up, and will probably be crowded by that time.

Simple Habits of Great Men.

As a general rule, all men who have been distinguished for the utility of their actions and for the greatness of their intellect, have been men of very simple habits. In our own country examples of this rule are numerous. Dr. Franklin lived more plainly even after he had become famous as a philosopher and statesman, than did many of those whom he employed as journeymen in his printing house. His diet and his apparel were of the simplest kind, and they were in strict accordance with his manners. Washington was also very abstemious and simple in his habits. His dinner often consisted of nothing but a baked apple. In Europe the same fact is prominent. Cardinal Ximens, the greatest statesman that Spain ever produced, was often seen mending his own garments, and his diet was so scant and poor that it seems almost incredible that nature could sustain itself on so little. Napoleon was, except on great state occasions, rigidly simple in his manners and habits. Cromwell was also a man of exceedingly frugal habits and simple manners. Ex.

Revival Intelligence.

Rev. J. P. Simpson writes from Mt. Pleasant circuit, Aug. 29th:

"I take leave to say that our circuit is favored with the spirit of revival. There have been recently some 80 conversions, and about the same number of accessions to our church. The work still goes on."

Rev. L. J. Holden writes September 1st:

Bro. Bobbitt: We closed a meeting yesterday at Bethlehem church, resulting in the conversion of 32 souls and 20 accessions to the church. The church greatly revived; it was indeed a "Week of Prayer," and God answered abundantly. Now I propose to give you just here a Sunday school "Speech." Every regular attendant on the Sunday school that was old enough was converted, except one, and he was at the altar and is now a seeker of religion. How much more can be said for Sunday schools? I would rather have a good Sunday school worker than a "Helper" on my circuit.

There are others of the converts who will join our church.

May the Lord continue his good work!

Rev. A. D. Betts, writing from Ansonville under date of Aug. 27th, says:

Dear Bro. Bobbitt: Rev. W. H. Watkins and myself agreed some weeks ago to exchange pulpits on the 4th Sabbath in August, that I might administer the sacrament to his people, as he is not an Elder.

When I reached Salem Church, 8 miles above Albemarle, I found Bro. Watkins had been conducting a meeting there, for the past week, with the happiest results. Over 30 had professed conversion, and Bro. W. left word for me to receive them into the Church.

Never have I performed just such a day's work before. I received 29 adults into the church, baptized 8 adults and 22 infants.

Monday 15 penitents were at the altar, and 2 found peace. Bro. W. returned to his work on Tuesday, and I trust we shall hear good news.

I returned to my work, spending a day and a night with Bro. Brown at Center. He has a good meeting there.

Rev. B. C. Phillips writes from Jonesboro Aug. 18th:

"I have just closed a most interesting revival; 17 united with the church I never saw more general interest.

Rev. H. F. Wiley writes:

Dear Bro. Bobbitt: We protracted our 3rd Q. M. held at Maronics, which resulted in the revival of the member ship and six accessions to the church. Our beloved Presiding Elder, Rev. J. P. Moore remained with us Monday and Tuesday and preached with power and demonstration of the Spirit.

I held a meeting at Concord embracing the 1st Sunday in Aug., which resulted in six or seven conversions. We had a good time. The church was thoroughly revived.

From W. H. Watkins we have good tidings:

Dear Bro. Bobbitt: Please say to the lovers of Zion, through the Advocate, that the Lord is reviving His work on the Stanly circuit. We have just closed a meeting at Salem church. 36 or 37 professed conversion, 31 joined our church.

Bro. Betts, of Ansonville circuit, preached for us 3 times, administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and baptized quite a number of children. We also received very efficient aid from Bro. D. Plyler, an exhorter of the Lutheran church; besides, the members of our own, of the Lutheran and of the Methodist Protestant, churches worked with an earnest zeal. All the praise and glory to be to God!

Rev. N. G. Whittington writes Aug. 28th:

Bro. Bobbitt: Permit me to say through the Advocate to the lovers of Zion, that God has graciously revived his work among us. We have just closed our camp-meeting at Rocky Springs, which commenced last Friday at 11 o'clock and continued until Thursday morning. Quite a number of the tent holders moved in Friday morning and were ready for services by 11 o'clock. We have 52 tents on the camp grounds. All were filled—several had two families in them. One spring of water supplies the entire camp with water for man and beast, and is rarely if ever muddied or stops running. Our much beloved P. E., M. L. Wood, was with us all the time, and preached with great power and affect. Brothers Culbreth W. M. D. Moore, J. T. Bagwell and R. T. N. Stephenson and Dr. B. York were with us and did a good part in preaching and laboring with penitents. Twenty-five professed faith in Christ, fifteen joined the church. Others will join soon. The church was greatly revived and strengthened in faith and hope.

We feel confident that our camp-meeting has been a grand success. O! may this holy work extend to and through every appointment on the Alexander circuit.

Rev. T. P. England writes August 28th:

Dear Bro. Bobbitt: I had thought of writing you sooner concerning our camp meeting at Pleasant Grove, but have been traveling ever since, and had no opportunity. It embraced the 2nd Sunday in Aug. We had with us Bro. Nelson our beloved P. E., who labored in earnest, and we trust many will rise up in eternity and call him blessed. Also Bro's. Brent, Sherrill, Lee, Bailey, Rone and J. F. England, of the S. C. Conference, who labored faithfully and efficiently, and truly the Lord was with us. The result of the meeting so far as visible, was 33 accessions to the church and as near as we could ascertain about 30 conversions. The church was considerably revived. Being necessarily called away at the close of the meeting we could not follow up the influences, awakened during the camp meeting - hope when we return to realize refreshing seasons still. We hope to bring up a good report to our next Conference.

From Rev. James Mahoney comes cheering revival intelligence:

Dear Bro. Bobbitt: The good Lord has visited us on the Cokesburg circuit, and especially at one of the appointments with a gracious outpouring of his spirit, and refreshing revival of religion. The 3d qr. meeting for this circuit was held the 14th and 15th inst. at "Wesleys Chapel." I preached to a good congregation on Friday (fast day) on the subject of fasting, and the importance of observing the same as a command of the Saviour. On Saturday the congregation was unusually large for the day. Our dear Bro. Black, P. Elder did not attend, owing to personal indisposition and family affliction.—He sent to my aid Bro. Randal of the Magnolia circuit, who rendered very efficient service in the pulpit, and altar. He preached every day while he remained with me "not with enticing words of man's wisdom but in demonstration of the spirit and of power." Knowing Bro Randal as I do, and judging of him by his position now as a young man, I anticipate for him a brilliant future, and a life (while he lives) of great usefulness in the ministry and benefit to the Church of Christ.—On Sunday morning 9 o'clock, we held a Love feast, the first ever held in that church, the church an old one too.—The crowd was large, many spoke for Jesus; 'twas a good time, a love feast indeed. The meeting continued to increase in interest,—Monday congregation good.—We assembled the members around the altar.—We were all in one place with one accord, waited in prayer for the promise of the Father, the Holy Spirit; he came down and the work began—mourners came to the altar, professors were refreshed and many rebaptised with the Holy Ghost.

When Bro. Randal left Bro. Spell, a local preacher came to our help, and labored successfully—I had to leave on Friday, the day week from the beginning, but left the meeting in charge of Bro. Owen Spell and T. W. Smith, useful and popular ministers. I recived 6 into the church, expect to hear of others joining at the close of the meeting Sunday evening. The great benefit and result of the revival was the rebaptism of the church generally. I expect to hear good news from Bro. Smith and Spell on my return. Thank the Lord for it all.

Rev. L. E. Stacy writes:

Dear Bro. Bobbitt: We have just closed a very interesting meeting at Bethesda, on Madison circuit. It resulted in 8 or 9 conversions and 5 or 6 accessions to the Church.

The region round about Bethesda is remarkable for its piety, there being only a small number left to advocate the cause of sin. What a blessing to live in such a community! All this is due, in a great measure, to the christian zeal and religious influence of Rev. E. J. Endaily, a local brother, who lives in that neighborhood. We were favored by his assistance, together with Bro. Wm. Berry's, in the revival to which we have referred.

Rev. M. J. Hunt, from Rock Spring circuit, writes:

We held a protracted meeting at Chesnut Grove the first Sunday in August. Christians were made happy, and two professed faith in Christ. Bros. Gibbons and Smith were with me. Several penitents were left at the altar.

I held a meeting at old Rock Spring which was protracted 10 days, resulting in the conversion of 16 souls.—This is an appointment that was thrown out of Tar River circuit some years ago. Three years since I took it in and have been preaching there since the first protracted meeting I held at that place; for some days I was dependent on one small basket for a snack. Last Sabbath there were provisions enough to feed 500 to 800 persons on the ground; quite an improvement. Bro. Jas. B. Floyd was with me with his usual zeal. W. C. Lynam, J. Jones and others rendered much assistance.

We have a subscription to build a new church at Rock Spring, with good prospects of success.

Please Respond.

Dear Friends:—Our new building at Trinity College is without a roof—and the work cannot go forward unless we can collect some funds. Will not those, who have pledged to help us, come to the rescue? If you cannot pay all, send us as much as you can, and we will be very grateful.

Religious Items.

—The London Methodist Recorder says the medallion of John Wesley which is about to be placed in West minister Abbey, is now nearly completed. Under the profile of the great reformer there will be a representation in bas-relief of Wesley preaching on his father's grave. The fund to defray the expense has chiefly been raised by the Rev. Dr. Jobson. The Dean of Westminster has taken great interest in the matter.

—Rev. Dr. P. Fairbairn President of the Free Church College in Glasgow, Scotland, died on the evening of Aug. 6. During the day he was in his usual health, and retired apparently well. An hour later, Mrs Fairbairn found him dead; probably from heart disease. He was in his seventieth year.

—The week of prayer meetings commenced by Rev. M. V. Sherrill in the M. E. Church on Friday night, of the 21st ult, are still continued and are growing in interest. There have already been many conversions, and 15 or 18 have joined the church. Rev J. S. Nelson has assisted the pastor.—Monroe Enquirer.

Recent Publications.

Missouri Sermons, by Missouri Methodist Preachers, compiled by Rev. G. W. Horn. South-Western Book and Publishing company, St, Louis, 1874.

This is a book of sermons written by ministers of the Missouri, St, Louis and West St, Louis conference, and published with a view to raising funds for the benefit of Central College, Missouri. The sermons are able and well written and make a collection that is valuable. We notice among the sermons one on the "Choice of Moses," by a former member of the North Carolina conference, but now an eminent minister in the West St. Louis conference, Rev. C. P. Jones, D. D. The Book is published in neat style and bound in cloth. Price $1,50,—when sent by mail $1,60.

Messiah, by William M. Willett, author of "Life and Times of Herod the Great," etc, etc. B. B. Russell, Publisher, Boston

This is a work of 442 pages, illustrated and sold by canvassing agents. Its theme is the first advent of the Messiah to the world and begins by a recital of the events preceding His coming, with a description of the country which was the scene of His work and ministry. An account of the miracles performed follows, showing that Jesus was the true promised Messiah.

Missions, An essay by S. T. Anderson, D. D., a missionary of the Presbyterian church in South America. Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville.

Among the four or five manuscripts of great merit whose publication was recommended by the committee that awarded the prize for the best essay submitted to them on the subject of missies was one which has been published and sent to us by Dr. Redford. It is ably written and discloses an intimate acquaintance with the subject, as well as considerable philosophical and Biblical research. Single copies 15c, per dozen $1.50. Usual discount to preachers.

The New Yarborough House.—For years, the Yarborough House has enjoyed a high reputation. The name has grown to be a household word. It has been wonderfully improved in point of architectural beauty and its internal management keeps pace with the rapid progress of the times. The Yarborough House of to-day is an institution that would reflect credit upon the importance of a very much larger city than Raleigh. While its imposing exterior renders it a source of pride to the citizen as an ornament to our already beautiful Fayetteville street its social and best recommendation is the elegance, comfort and cleanliness which has characterized its management under the supervision of Dr. Blackmall, assisted by his accomplished lady.

The Doctor is also surrounded by polite and attentive employes, who ably second all his efforts. The caterer and steward, Mr. Henry Parham, is well known throughout the whole State and is pronounced au fait in his business. That Mr. Parham should be popular with all who know him is not to be wondered at as he is as genial and courteous in his social relations, as he is energetic, and successful in his business.

In Memoriam

Died, at his residence, on Deep River in Chatham county, July 31st 1874, of chronic dysentery, Joseph J. Palmer, in his 69th year.

A space in the human world is unfilled and another proof is sent his winged its flight to eternity. The subject of this short memorial was long and favorably known and loved, by a very large and respectable concourse of friends and relatives and faithful friends. To mourn for a good Father, an affectionate husband and christian citizen fully illustrated another one more reflection on a generous hospitality open and unobtrusive to all and particularly his kindness to the poor will long embalm his memory in the hearts of the beneficiaries left behind. Let an able pen pay a more exalted tribute to the life and character of our departed brother in Christ and may he rest in peace.

Tribute of Respect.

Hall of Mitchell Lodge No 61 I. O. of G. T. of N. C. Chapel Hill August 24th 1874.

John White one of the charter members of this lodge died after a brief illness in the evening of August 15th 1874.

Bro White was born in Newton Mass 1806. In early life he came to North Carolina and resided for several years in the city of Raleigh when he was employed in superintending the State House which now stands at that city. He was married in marriage to Miss Temperance A. Utley who with three daughters survives him. During the last thirty years he was a citizen of this town

In every position in life Bro. White was a kind and affectionate husband, father, brother and friend. He was a consistent member of the Christian church, and died in the full confidence of a glorious immortality beyond the grave.

Resolved 1 that though in the death of Bro White, this Lodge feel that it has sustained the loss of one of its most valued and esteemed members; still we recognize in this act the supervision of Divine Providence for the good of our all wise Heavenly Father, and submission to him who doeth all things well.

2 That we the deeply bereaved family of deceased, tender to we do offer our sincere sympathy and condolence, and while we mingle our tears, in this sad hour, yet we will endeavor his example, and in imitation of the hope of starting with him in bright and sinless inheritance of the world to glory.

3 That copies of this tribute be spread on the journal of our Lodge, be sent to the family of the deceased and be furnished the Hillsboro Recorder the Spirit of the Age and the Raleigh Christian Advocate for publication.

SOLOMON POOL
JONES WATSON.

Died, in Craven County, after a short illness in the 3rd year of her age, Louisa Ann, daughter of Francis and Clifford Simpson, she was a very interesting and promising child. She was the delight of her parents and was loved by all who knew her.

But death has in her eternal calls Jesus snatched her away from all a world of sin and sorrow, to rest in bed of boundless beauty where there is no more sin, and pleasures never die. In the gay mansions of her father's house, she sings the sweet music of the voice, will be heard in this vale of tears; yet children she has joined her little brother, and preceded her to the better land, and with a nobler sweeter voice, has joined with the redeemed, in praising Him who said suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God.

Their bodies frames my power shall raise,
And mould with heavenly skill;
Then them tongues to sing my praise;
And tunes to do my will."

He needs the happy parents hear,
And shout with joys divine.
For savior all we have and are
Shall be forever thine."

A MOTHER IN ISRAEL HAS FALLEN.—Mrs. Eliza Lehew, wife of Samuel W. Lehew, Charlotte N. C. died Aug. 9th 1874 Her sickness was long and painful She was in [illegible] 3 months.

Rev P. Elder, Rev W. S. Black, visited her in her sickness and found her trusting in the Lord Savior, whom she had learned to trust many years. She was converted in that year and for many years faithfully following Jesus.

She was 50 years old and leaves an aged husband, [illegible] children to mourn but not as those who have no hope. Bro Lehew informs me that her pastor Rev I. W. Avent stood by and saw her depart. She was frequently heard to say "Come Lord Jesus" "Come, Lord Jesus" "Come, Lord Jesus."

In her death those words as a text at the funeral, which was very largely attended.

She was a loyal Methodist an earnest christian and a faithful friend to the Preacher. They remember it so for the past 30 years resided in Charlotte. She was a S. S. teacher and was beloved by all her classes.

She has gone to one of that happy company of whom it will be said These who come out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

her age. For twenty one years she was a consistent member of the church.

Sister Bolton was a remarkable woman; she seemed to live for the good of others, regardless of her own comfort. As a christian, she was ever faithful; in the Sunday School, a zeal as worker, in the cause of temperance, always active.

In fact, in every good work she was always ready to do her part. In her neighborhood, the sick found in her a faithful friend and nurse, the needy a helping hand. Modest and unassuming, kind and cheerful, all loved her, and those who knew her best, loved her most During her last sane moments she conversed freely of death and her future prospects.

She called me to her bed side and remarked, "I am going to die." I asked her concerning her hope, Oh; said she I soon shall be where there is no more sorrow, no more sickness, no more death I am willing to die, perfectly resigned, and now is the right time, I am going home. I have often prayed that my last moments might be calm and without pain, and oh!, said she with a beaming countenance. I have not a pain in the world,"

I saw her on the bed of death,
Stern illness paled her brow;
I watched her short and fleeting breath
And marked her gently how.
But all was still and tranquil there,
There was no troubled swell:
Her spirit meekly breathed a prayer.
Then whispered, 'all is well.'

A. BARRINGTON.

In Duplin county, on the 25th of June, 1874, Mrs. LOU SULLIVAN PEARSALL, wife of J. W. Pearsall, Esq.,

In the days of her girlhood, while at school, in Virginia, she professed faith in Jesus Christ, as her Saviour and Lord, and joined the Baptist Church.

Upon the completion of her education (at St. Mary's in Raleigh) she returned home and became a consistent attendant of Bear Marsh Church, in said county, and by her gentle and quiet deportment and fervent, deep-toned piety, became a universal favorite, and commended the religion she professed.

But it remained for suffering to develop fully the worth of our departed sister. For five or six years, she was emphatically the child of affliction. The severest pain, and deepest trials were borne without a murmur, or complaint. Perfect resignation, patience, and meekness, were exhibited amidst years of more than ordinary sufferings.

Sister Pearsall was a woman of very fine intelligence and extraordinary piety, and her bereaved husband and two little children have suffered an irreparable loss—as has the church and her neighborhood; but our loss is doubtless her eternal gain. The writer preached her funeral before a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends from Ro in 8:18, after which her mortal remains were laid in the family burying ground, to rest in hope, till the resurrection morn.

J. N. S.

Died, near Lassiter's Mills, Randolph Co N. C, May the 26th 1874 Mrs. Margaret Lassiter consort of Ezekiel Lassiter deceased, aged 73 years, and 8 months. She had been afflicted for many years, but was able to be about the most of her time and attended to her domestic duties. Six months before her death, she began to grow worse. Medical aid was enlisted in and all that could be done was done for her both by her Physician and friends. She was confined to her bed about two weeks. Kind friends stood around and did all they could for her, She had to die, she bore her sufferings with patience and christian fortitude. She had long been a consistent member of the Methodist church, and belonged to the Union on the Troy circuit, at which church her husband was class leader up to the time of his death nine years ago. Her house was the home of the ministers who traveled that circuit and many of them will remember her kindly when they see this notice. The writer remembers many of them that were at her house, The church will mourn her; she was a firm supporter of the gospel. We miss her, every thing looks so lonely there since our dear aunt is gone. We cannot go and see her now, and she is so glad to see us come, but we hope to see her in that land of rest where there is no death.

FLOURS.

We feel confident we can do as well for them as any house in Baltimore or Norfolk, freight and other charges added.

Our Senior Partner and Buyer, who resides all the time in New York, has for the past eight years been connected with the large and well known Grocery House of Messrs. H. K. Thurber & Co., and has recently been connected with the Flour Exchange in that city, as their buyer of Flour, which gives us every advantage of the largest buyer in New York, as well as Baltimore or Norfolk, enabling us to offer Flour in this market for the first time STRICTLY AT FIRST HANDS, and with only one profit to the retailer.

Our facilities for handling these goods being equal to any house South of New York, and buying them at "Hard Pan" prices, for cash, we are determined to handle them at as small a margin as any house in these Northern cities!

I offer the public the Latest Improved Cotton Gin, as well as the cheapest. The following certificates from well known gentlemen, will be more satisfactory than any thing I can say:

NEAR CARY, N. C., Nov., 12th, 1873.

This is to certify that I am using one of the Cary Gins made by W. M. Sorrell, of Cary, N. C., and that I am well pleased with it and I would cheerfully recommend it to any one wanting a good Gin.

A. B. YATES.

CARY, N. C., May 22nd, 1874.

I take pleasure in saying that the fifty Saws Cotton Gin I purchased from Mr W. M. Sorrell, known as the Cary Gin does far better work than any Gin I have heretofore used. Though costing from 50 to 100 per cent. less money. I think any person in want of a Gin will save money by purchasing the Cary Gin, its performance has been entirely satisfactory to me, I can cheerfully recommend it to others.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,

Staunton, Va.,

Will begin its 25th annual session Sept. 17th, 1874. Rev. W. A. Harris, D. D., President, with an able corps of twenty-three Teachers and Officers. Modern languages taught and spoken by European Teachers. Music by seven Professors and Teachers.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world. Its marked effects, the rapid promotion of the physical health and vigor of our pupils. Those who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, chills and climatic diseases, are entirely restored.

Buildings elegant—fanned by the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery, making it one of the most delightful College homes in the Union.

The last session, one hundred and eleven young ladies attended this school, as boarding pupils from fifteen Southern States.

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONIALS.

From Bishop D. S. Doggett, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, located in Staunton, Virginia, under the Presidency of Rev. W. A. Harris, is, in my judgment, one of the best institutions, for young ladies, in the South. I have occasion to know and appreciate its value by the advantages enjoyed by some of my daughters, now a pupil there. It possesses all the facilities of a thorough female education. Its personal accommodations are all that can be desired for health and comfort, or taste. No location could be more eligible; no scenery more magnificent; no atmosphere more salubrious. It is now in a state of great prosperity. I do not hesitate to recommend it to the patronage of all who wish their daughters to receive the benefits of a useful and ornamental culture.

D. S. DOGGETT.

From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the Church Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music, advantages are offered of very high order. The most talented Professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department excellent. The school is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

From Prof. F. H. Smith M. A. L. L. D. University of Va.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, at Staunton, deserves the high success it enjoys. It has a good corps of teachers, well fall estimation, and excellent management. I had a daughter under Mr. Harris' care, during the present session, my observation leads me to believe this school to be one of the best of Female Seminaries which adorn our State.

TO THE Wholesale Trade.

Judging the future by the past, we enter with confidence upon this our new enterprise, of separating our Wholesale from our Retail Trade, by having a separate and adapted House for each; and in doing so we flatter ourselves that it will not only meet the approval of our numerous customers, but that an "Exclusive Wholesale House" will bring us a large [illegible] of trade, and of a character not heretofore enjoyed.

I must be content to every buyer that a strictly "Wholesale House," arranged and adapted for that Trade only, with a corps of experienced Wholesale Salesmen, with stock ever fully selected for that Trade only, and must ever, the avoidance of coming in contact with retail buyers. Such a house, we assert, must and will commend itself to the trade.

Four years ago we advertised that we intended to make Charlotte a wholesale mart and ours "The Wholesale House" We now have the proud satisfaction of saying that we accomplished it.

We commend a portion to the fact that we have contracted our supplies into an exclusive Wholesale House, where can find all lines of goods necessary to a country store, to wit

Youth's Department.

Hymn of Hope.

WRITTEN BY A CHILD OF NINE YEARS OF AGE, RESIDENT IN THE COUNTRY.

I.

Jesus when his mother said,
"Do this, child," at once obeyed:
Little children he will blame,
If they do not now the same.

And he once was crucified
To please his Father—so he died,
Thus he would salvation bring,
And be our Holy Priest and King.

II.

Lord, lead a little child,
And teach him how to pray,
And ask thee for a spirit mild
To praise thee all the day.

I am a senseless child,
And know not how to love,
But thou will make me mild,
And teach me from above.

A Story For Little Girls

Dear little reader, you have probably read, or heard some one read, what the ladies in Ohio are doing to stop the sale of liquor, and perhaps you are a member of the "Band of Hope," or some other society, and have taken a pledge to help the cause of temperance, but don't know what you can do to help to keep men from the dangerous rum.

Let me tell you what little Angie did. She heard her papa reading in the paper about the women who went into the saloons and prayed for the saloon keepers and for the men who came to drink, and this thought came into her mind:

"Now, there's Mr. Peters: he gets drunk and abuses his wife, and papa has to go and take care of him. I might ask God for him, just as those women did."

So great was her faith in prayer, that the very next day, when she knew Mr. Peters was at home, she went into his house and said in a trembling voice—for she was afraid of the wicked man—"Mr. Peters, don't you know it is wicked to drink rum? I am going to pray to God to make you a good man;" and she knelt down and said, "Dear Jesus, please make Mr. Peters love thee, and don't let him drink any more; make him try to stop. Amen."

The man was sober: the prayer touched his heart, which had never been warmed by children's love. He thought of his mother's prayer, and her parting words when he left his boyhood's home: "Be a good boy, Jamie, and don't forget that you have signed the pledge." That pledge: how long forgotten! The tears rolled down his cheeks as he remembered these things. The door of his heart had opened at a child's knock, and better feelings came to him as he resolved to leave off his sinful habit, and take Angie's God for his God.

Every little one cannot do just as Angie did; but every one can help a great deal by praying to God to make men Christians; then they will not become drunkards, for the Bible commands us to not even "look on the wine when it is red."

"Then You Have a Father."

Rev. Dr. Jones King once went to visit the children in an orphan asylum. The children were seated in a school room, and Dr. King stood on a platform before them. "So this is an orphan asylum," said he. "I suppose that many of you children would tell me that you have no father or mother, were I to ask you."

"Yes, sir; yes sir;" said some little voices.

"How many of you say you have no father? Hold up your hands."

A forest of hands were put up.

"Yes, sir; yes sir."

"Now," said Dr. King, "do you ever say the Lord's Prayer? Let me hear you.'

"The children began, 'Our Father which art in Heaven"—

Stop, children,' said Dr. King, "did you begin right?'

The children began again, "Our Father who art in heaven"—

"Stop again, children,' said Dr. King. "What did you say? Our Father? Then you have a Father, a good, rich Father? I want to tell you about him. He owns all the gold in California: He owns all the world; He can give you as much of anything as He sees is best for you. Now children never forget that you have a Father. Go to him for all you want, as if you could see him. He is able and willing to do all that is for your good.'

Rural and Domestic.

Gathering of Ripe Fruit.

The following is by Joseph Hooper, a celebrated fruit grower and writer on horticulture of Pensylvania, and will be seasonable and useful to all engaged in that business:

"In regard to the gathering of ripe fruits of different kinds, no fruits should be taken from the tree or plant during a damp time, and especially when the dew is plentiful in early morning. Never be so hurried as to find any excuse for the excuse, 'I had no time to hand pick my fruit, and consequently was forced to shake them off,' for such is poor policy. Fruit so gathered will almost inevitably decay from effects of bruises. Each specimen should be taken from the tree one by one, handled as if they had been so many eggs. The slightest bruise or abrasion of the skin is the sure forerunner of a dark spot, which will eventually change into some form of rot.

"The spores of seed of fungi are always ready to assist in the work of dissolution, and the slightest scratch gives them a foothold for their destructive work. Scarcely any variety of the largest fruits color or ripen so well if left to perfect themselves on the tree, and especially is this true in respect to pears. Summer varieties, as they approach maturity, loosen their hold somewhat from the limb, and by gently raising the fruit they will easily detach themselves at the proper period. This is an excellent test, and may always be relied on. To color up fruit nicely, all that is necessary will be to spread a blanket on the floor of a cool room, and then thinly and evenly place the fruit on the floor. A second blanket must be spread over them, and in a short time the effect of this treatment will be apparent in the most golden colored Bartletts and rich ruddy-looking Seckels imaginable.

"Pears perfected in this manner seldom have the mealiness of their naturally ripened companions; nor do they prematurely decay at the core as when left on the tree. Peaches are too frequently gathered before attaining the full size, and when this is the case we need not expect good flavor. They must obtain this requisite before gathering, although it is not necessary to delay picking until very mellow. As a general rule, all small fruits are gathered too early; and, as high color is not a sign of maturity, many experienced fruit-growers are misled."

How to Keep Tomatoes.

A correspondent of the Rural New Yorker, in Pennsylvania, gives the following as an excellent method of keeping tomatoes fresh:

"I have this day (December 9) taken to the store of a friend a basket of ripe tomatoes, fresh and nice as they were last fall when pulled from the vine.—They were admired by a good many persons. A lady present asked if they had the same flavor that they had in their season, when on the vine. I handed her one, and, tasting it, she replied, 'O, how delicious and fresh! and such a rare treat. They taste just as they do in summer when fresh from the vine.'—Now these tomatoes sold out at fifteen cents per pound in a few hours. The next thing, after tasting the tomatoes, was, 'How did you keep them?' I did it in this way: —In the fall, before the frost hurt them, I pulled the larger tomatoes and put them in my cold green-house: and, when there was danger of freezing, I removed them into another green-house in which fire is kept, and laid them with the stem down on damp sand. Here they ripen slowly, and the moisture from the sand keeps them fresh. In pulling them I leave a stem on them about two inches long; this is put into the sand when I place them on it. I used the Trophy tomato. I have tried other kinds, but they rot badly. The Trophy tomato, being a late variety and very solid, I think is the best for keeping. This is the second season of my trying to keep tomatoes till Christmas and New Year."

Good Fencing.

The render posts or timber, placed, in the ground, practically impervious to moisture, and for a long time prevent decay, the following simple recipe has been tried and found to answer the purpose excellently. For fence and gate posts it is particularly recommended.—Take linseed oil, boil it and mix it with charcoal dust until the mixture has the consistency of an ordinary paint. Give to the posts a single coat of the mixture, or paint, before planting them, and no farmer, says one who has used it, living to the age of the patriarchs of old, will live long enough to see the same posts rot. The post of timber should be well seasoned and dry when the paint is applied.

Tomato Catsup.

Half a bushel ripe tomatoes, not peeled; one quart vinegar; one pound salt; quarter pound black pepper; twelve pods red pepper; quarter pound allspice; one ounce of cloves; three boxes good mustard; a little garlic, if you have it; six onions; two pounds brown sugar, one handful peach leaves. Boil until of the right consistency, being careful not to let it burn; then strain through a wire sieve, when cool enough. I always have to rub it through. The ingredients are all put in together thoroughly cooked. When done it will be pretty thick.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

The Cant of Impostors.

It is so obvious that physical and constitutional vigor is the best defense against disease, that even the venders of nostrums advertise them as tonics, stomachics and tonic organs, in the hope of enlisting the confidence of the public in the debilitating and pernicious potions. It is amusing to note how these impostors imitate and copy the language in which the medicinal properties of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are described. Although the effect of their raging revenants is to destroy the tone of the digestive organs and the bowels, and to rob the system of its vital strength, they are unscrupulously recommended to the weak and prostrate victims of disease as stimulants! If at time this fanning (not a very successful one it is true, thanks to the mature common sense of the American people) was stigmatized as it deserved as a mischievous fals-ehood should be exposed pro bono publico. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, be it distinctly understood, is a stimulant. It has a spirituous basis, and that basis is the vehicle which diffuses its wonderful sanitary principles through every part of the system. The tonic, alterative and regulating ingredients of the Bitters would be comparatively inert if they were not, so to speak, carried to the localities where they are required by the stimulating agent. The cant which protests against the use of a pure alcoholic fluid, when employed as a means of giving full effect to medicinal extracts of the highest utility, is the cant of charlatanism. Every intelligent physician so characterizes it, and the sick who are gulled, convulsed and debilitated by the nauseous and disgusting nostrums of the parties who put it forth, soon find to their sorrow that it is a delusion and a snare. Hostetter's Bitters, the great sanitary stimulant of the age, is in the truest sense of the word a wholesome, vitalizing, renovating preparation.

DR. M'LANE'S
Celebrated American
WORM SPECIFIC, or VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eyelid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a gnawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy; not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,

DR. M'LANE'S VERMIFUGE
Will certainly effect a cure.

The universal success which has attended the administration of this preparation has been such as to warrant us in pledging ourselves to the public to in every instance where it should prove ineffectual: "providing the symptoms attending the sickness of the child or adult should warrant the supposition of worms being the cause." In all cases the Medicine to be given IN STRICT ACCORDANCE WITH THE DIRECTIONS.

We pledge ourselves to the public, that

Dr. M'Lane's Vermifuge
DOES NOT CONTAIN MERCURY

in any form; and that it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

Address all orders to
FLEMING BROS., PITTSBURGH, PA.

P. S. Dealers and Physicians ordering from others than Fleming Bros., will do well to write their orders distinctly, and take none but Dr. M'Lane's, prepared by Fleming Bros., Pittsburgh, Pa. To those wishing to give them a trial, we will forward per mail, post-paid, to any part of the United States, one box of Pills for twelve three-cent postage stamps, or one vial of Vermifuge for fourteen three-cent stamps. All orders from Canada must be accompanied by twenty cents extra.

What is this Great Preparation and what are its effects? These are questions which the great American public has a right to ask, and it has also a right to expect a candid and satisfactory reply. The preparation is a mild and gentle saline cathartic, alterative and tonic, and is most carefully prepared in the best of wines, while powder, constituting all the wonderful medical properties of the famous Seltzer Springs of Germany.

Of its effects, those who have tested the preparation are the best judges and they declare, over their own signatures, that the preparation will promptly relieve in dyspepsia, regulate the flow of the bile, cure every species of headache (excepting the nervous system), refresh and invigorate the weak, obliterate the pangs of rheumatism, neutralize acid in the stomach, cleanse and tone the bowels, assist the failing appetite, cure the heartburn. If you are a sufferer give this remedy one trial, and it will convince you of the above facts. Sold by all druggists.

LAND SALE NEAR TRINITY COLLEGE.

On the 12th day of August next, with a credit of six months, I will sell at auction upon the premises a tract of land containing three hundred acres, lying west of Trinity, and known as the Brown place. The land comes near the College Campus, has one hundred acres of wood-land, dwelling house, barn, stable and all the usual buildings. This is very valuable property and offers a rare opportunity for a good investment to any man who wants a pruned farm, or desires to live near the College. The dwelling is about three fourths of a mile from the College Campus.

[illegible]

Communicated.

For the Advocate.

Bro. Bobbitt: Why is it that the extremes of life seem to meet upon the same level? Have you not seen the old grey headed grandfather leaning over a toddling youngster of three years, entering fully into all his joys and sorrows, his disappointments and griefs, teaching him patiently some new play or new song, and seeming to enjoy the whole with intensest interest? Yea, you have seen it, and perhaps wondered—how can it be accounted for but upon the principle involved in my first question? Now here am I stooping my grey beard over this paper, with an aching back, and while all the grand enterprises of the Church in all their varied fields and phases lie open before me and fewer men I could say something on some of these subjects, yet my heart turns back to the children, to the welfare of the lambs of the flock, and I desire to say a few things for the Sunday schools. I desire it more particularly because most of your correspondents this year (so far as my observation goes) have shot higher (as they think no doubt) and left the Sunday school to take care of itself. In fact this has about become the rule in the church, and if the Sunday school had not an amazing vitality, through the blessing of the Holy Ghost, it would perish; would have perished long ago. The great question of the church ought to be, "how shall we improve the Sunday schools?" The great question seems to be "how little can we do for them and yet they will live?" Well, I come now with some suggestions, which I hope are for the improvement of the schools, and as they are inseparable, for the good of the church. Do the Sunday school teachers and Superintendents consult together enough? Do they compare their methods of teaching and instruct each other?

I know that we have a State Sunday School Society which meets once a year somewhere. But does that accomplish what is necessary? It certainly does not. I do not deny that it has done great good and perhaps as much as it could do, but it cannot, in the very nature of things do what is necessary. It cannot because of the absolute impossibility of getting the Superintendent and teachers together over long routes and at great expense. Now I propose that we adopt an additional system. It may not be new in some parts, but in the part of our State I am acquainted with, it is not in general use. It is not original with me, and for that reason may be more deserving of notice. Let us adopt the plan of having County S. S. Conferences.

Please observe I do not say a convention, but a conference; that old Methodist idea conveyed by the term conference is what I want to adopt.—An assembling together to confer over plans and modes, ideas and systems, for the purpose of adopting the best and discarding the useless. How will it work? Let us suppose a county to have, say ten Sunday schools, the county may be divided into three or more pastoral charges, let them all come together in some central place, not as a body, but through their delegates, and talk over everything that may be suggested as calculated to improve the methods of teaching. Let each Sunday school send its Superintendent and at least four teachers; let them go prepared to spend at least three days in conference. On a basis as above of ten schools in a county this would give a conference of fifty members, quite a respectable body. Invite preachers and speakers, and let the following questions be fully answered:

1st. As to the spiritual condition of the schools. This is a vital question. Shall we teach for years and see no fruit? If we do, is there not something wrong? Can a remedy be found?

2nd. As to the working condition of the schools. This will embrace, method of teaching, books, paper, libraries &c., &c.

3rd. As to the comfort of the school.

That is a very important inquiry, the value of which can only be ascertained by a full and free discussion.

Having questioned all parties on the above subjects let the Conference then proceed to discuss general questions, such as

1st. the relation of Sunday schools to the missionary work.

2nd. Their relation to the church.

3rd. The duties of parents.

4th. The qualifications of Superintendents and teachers, and many more questions which may be suggested during the Conference.

I should like to have space to give some of the arguments going to show the value of such conferences, and will give one or two.

1st. The comparison of systems of instruction will be of great value to the Superintendents enabling them (by comparison) to see where their own plans fail and where others succeed.

2nd. The unison of prayer for one grand object filling the hearts of teachers with a new zeal in the cause.

3rd Creating a rivalry in good works through the whole year, knowing that when the next yearly conference comes, the close questioning of the conference will reveal the laggards and expose them to the church as unfit for their positions.

I cannot follow the subject further at this time. Lift up your potent voice, Mr. Editor, and call upon the brethren to come to the aid of the Sunday School. Let us quit theorizing and adopt some working plans that will result in better Sunday school work, a more earnest and spiritual effort for the salvation of the children and the increase of the Church. Call on the brethren to move at once in the matter, and oh! do not slack in the cause until something more is done to obey almost the last command of our Saviour, "feed my lambs."

Yours lovingly,

O. L. E. Styles.

Ebenezer Sept. 1874.

For the Advocate.

What wilt thou have me to do?

When Saul was arrested in his efforts to suppress what he regarded an innovation on the long established worship of his people, the convictions of duty produced in his mind by the brighter light more fully confirmed his cultivated mind in its belief of man's agency and moral responsibility. He did not sit down in defence of the untenable doctrine of forced and unconditional salvation. Like all truly enlightened minds will do, he felt and owned his allegience to his God, and inquired for the pathway of christian duty. Hence his solicitude to learn his true position in the great army of his Master, in the contest against the powers of darkness. With the erroneous opinions of former years corrected in the convincing light of truth, he "conferred not with flesh and blood" but sought guidance in the path of duty from the true source of light and consolation. "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

We see in the expression of the soul-awakened Saul of Tarsus a sentiment all might profitably consider—that of individual responsibility. He felt there was an obligation resting on him, and he inquired in the earnest solicitude of his soul, "What wilt thou have me to do."? As our young preacher announced the inquiry of the arrested persecutor as his first text in our midst, I hope he will pardon me for penning a few thoughts, suggested by the significant question. It conveys to our mind the idea that Saul sought to know his post of duty, with a willingness to "spend and be spent" in the high and ennobling service of his Master. All young preachers, and old ones too, might derive instruction and encouragement from a careful study and reading of Paul's letters to Timothy; written near the close of his useful and eventful life.

"Give attendance to reading," says the apostle, that your "profiting may appear to all." The importance of diligently searching the scriptures must be conceded by all thinking minds. For how can minister, or any one else, teach what he is ignorant of of himself? The soul of man is endowed with faculties as indestructible as the throne of the Eternal, and on the pages of Holy Writ he has spread out before him sacred truths calculated to excite love and reverence in the soul, and point it to a higher and purer existence. Hence the importance of "shewing uncorruptness in doctrine." The mind of man needs light to guide it in the path of duty, not to confirm it in error and darkness. "Let no man despise thy youth: but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." Might not even aged ministers, some of them, in our day be profited and be more useful by obeying this injunction given by the aged apostle to his son in the gospel?

"Preach the word"—"Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God." "Preach Christ crucified" regardless of the distorted views and blinding prejudices of misguided minds. Eternal life is the prize for which you are striving. Fight the good fight of faith, with the purified affections of the soul elevated high above partisan zeal and sectarian blindness, drinking from the pure fountain of universal love.

The Christian world seems more concerned in building up barriers to Christian union, by fighting for their peculiar church—"shibboleths"—in heaping up anathemas on the head of those who do not subscribe to them, than for the mental and moral illumination of man. Instead of preaching the "Gospel of Christ" as the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, "with assumed dignity, and imaginary mental and moral excellence, they imagine themselves wiser and holier than others—the constituted guardians of christian fellowship and love! We are the true church of the living God, and who wish to enjoy the benefits of church communion must have to pronounce "our shibboleth."

Saul of Tarsus was a sectarian of the straitest sect, contending for the religion of his fathers. In his ignorance and unbelief he felt that he could do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. But the inbeaming brightness of a higher and holier influence awakened reflection in his soul, lifting it to the broader field and purer atmosphere of Christian toleration, benevolence, and love. Rising from the feet of Gamaliel with deep rooted feelings of Jewish pride and intolerance in his soul, it required a light above the brightness of the noon-day sun to burst asunder the fetters of his mind, enlighten his conscience, and elevate, expound and purify the affections of his soul. Under the promptings and sanction of the Jewish religion, he rejoiced in the death of the martyred Stephen, and delighted to witness the ascending flames of persecuting fires. But with his mind impressed and imbued with the principles of the christian religion, how earnestly he could inquire, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Might not sectarians of our day be benefitted by seriously considering the result of christian light in the soul of Saul of Tarsus?

Notes From Va.

Mr. Editor: Your printer made me say some very foolish things in my last, but I really expect it was more my fault than his. Why all men cannot write plainly is a question I have never been able to answer to my satisfaction; and I am sure your compositors will agree with me when I say, mine is a several. However, people of sense will know how to fill up the bad flaws, others will not detect them; so here is ample ground for congratulation, to writer, editor and compositor.

But what are you doing in Virginia? Well, we are doing much, and are trying to do much more. So far as the work in the city churches is concerned, there is but little being done just now—this is not the season for them. But throughout our country charges, the work of revival is more extensive than I have known it for years. It seems to be on the increase, and our preachers and people are pushing the battle with all their power. The spirit of camp-meeting is taking hold of our people again. We had one this summer, the first in the Virginia Conference since the war. It was held 20 miles above Richmond, and while the encampment was a small one, it was a meeting of great power. Men heard the gospel there, and were converted, who never entered our churches. We hope here that this is but the beginning of these meetings, and that they will be introduced all over the country again.

Our last District Conference for this year is now in session on the Randolph Macon District, Dr. Rosser, P. E. Speaking of the Dr., I see he is out in a strong letter in the Methodist, not only for "fraternity" but for "Union." But union upon the basis of the "Plan of Separation"—is the only possible ground upon which the two Methodisms can meet. So far as the Southern M. E. Church is concerned, he is doubtless correct as to the basis. But as to the desirableness of organic union upon this, or any basis, is a question, in my judgment, that we have not yet reached. Fraternity, in its widest and fullest sense is to be, and doubtless is desired by all good men on both sides, and will come.—But we should say one at a time, lest we get tangled with too many big things. Make haste slowly, is an old maxim, and in this instance I think it a good one.

You have doubtless noticed the addition to the editorial force of the Richmond Advocate. Bro. Lafferty is a member of the Virginia Conference, but from feeble health has done but little work as a traveling preacher. He has been for some years conducting a paper in the upper part of the State with ability and success. He brings to his new position a finely cultivated mind—much ability as a writer, fine business qualifications and great devotion to the church. The prospect for the coming session of our schools is good, tho' from the tightness of the times, we have some fear lest the patronage should somewhat fall below our hopes. But of this I can tell you better in a few weeks. I intimated in my last that we had some hopes of an arrangement by which we should have located at Richmond a store for the supply of all our publications to the church, on as good terms as they can be had in the South. I am now glad to confirm this. I have just learned that gentlemen, experienced in the book and stationary trade, will open here in a few days a large stock of goods in this line, and chiefly among them will be the publications of the Southern Church. It is to be hoped that the Church in the East will come to the aid of these brethren in their attempt to supply this long felt want in this region. I met in Richmond a few days ago Bro. Jones, of your city. I was sorry he reached R. at so hard a time. The brethren there have just completed a church for the Germans. They have been for months trying to build a church in the West end of the city, but have so far failed for want of funds. Dr. Edwards has just moved on his people for fifteen thousand dollars to put old Centenary in modern trim. All this is very greatly needed here, and must be done if we would keep pace with the demands of the hour. I know the Methodists of Richmond would like to help you if they could, and I hope some of them did, but they have a heavy burden on them just now. I am sure you will pull through in some way, for you are the greatest people I know to pull out of a tight place.

Love of The Beautiful

Place a young girl under the care of a kind-hearted, graceful woman, and she, unconsciously to herself, grows into a graceful lady. Place a boy in the establishment of a thorough-going, straightforward business man, and he becomes a reliant, practical business man. Children are susceptible creatures, and circumstances and scenes and action always impress. As you influence them, not by arbitrary rules, nor by stern example alone, but in a thousand other ways that speak through beautiful forms, pretty pictures, etc., so they will grow. Teach your children, then, to love the beautiful. If you are able, give them a corner in the garden of flowers; allow them to have their favorite trees; teach them to wander in the prettiest woodlets; show them where they can best view the sunset; rouse them in the morning, not with the stern "time for work," but with the enthusiastic "see the beautiful sunshine! Buy for them pretty pictures and encourage them to deck their rooms in his or her childish way. Give them an inch and they will go a mile. Allow them the privilege, and they will make your house pleasant and beautiful.

Obedience to the Mother.—"Come away; come instantly, or I will call your father," I heard a mother say to her child, who was playing in the street before her window. I did not stop to learn the result: but I pitied the poor mother who had not power enough within herself to control her child, and who so unhesitatingly declared her inefficiency. A mother should never thus appeal to the father's authority to strengthen her own, nor should she admit by thought, word or deed, that her power is inferior to his. God never made it inferior; and he requires as prompt obedience to the one as the other. The mother who thus allows herself to appeal to another is continually weakening the authority she should exercise over her children. She is herself teaching them to disobey the "commandment with promise," for what child can honor a mother too weak to govern him?—Mother's Assistant.

The pleasantest things in the world are pleasant thoughts, and the greatest art in life is to have as many of them as possible.

Selections.

The Force of Prayer.

Prayer does not directly take away a trial or its pain, any more than a sense of duty directly takes away the danger of infection, but it preserves the strength of the whole spiritual fibre, so that the trial does not pass into temptation to sin. A sorrow comes upon you. Omit prayer and you fall out of God's testing into the devil's temptation: you get angry, hard of heart, reckless. But meet the dreadful hour with prayer, cast your care on God, claim him as your Father, though he seem cruel,—and the degrading, paralyzing, embittering effects of pain and sorrow pass away, a stream of sanctifying and softening thought pours into the soul, and that which might have wrought your fall but works in you the peaceable fruits of righteousness. You pass from bitterness into the courage of endurance, and from endurance into battle, and from battle into victory, till at last the trial dignifies and blesses your life. The force of prayer is not altogether effective at once. Its action is cumulative. At first, there seems no answer to your exceeding bitter cry. But there has been an answer; God has heard. A little grain of strength, not enough to be conscious of, has been given in one way or another. A friend has come in and grasped your hand—you have heard the lark sprinkle his notes like rain drops on the earth—a text has stolen into your mind, you know not how. Next morning, you awake with the old aching at the heart, but the grain of strength has kept you alive—and so it goes on; hour by hour, day by day, prayer brings its tiny sparks of light till they orb into a star, i s grains of strength till they grow into an anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast. The answer to prayer is slow; the force of prayer is cumulative. Not till life is over is the whole answer given, the whole strength it has brought understood.—Stopford Brooke.

It was, we believe, Rev. Baron Stowe who gave the following description of sermons:

Sermons are like guns. Some are large, others are small; some are long, others short; some are new, others old; some are bright, others rusty, some are made to be looked at, others to be used; some are loaded, others empty; some are owned, others borrowed. Some are air guns, some popguns, some of every size, from the pocket-pistol to the Paixhan gun. Some are charged only with powder, and make a great noise and smoke. Some send only small shot, that irritate rather than kill. Some carry heavy metal, that does execution. Some discharge chain shot, mowing down whole platoons. Some are wide mouthed mortars, throwing only bombshells. Some are duelling pistols, used only in controversy—vile things. Some go off half bent. Some flash in the pan. Some make a terrible fiz, the charge all escaping at the priming hole. Some shoot too high, some too low, some sideways, a few directly at the point. Some are aimed at nothing and hit it. Some scatter prodigiously; some kick their owner over. Some are unerring others always hit the wrong object. Some have too much wadding, and vice versa. Some are alarm guns; others are complimentary guns, used only for salutes on special occasions. Some are in a series, constituting a battery; others are swivels, made to turn in any direction. Some are useful, some useless, some dangerous. Some amuse, some frighten, some exasperate some explode, some gain the victory. Very much depends upon the manner in which they are made and managed.

He might have added, some are charged only with powder and wad, make a prodigious noise, but hurt no one.

Character.—Men are to be estimated, as Johnson says, by the mass of character. A block of tin may have a grain of silver, but still it is tin; and a block of silver may have an alloy of tin, but still it is silver. The mass of Elijah's character was excellence: yet he was not without the alloy. The mass of Jehu's character was base; yet he had a portion of zeal which was directed by God to great ends.—Bad men are made the same use of as scaffolds; they are employed as means to erect a building, and then are taken down and destroyed.—Cecil.

The truths of nature are one eternal change—one infinite variety; there are no two trees in the forest whose boughs bend in the same network, nor two leaves on the same tree which could not be told one from the other, nor two waves in the sea exactly alike. And out of this mass of various, yet agreeing beauty, it is by long attention only, that the conception of the constant character—the ideal form—hinted at by all, yet assumed by none, is fixed upon the imagination.

The Coliseum.

In these monuments we see the conceptions and character of Roman architecture: Grecian grace and beauty is replaced by colossal grandeur. The Coliseum is a monument worthy of a sovereign people, of conquering people, of a Titantic people, of a people which counted legions of slaves and armies of workmen, on whose shoulders alone were borne to giddy heights these immense blocks of stone. Those who had constructed the Coliseum had seen the East and its huge buildings, on which they desired to lay the orders of Grecian architecture as a garland. Roman architecture has not the beauty of the Corinthian, which took for its model the lovely form of a Grecian woman: of that goddess, the mother of all the arts. The Roman buildings are less beautiful but more majestic than the Greek, and there floats over them the invisible conception of a universal, assimilating spirit, which has united Grecian harmony and Asiatic magnitude, abounding on the earth and in history, without touching an ideal that soars to be lost among the heavens in rosy clouds and mysteries, half light, half shadows. Later Roman monuments, constructed on as vast a scale, we shall see tending to useful ends practical, immediate, like all improvements. The god Eros, the Greek god of love, has been replaced in Rome by the god of all uncleanness—the god of that substance which covers and fertilizes the fields, as Hellenic metapysics have been replaced by right and morality, with principles and sciences relating more immediately to life and society.

The Coliseum has all the characteristics of Roman architecture. It can be better learned in this great example, left miraculously by past ages, than in the pages of Vitruvius, probably altered and interpolated by the learned of the Renaissance period. Look at this mortar, that seems hardened as granite is hardened by the irregular internal movements of the planet! Look at the cellars and vaults, contrivances unknown among the Greeks, admirably constructed in this land of strength and empire! Behold the arches which the Hellenic world never erected, and that look like the triumphal gates by which history entered with a new life and a new spirit! See how the Roman has placed a plinth to support the Doric pillar which the Greek rooted in the bosom of the earth as the trunk of a tree! Contemplate those three orders, always separated in Greek architecture and united here in an ascending scale: first, the most simple and severe—the Doric—at the base; then the lightest and most elegant—the Ionic—in the center; and, lastly, the most florid and ornate—the Corinthian—crowning the whole as the diadem and capital of the monument! The spirit of a constrictive people is visible in the whole building. The Roman has united the three orders in his erections, as he has united the Greek gods in the Pantheon, and his style is the great epilogue of antique genius. Rome took from Greece her metaphysics and her religion, from the Sabines their women, from Spain her swords, from the East her arches, and from Etruria her bows. Thus it may be said that Greece is the flower and Rome the fruit of ancient history. Monuments like the Coliseum are, in fact, but the mighty bones of the immense organism which composes the Eternal City.—Emilio Castelar.

Objection Makers.

It will probably be found that those qualities which come under the head of foibles, rather than of vices, render people most intolerable as companions and coadjutors. For example, it may be observed that those persons have a more worn, jaded, and dispirited look than any others, who have to live with people who make difficulties on every occasion, great or small. It is astonishing to see how this practice of making difficulties grows into a confirmed habit of mind, and what disheartenment it occasions. The savor of life is taken out of it when you know that nothing you propose or do, or suggest, hope for, or endeavor, will meet with any response but an enumeration of the difficulties that lie in the path you wish to travel. The difficulty-monger is to be met with not only in domestic and social life, but also in business. It not unfrequently occurs in business relations that the chief will never by any chance, without many objections and much bringing forward of possible difficulties, approve of anything that is brought to him by his subordinates. They at last cease to take pains, knowing that no amount of pains will prevent their work being dealt with in a spirit of ingenious objectiveness.—At last they say to themselves, "The better the thing we present, the more opportunity he will have for developing his unpleasant task of objectiveness, and his imaginative power of inventing difficulties."—Arthur Helps.

'If the night air is injurious,' said Sammy, 'how do you account for the long life of the owl?'

Scientific.

A means of preventing the spread of the vine-pest, the Phylloxera vastatrix, is said to have been found, in the spreading of a layer of fine sand on the ground round the stems of the plants. The sand is said to be too loose for this insect to pass through, and the consequence is that it is intercepted in its passage from one plant to another.

Two scientific expeditions are to set out from Archangel next summer—one into Russian Lapland, for the purpose of exploring the traces of ancient glaciers; the other, to the shores of the White Sea, has for its object zoological investigations. Dr. Yarjinsky, La Revue Scientifique states, who explored the district two years ago, discovered in the White Sea and the glacial ocean fishes and crustaceans till then quite unknown.

We find in English papers the following notice of telescopic observations of the comet; "The striking feature of this comet in the telescope is its remarkable bright planetary nucleus, from each side of which a fan of light shoots out transverse to the tail. The spectrum of this nucleus, as found by M. Royest (since confirmed by Mr. Lockyer and at Greenwich), is continuous, indicating a glowing solid or liquid, and therefore supporting the theory that it is a meteor stream. The coma and tail which form the usual parabolic envelope give the characteristic spectrum of carbon consisting of three bright nebulous bands, but what is the form under which the carbon exists remains an interesting question which it is to be hoped that Mr. Huggins will resolve. The tail shows strong radial polarisation."

What Makes the Sky Blue.—The ethereal blue color of the sky is due to minute particles of matter which float in the air. Were these particles removed the appearance of the sky would be dead black. It is a fact in optics that exceedingly fine portions of matter disperse or scatter the blue rays of light, coarser portions scatter red rays, still coarser portions scatter all the rays, making white light. The atmosphere is full of aqueous vapor, the particles of which diffuse white light in all directions. When the particles are enlarged, they become visible in the form of clouds. The vapor particles of the white clouds are supposed to be finer and lighter than those of the dark clouds. That the diffusion of light in our atmosphere, the blue coloring of the sky and the colors of the clouds are due to the presence of matter floating in the air has been conclusively proven by Tyndall. On passing a beam of sunlight through a glass tube, the beam is rendered brilliantly visible by the reflection of light from the dust particles floating in the air contained in the tube. But on removing the dust particles, which is done by filtering the air by cotton wool, or causing the air to pass over a flame, the beam of light is no longer visible in the tube.—Scientific American.

Copper in Feathers.—Mr. J. J. Monterio had some of the beautiful red feathers of the "plantain eater," an African bird, chemically analyzed, with result showing that the pigment which gives the feathers their color contains quantities of oxide of copper corresponding to about eight per cent. of metallic copper. "These lovely birds," says the author, "are common on the west coast of Africa, between 5 deg. S. lat. and 15 deg. S. lat. Over the whole of the coast, and for a considerable distance inland, copper is found in great abundance as malachite, or green carbonate. It is supposed that small particles of this copper are swallowed by the plantain-eaters, with the gravel, etc., which they, in common with all birds, consume with their food." This theory is confirmed by another writer who three or four years ago made the following analogous observations. He kept at that time two Australian love-birds of the variety called Melopsittacus undulatus, small parrakeets with grass-green plumage. The birds were often allowed to fly about the room, and it was observed that they preferred brass fittings to any other perch, and that they used to sit and peck at the brass work. On asking an Australian friend as to the habits of these birds, the author was informed that they abound chiefly in the districts where copper is found. He collected seven or eight of the feathers, burnt them, and extracted the residual ash with nitric acid. On adding solution of potassium ferro-cyanide to the filtrate, a distinct precipitate of copper ferro-cyanide formed. Probably a green pigment, with copper as a constituent element, may be extracted from these feathers.—Galaxy.

A peddler called on a Uniontown lady to dispose of some goods, and inquired of her if she could tell him of any road on which no peddler had traveled. "Yes,' replied she, 'I know of one, and that's the road to heaven.'

A Japanese "Punch" is now published in Yeddo.

A new literary weekly in London, Journal General des Beaux Arts et des Arts Industriels, is to have articles in French, English, and German.

A "History of the English Language" is announced, by Professor H. E. Shepherd. It is to be a duodecimo, and E. J. Hale & Son are the publishers.

President M'Cosh's promised work, it is expected, will be ready for publication in the Fall. Its full title is "The Scottish Philosophy, Biographical, Historical and Critical, from Hutcheson to Hamilton," and it will make an octavo volume.

The new Shakespeare Society in England has received from Mr. J. O. Halliwell a collated copy of the printed text of 'The Pageant of the Company of Shearman and Taylors in Coventry," "newly corrected be Robart Croo, the xiiijth," dey of marche fenysshid in the yere of owre lords god MCCCCC & xxxiijte," with the three songs and their music that "belongs to the Taylors & Shearman's Pageant."

A new volume of "La France Pontificale, Histoire Chronologique et Biographique des Archeveques et Eveques de Tous les Dioceses de France," by M. H. Fisquet (Paris, H. Repos), is devoted to the history of the Church of Chartres, and may prove of some interest to English readers, if it contains a good biography of John of Salisbury, who was elected Bishop of Chartres in 1177.

Health Hints.

Bad Wells.—Repulsive as are rotten cellars and damp walls, impure water is one of the worst, as it is one of the most irremediable sources of disease in rural districts. Too often "the old oaken bucket" overflows with poisonous germs.—We do not exaggerate when we say that not one country well in five hundred is located at a sufficient distance from filthy surroundings. They derive their supply of water from a variable distance, depending upon the character of the soil, but never should they be less than fifty feet from any possible source of impurity. Generally, however, they are placed, for convenience sake, beside the kitchen door. And hard by the "help" or thriftless matron, after she has dutifully washed the dirt from the clothing of the family, weekly empties the foaming suds. Here are thrown slops from the kitchen, if nothing worse. Too near the barn-yard, and other sources of pollution which need not be named, and through all these are leached the contents of the "old oaken bucket that hangs in the well." Careful filtration through charcoal will remove some of these impurities, and, with greater care regarding the refuse do as much as can be done from the kitchen to remedy the possible and probable evils from this source.

Evening Damp.—The range of the thermometer from noonday to morning or evening is not only greater in the country, but the heavy dews consequent upon this render the changes more perceptible and less easily resisted by the human system. During the day the heat is felt more severely than in the city, where shelter during exercise is obtainable for most of the day, and when evening comes on, with its cool breezes, incautious persons expose themselves with little or no additional clothing. People wish to be comfortable, and sit around the doors in the open air till thoroughly cooled, if not slightly chilled. At the same hour of the next day they are again chilled, and so on until intermittent fever or some one of its kindred diseases, so cordially invited, steps in and takes full possession. We by no means repudiate the malarial origin of these diseases, but we do say that such a course of conduct strongly predisposes the system to the influences of that dread unknown destroyer. Such checks of perspiration are also frequent causes of intestinal diseases—more frequent than any other, as is notoriously seen in the greater prevalence of dysentery and kindred disorders when the contrast between the temperature of night and day is most marked.

Purifying Water.—It is not generally known that pounded alum posess es the property of purifying water. A tablespoonful of pulverized alum sprinkled into a hogshead of water (the water stirred at the time) will, after the lapse of a few hours, by precipitating to the bottom the impure particles, so purify it that it will be found to possess all the freshness and clearness of the finest spring water. A pailfull containing four gallons may be purified by a single teaspoonful.

Cure For Burns.—Apply a layer of common salt, and saturate it with laudanum. Hold it in position a few hours with a simple wrapper. The smarting disappears almost immediately, and the sore gets well with incredible rapidity.

Sustain our Missions.

The command of our Saviour, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," is broad and comprehensive. It takes in its wide range all the population of the earth. It lays upon the church the sacred obligation of sending the Gospel to the Esquimaux, shivering in the cold shadows of icebergs—to the Ethiopians, sweltering in the tropical heat of Africa—to the red men roaming in forest wilds—to the populous empire of Asia, where theft, falsehood and gigantic corruptions stalk through the land. To go to the isles of the sea degraded into the lowest forms of idolatry. Go to all these and preach that Gospel, which has power to save the immortal souls of men, and build them up into Christian nations. The empires of worldly conquerors were limited, but the spiritual empire of Christ is boundless. It embraces the world. Socrates was the light of Athens—Confucius of China—and Cicero of Rome. But Christ says—"I am the light of the world." He is the "sun of righteousness," whose healing beams are designed to shed redeeming light all over the rolling earth, from pole to pole, from its rising to the setting of the material sun. It is so decreed in the Divine council: "I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, thou art my son—this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

Here is a decree, not of reprobation, but of universal salvation.—The heathen tribes are Christ's by the purchase of his precious blood. The heathen wilderness, now burdened with the gigantic growths of idolatry and degrading superstitions must be visited by the missionaries to scatter the germinating seeds of the Gospel. Then will be fulfilled the beautiful prophecy—"The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose." They shall be glad for the establishment of the Christian church in their midst with all of its saving doctrines, and "blossom" in the beauty of spiritual culture. Thus we see that "the field is the world."

What is being done by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the cultivation of this broad field now white unto the harvest? When compared with our vast resources, we are constrained to say that we are doing but little. We take the following statement from "Our Missionary."—It says:

"The Southern Methodist Church numbers 676,600 members. In South America it has no mission. In China it employs 2 missionaries—Rev. James W. Lambuth and Rev. Young J. Allen, and their wives—3 native preachers, and 2 Bible women. It has 2 missionaries in Mexico, and an Indian Mission Conference numbering 17 traveling and 73 local preachers, with a membership of 1,613. In all the wide field of foreign missions proper, it has but three white men representing her—Lambuth and Allen in China, and Daves in Mexico."

Let us look at this statement. It is a bad showing of Missionary enterprise for our church. The Southern Methodist Church, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, covering nearly half of the territory of the United States, numbering over a half million of communicants, many of whom abound in wealth: and what is this great church doing for the noble cause of evangelizing the heathen world? "In all the wide field of foreign missions proper, it has but three white men representing her" But three!—The Protestant Episcopal Church has 28 male foreign missionaries with only 224,995 members in the United States. The Southern Presbyterian, with only 92,000 members, has 10 besides 16 among the Indians. The Southern Baptist 12—the Northern Methodist 53. It is painful to observe that in the great missionary army, the Southern Methodist Church lags far in the rear.—But so it is, and must ever be so until our people learn to give more liberally to promote this grand work.—We have great need for more money too to sustain and enlarge our Domestic missions. We have heathen in North Carolina—thousands of them. The dark spots in our State ought to be enlightened. But it cannot be done without means to sustain the missionary while preaching. Our missionary secretaries—Drs. McFerrin and Haygood, are making strong appeals for more money. These appeals should meet with a prompt and liberal response. They are noble, faithful, competent men, doing all they can to push forward the great work. Let every minister in charge of pastoral work, help them—preach a special sermon on the vast importance of pressing this great work, and use the most advisable means to make the collections as large as possible. We are gratified to know that the missionary spirit is growing in our Conference.—The collection the past year was $1,555—an advance on the year previous of $1,178. We ought to go on growing better for ten years to come. We hope the day is not far distant when our ten Districts will yield ten thousand dollars annually for the support of our missionaries. Our people must be educated to a higher standard in liberality. They have the means. The Lord has graciously blessed them with bountiful crops. A good crop of wheat is already gathered,—a better crop of corn has passed the chances of a failure—fields of cotton are now opening for the market—the trees are bending with ripened fruits, and the blessing of health has been given. The Lord has crowned the rolling year with his abundant goodness. Surely such exhibitions of kindness and love on the part of the Lord will prompt us to contribute freely to send His truth to open the eyes of those who are sitting in darkness and the shadow of death.

DEATH OF BISHOP MORRIS.—Bishop Morris, senior Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died in Springfield, O., on the second inst. He was for many years a faithful and laborious minister in his church For a number of years he has been in feeble health and unable to perform Episcopal work He was born April 28, 1790, was admitted into the Ohio Conference at the age of twenty six, in 1816, and twenty years afterward, at the age of forty six, he was elected and ordained bishop. He presided over the session of the Georgia Conference held at Athens in Dec. 1837.—Thus has passed away one of ripe years and full of faith and the comforts of the Holy Ghost.

The following is called forth from the editor of Zion's Herald, Boston, by an article to the New York Methodist on reunion, written by Rev. Dr. Rosser, of Virginia. While the Doctor's letter is hailed with great pleasure by the New York Methodist and other journals of the M. E. Church, they do not know so well about his plan of reunion:

"Excellent Dr. Rosser not only fraternizes but reorganizes in the last Methodist. He is a good man. Blessed are the peacemakers! But dear heart! he is certainly on the wrong road to reach the goal he has in view. He thinks fraternity can only be secured upon the Plan of Separation of the General Conference of 1844; and that fraternity on this Plan will inevitably be followed by re-union. But what is to become of the hundreds of thousands of members of the Methodist Episcopal Church now gathered below Mason and Dixon's Line?—What, in particular, is to be done with the colored members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with their schools and Universities? Fraternity, if it comes at all, will only be on the basis of things as they are. Dr. Deems may do all the good he can in New York, and we shall save as many souls as possible in New Orleans; and both rejoice with the angels of God over a common victory for Christ.

WEEK OF PRAYER.—From all quarters that we have heard from, beneficial results to the church were realized by the Week of Prayer. A layman of our church expresses a desire that our Bishops appoint such a season annually, and to designate the hour of service, so that at the same moment of time petitions for the prosperity of our beloved Zion shall be ascending throughout the entire connection, and that pastors on circuits appoint some local preacher exhorter, leader or layman to conduct the exercises during their absence on other portions of the work.

We invite attention to the advertisement in to-day's issue of a new depository of Southern Methodist Books. While we rejoice to have a Depository in Richmond, we should be still better pleased to have one in Raleigh or some other central point in our State. Our preachers and people who buy our books will find it more convenient to order from Richmond than from Nashville or Northern houses.

We are pleased to learn that Trinity College has opened with a larger number of students than at any previous term since the war. This is as it should be—our Conference institutions need the fostering care of the church. The practical way to do this is to give them a liberal patronage.

Rev. J. J. Carden, formerly of the N. C. Conference, and who for the past year was stationed at Wollington, Mo., is now stationed at Los Animus, Colorado. He has our best wishes for success in the great work of the Master.

We are pleased to learn from Rev. R. L. Abernethy that Rutherford College, over which he presides, is in a prosperous condition. He reports 133 students in attendance upon the Fall term—43 of whom are in the female department. While the College is not sectarian, the President is Methodist woof and warp, and his influence is in favor of Methodism.

Rev. A. W. Mangum is conducting a series of religious meetings at Edenton St. Church. His congregations are large, and much seriousness is manifested The meetings will be continued through the present week.

Vows of Consecration.

This is the title of a well written and interesting article recently published in Zion's Herald. We commend it to our readers as worthy of a careful perusal. He who fails to remember his religious vows is in danger of making ship-wreck of the faith, but he who when tempted and sorely tried, remembers rightly the solemn pledges made before God, adds to his faith and the richness of his religious experience. There are crisis hours says the writer, "in every human life—hours when decisions are made which are as enduring as eternity in their results. There are such hours in the life of every Christian—times when the soul realizes a grand uplift towards God and heaven, and all the future history of the individual is henceforth more heroic and Christ-like. It is doubtless true that these crises are usually periods of failing faith, of waning power and sorest conflict. The enemy foresees the possibilities of probation, and he knows that if he can carry his point under such circumstances he may bear off the prey in unholy triumph.

But God does not leave the soul amid such perils, and good influences come flowing to the tried and tempted. Still, there is, and must be, a struggle when the opposing forces of hell and heaven are seeking the mastery. At length there comes the sense of peril and of weakness, for the mind quickened by divine power judges correctly of itself and of its surroundings; and besides this there is a revelation of the glory of an attainable heaven, and the awful blackness of a yawning hell; and the soul begins to cry out after God. "Help, Lord!" was the cry of sinking Peter; and where is the Christian that has not felt himself, at some time in his experience, sinking amid the wild and tumultuous billows? And then has not the same cry, "Holy Lord!" sprung up from the depths of his soul! The probability is, that in every such hour a vow has been formed within, that may or may not have been uttered by the lips, that the remainder of life should be earnestly devoted to God. It was a solemn vow, witnessed by the opposing spiritual forces, and written down in the book of God by the recording angel. If it has been faithfully kept, the person making it can date from that time a new and richer and more satisfactory experience of salvation. The joy of victory has been his, and triumphant over his foes, he has daily increased in courage, faith and power.

Or, it may have happened that the thoughtful mind has, without turmoil or conflict, looked over the whole, question of duty and responsibility, and has come to the deliberate conclusion that there are heights and depths to the love of God—that there are calls to duty, and opportunities to secure great and eternal blessings, and also to confer immeasurable benefits upon mankind if there were a fuller consecration of all the redeemed powers to the service of the Master. And so, in view of all these weighty considerations, soul, body and spirit, with all possessed or hoped for, are freely laid upon the altar, and with solemn vows an eternal devotement of the sacrifice is made to the triune God. These vows, in many (perhaps in most cases, it is to be hoped, have been faithfully and lovingly kept; and the consequence has been that the world has wondered at the fresh displays of God's power to save, the Church has been edified, and very many precious souls have been won to the path of life.)

But, alas! alas! how many vows of holy consecration have been forgotten! how many have been ignored! and the words spoken in the presence of God, and perhaps in the hearing of a listening world, have been cast aside as though they were trifles lighter than air. And all the while God has not forgotten them; and He waits graciously—waits in mercy for their fulfilment. How much longer He will wait He only knows. It may be this is the last year for some barren figtree; it may be some who read these lines are venturing a step too far upon the divine forbearance. O, man or woman, bearing the name of Christian, remember your vows of consecration! Renew them, acknowledge their validity; keep them for the sake of priceless interests that are already imperilled. Do this, and your life henceforth shall be brighter and happier; heaven shall be nearer and dearer; your crown shall have more stars; and best of all, Jesus will say, "Well done."

A TREE ITEM.—Rev. J. W. Jenkins, from Leasburg, sends us the following item:

"I saw in the Advocate a statement that the largest tree in N. C. was near Fayetteville. I send you the following measurements by my own hands, with tape line, of the "Large Poplar" standing on the road between Leasburg and Roxboro, a mile and a half, or two miles from the former place. At the ground, 27 feet in circumference—two feet above the ground 22½—at four feet above the ground 20, and at six feet 18 feet.

Cumberland must try again, or Person will take the palm."

A great sensation has been caused at Rome in Roman Catholic circles by the conversion to Protestantism of another distinguished clergyman of that Church. The name of the convert is Alceste Launa. He was a parish priest, a Doctor of Divinity, and has been professor of philosophy at the Vatican Seminary, and teacher of mathematics at a polytechnic shool.

A Camp-meeting at Concord, Uwharie Circuit.

BROTHER BOBBITT: Concord is located in the South Western part of Randolph county, one mile from Dunborrou's bridge on Uwharie river, in the midst of a pleasant and thrifty community. Near the church is a new Academy occupied by a most excellent teacher and devoted friend of the church, who is doing much for the moral and intellectual improvement of the community. The camp-meeting commenced on Friday evening Aug. the 14th and continued until the morning of the 21st.

Accompanied by Bros. Wheeler, of Rockingham circuit, and Boone of Pee Dee circuit, we reached the camp-ground in good time for opening the services, and found Bro. Farrar, the pastor, and Bro. Johnson, of Montgomery, already present. But few tent-holders were present and they were busily engaged in adjusting their affairs with reference to future operations.

The camp ground is most beautifully located, has one of the best arbors that I have seen. The tents are substantial and of sufficient number and dimensions to accommodate a large number of persons. Several new ones were built this year, and the indications are that the number will increase annually.

Besides the substantial wooden tents, there were a large number of canvass tents extemporized for the occasion. These, I suppose, belonged to families who did not find it convenient to build and yet wished to enjoy the meeting and bear their own burden.

The meeting was continued for a week with fine results. All seemed to feel it was good to be there.

The preaching from the beginning was with great earnestness and zeal. The word was quick and powerful. It is difficult to tell the exact results. It is thought between fifty and sixty professed faith in Christ. Thirty two were received into the church. Nine adults and thirty five children were baptized.

The congregation after the first day was large and attentive, and I am glad to say I have never seen a better behaved congregation on such an occasion anywhere. No standing around in groups or conspicuous processions were seen during the hours of service. All, or nearly so, were present at the arbor; all attentive and all seemed to be profoundly impressed. In addition to the ministerial aid already referred to, Bros. Keerans, C. H. Phillips and J. W. Lewis were with us a part of the time.

S. D ADAMS.

Widows' and Orphans Ben fit Society of the N. C. Conference.

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: The constitution and By Laws of our society have been submitted to most of the District Conferences, and the society endorsed by them. At some of the Conferences we failed to get the papers present in time. We believe the society is universally endorsed by the ministry and laity, and that it will prove a success. We expect to have a mass meeting during the next session of the annual conference, when the constitution, &c., can be reviewed, and if necessary, revised.

Some of the ministers have appointed corresponding secretaries in accordance with the provisions of the by-laws, and Bro. T. C. Williams, Financial Secretary, is receiving letters of inquiries concerning the duties expected of them. I adopt this method of replying to these letters.

The brethren appointed on the different pastoral charges, will provide a suitable blank book and proceed at once to receive names of members and their annual fees. The list of names they will retain, but remit the money to T. C. Williams, Esq., at this place. It is desirable that every preacher in the conference should appoint the secretary for his charge at once. The secretary thus appointed can appoint others to assist him, but he only will be known to us. If more convenient, funds can be sent to conference by the preachers, but we would like to be informed occasionally of progress. Any one desiring, can become a life member by paying $20 at one time.

In conclusion, I will say that after extensive inquiry I have not found a single layman who does not heartily endorse the enterprise, and if the preachers will appoint working men, and these men will take hold of the matter in earnest, we will make it a grand success.

After conference, the constitution and By-Laws will be printed, and circulated throughout the conference. Which will be the "Banner" charge?

Very truly yours.

B. F. LONG, Sec'y.

Warrenton, N. C., Sept. 2, 187½.

"GIVING IS."—It is better to yield a little than to quarrel a great deal. The habit of standing up, as people call it for their (little) rights, is one of the most disagreeable and undignified in the world. Life is too short for the perpetual bickering which attends such a disposition; and, unless a very momentous affair indeed, where other people's claims and interests are involved, it is a question if it is not wiser, happier and more prudent to yield somewhat of our precious rights than squabble to maintain them. True wisdom is first pure, then peaceable and gentle.

Most people are like eggs: too full of themselves to hold anything else.

Camp-Meeting.

BRO. BOBBITT: I have been in favor of Camp Meetings for religious purposes ever since I had the pleasure of being present at one. If it was possible to separate the direct from the reflexive religious influences produced by such gatherings, I would still say let us have them for the sake of the latter. I have never witnessed any assemblage of persons, in such large numbers, in which all the best feelings of social life were brought in to such active play, as at a well conducted Camp-Meeting.

Would not the Methodists of this district alone furnish all that is requisite for a camp meeting on an extensive scale? I suggest therefore that you agitate the subject of holding a camp-meeting next year on the Fair Grounds of the N. C. Ag. Society, if it be too late to hold one at that place this Fall.

Give us your views, Bro. Bobbitt, state your objections freely, point out the obstacles and peradventure they may be all removed.

B. T BLAKE.

Oaky Grove Sept 5th, 1874.

We are a strong advocate of camp meetings and believe that when well conducted, they are productive of great and good results. We do not know what would be the result of a general camp meeting such as Father Blake alludes to. They are quite popular among our Northern brethren who claim them as their most profitable meetings. We have never attended one and know little of the mode of conducting them. Nor do we know how Father Blake's suggestion would be received by the officers of the Agricultural Society, who have charge of the Fair Grounds, but we will take the liberty of suggesting him as a Committee of One to negotiate with the Executive Committee of the Society and ascertain their feelings on the subject, as he is well and favorably known to all of them.—ED

Revival Intelligence.

Rev. J. F. Smoot, in charge of Smithfield circuit, writes September 3rd:

BRO. BOBBITT: You may say to the lovers of Zion that we are enjoying a gracious revival influence at Smithfield. I commenced a series of services with the "Week of Prayer," and the Lord has been with us of a truth. Sixteen have found peace, and there are others seeking the pearl of great price. We trust that many will be converted and added to the Church.

Rev. Jas. Willson, in charge of Fifth Street Church, Wilmington, writes:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: The church here is doing very well. The Week of Prayer was a time of interest and profit. We had prayer meeting during the week twice a day, in the morning at 6 o'clock, and at night at 8. During the last week the meetings were kept up only at night. The attendance was varied, but in the main good. The Spirit's power was felt, and at times manifestations were seen. The church in the main was revived and encouraged. Last night there were two accessions to the membership To God be glory, now and forever!

Rev. R. M. Brown writes from Albemarle, Sept. 4th:

BRO. BOBBITT: I wish to give you an account of the goodness of the Lord towards us on Albemarle circuit. At a meeting held at Randle's Church of five days continuance, five souls were happily converted, and three added to the church, and the membership was wonderfully revived. The church was made to ring again and again with the shouts of happy souls.—There are many in that community still seeking religion. We held a meeting at Centre in connection with our 3rd Quarterly Conference which continued nine days; five were converted; but one accession to the church. Many of the members were revived, and enjoyed greatly the presence of the Lord.

Our P. E., Rev. J. S. Nelson, was with us, and though very unwell, yet he preached three earnest, well directed sermons in his usual warm and energetic manner.

Rev. J. K. Tucker was with us on the Sabbath and gave one good sermon. Rev. W. H. Watkins, of the Stanly circuit, preached once. Rev. A. D. Betts, of Ansonville circuit, labored efficiently. Also Rev. Thomas Henly (Local) of Ansonville circuit, was with us doing good service. We expect to hold meetings at other points soon. Of which, more anon.

Rev. J. E. Thompson, in charge of Rolesville circuit, writes September 6th:

BRO. BOBBITT: I spent a part of last Wednesday at "Cool Spring," the place where Rev. W. J. W. Crowder, assisted by Bro. R. W. Best and others, has been holding a meeting of several days. Up to that time, twenty-five persons had professed faith in Christ; twenty-two had applied for membership and there were eight or ten penitents at the altar. The meeting altogether has been one of unusual interest, and will doubtless be a great blessing to the community in which it is held.

What a blessing our city brethren could be if, instead of staying at home where they are often crowded and can hardly find work to do—they would go out to these destitute communities and preach, pray and sing, until scores and hundreds of sleeping sinners were awakened and alarmed, and then pointed to Jesus Christ, the only hope of fallen humanity!

Religious Brevities

— Bishop Wightman has changed the time of holding the North Georgia Conference from November 25th to December 2nd.

— The 61st Session of the Synod of North Carolina will commence in the town of Concord, Cabarrus county, N. C., on Wednesday, the 14th day of October, 1874 at 7½ o'clock p. m.

— Rev. Dr. Talmage's church received into its membership ninety-two new members on the fifth instant. It is said that more than four hundred persons have joined this church since the church has entered the tabernacle.

— DEATH OF MRS. M. J. HAMILTON—The numerous friends and admirers of this estimable lady, the wife of Rev. A. L Hamilton, D.D, of Atlanta, were deeply pained to hear of her death in that city in the early part of last week. Her remains were brought to Macon on Wednesday the 2d instant, and after appropriate funeral services conducted by Dr. W. P. Harrison, of whose charge she was a member, they were consigned to their last resting place in Rose Hill Cemetery. The sorrowing husband has our tender sympaties in his sore bereavment.—Southern Advocate.

Do We Pray For Missions?

We very rarely hear the mission-work of the Church mentioned in the public prayers of our ministers or people. We hear some platitudes about the "coming of the day when the nations shall learn war no more, and all men shall know God from the least unto the greatest.' But pointed, special, direct prayer for the blessing of God upon mission-work and missionaries—how seldom do we hear it! The opening prayers at our recent General Conference were conspicuously defective in this element: rarely was one word said about our mission-work and our missionaries. Prayer for God's blessing upon our missionary work is not, as it ought to be, a characteristic of our public devotions. How about our family and private devotions? God knoweth. But this is wrong—fearfully wrong. There must be something in the way—some terrible inenbus—that represses zeal and paralyzes faith. Why is there so little preaching of the Bible doctrine of missions? and so little praying for God's blessing upon the missionaries?

Confession and repentance become us. Let it begin with the chief clergy, who have let us slumber over these questions and duties too long. Constitutions, plans, papers, essays secretaries, are good after their kind; but we must have the Spirit of life and power from on high. We need the ten-days' wrestling that went before the outpouring of the day of Pentecost. Our Missionary.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage's Darkey Story

Eli Perkins writes from Saratoga to the Graphic, as follows:

Even the Boston darkey—the Plymouth Rock Puritan darkey—has a profound reverence for Boston talent. The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage tells the old story here again, how a few years ago he walked into a Presbyterian Church in Boston. As he entered a colored section, now attending the colored Convention in Saratoga, bowed and said:

"Have a seat sah? Plenty of seats dis mornin', sah.'

"No, thank you; can't stay but a moment. Just stepped in to see the church. What is the name of the clergyman?—can't see very plain.'

"That, sah, is the Rev. Henry Wad Beecha, sah.'

"Fine preacher, isn't he?' returned Mr. Talmage.

"Well, sah, peoples has different notions 'bout preachers—"

"But he seems quite animated.'

"Yes, sah; consid'ble animated.'

"And appears to have talent.'

"Well, sah, as I said afo', peoples has such different notions 'bout preachers.—Dar's some dat tink he's mighty good on de words. I tink myself he's a fur man, suh—a very fur man, sah; but not of the prima facie class. He's a good man, sah—a well meanin' man, but not a talented man. He's a New York man, sah!'

TO THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH: The Members of the Methodist Church at this place, after trying to relieve their Church of an indebtedness that is due and must be paid this Fall find that after having expended their utmost endeavors to do so, they have yet to pay $1,200.00.

Our Church for this amount is mortgaged, and we will no longer be indulged by our creditors,

Unable, any further, to help ourselves, we appeal to the Methodist Church at large for contributions,

Brother, Sister, little Children, will you contribute, if it is only a mite, towards saving one of our Lord's houses of worship?

Remit by Post Office Order to W. S. SYKES.

Being solicitous for the success of the Church at West Point, and satisfied of their financial inability, we heartily endorse, and concur in this appeal.

T. Y. RAMSEY, P. E.
R. PAINE, Bishop.

The "war of races" in the South is for future use in Congress. Every radical who is beat for office will contest the seat of the man elected, and then produce the "war of races" in evidence that there was not a fair election.—N. Y. HERALD.

"I Want a Nice Girl"

Yes, and so did father Adam, and so did all your fathers. The supply has been constantly and steadily increasing; but the demand seems to be greater than ever. Adam's tigir was manufactured, and was therefore without kin. All other girls have been born with kin. Most girls will be nice, if you will give them comely clothes and a plenty of soap and water. When I say soap, I mean soap, and not those vile compounds of rosin and tallow which shrewd Yankees so often sell to careless merchants, and which are inferior to the nitro, mentioned in the Bible.

But the nice girls are not generally those without kin. Who ever gave them any soap, or taught them to use it? How could they get nice clothes, or ever learn to wear them? How could they learn to sew, or knit, to wash or cook? No one has loved them, and they had no one to love. I once knew a nice girl, and she became nice in this way: Her father and mother were dead, but she had a little brother and loved him. She kept him clean, made and mended his clothes, prepared his food and carried him to church. Then as her little heart grew larger she took in another girl's brother and loved him also. So it was perfectly natural for her to be nice.

But the text is found in one of the many letters just received A wise and good man writes: "I wish to procure, from the Asylum, a girl between nine and twelve years of age, healthy, of good parentage, docile, without any parents or kin, till she is 21 years of age." Let us call the writer Mr. Adams. Now hundreds of poor orphan girls are not healthy, simply because they have too little, or inferior, food, and uncomfortable clothing. Mr. Adams might take one of those and soon make her healthy. I know an orphan girl, lovely in her face, figure and temper. She is all that you could ask of an orphan; but her father was a drunkard, made so by his pastor. Yet Mr Adams does not want her. Poor girl! She suffers for sins which she has never committed. Why not forget her father's fault and let her stand on her own merits? She must be "docile," teachable. When the head of a family is "apt to teach," then every member of it is "apt to be taught."

"Without kin." Is a poor orphan girl to see all her kindred die before she can be employed? She may have an older sister kindly watching over her welfare. But that sister must die before she can find employment. She may have a little brother whom her dying mother left in aunt; but that brother must die before she can find a home. It would make the girl better to have a sister, a brother, or some one to love: but Mr. Adams says, "without kin." She must sing in her heart, "nobody cares for me," before Mr. Adams will let her work for him.

But he wants her till she is 21 years of age, three years after the law of the land makes a bound girl free. Some appreciative man might possibly offer her the head of his table, but Mr. Adams would not let her marry. Grown girls have a right to marry if they wish, and a good opportunity is offered. Who can hold a girl against her wish till she is 21 years of age? The request of Mr. Adams seems to me to be unreasonable and unkind; but he did not so design it.

Now I am seeking good homes for a number of good girls. I can not spare the time to answer all the letters I receive on the subject; but when a man wants a nice girl, let him state succinctly what he will require and what he will perform. Be sure to remember that there are two sides to every contract. Orphans have some rights, and some duties. Let them enjoy the former and faithfully perform the latter.

PETERSON'S LADIES MAGAZINE.—This universally popular Magazine for October is on our table. Those who wish to keep up with the everchanging fashions and at the same time have a valuable repository of pleasant reading matter and useful domestic receipes, cannot do better than to subscribe for this publication. Chas J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut St. Phila. $2 PER ANNUM.

THE LEADER, a collection of Sacred and Secular Music, for choirs, conventions &c. by H. R. Palmer.

We have received from the publishers a copy of this new publication which contains a great variety of new airs, suited to sacred and secular songs. Published by Oliver Ditson & Co. Boston.

SCHOOLDAY MAGAZINE.—This is an excellent Magazine for the young folks, full of instruction and pleasant stories. Published by J. W. Daughaday & Co., Phila $1 00 a year.

THE CHINESE RECORDER, AND MISSIONARY JOURNAL.—This is the successor of the Missionary Recorder, set on foot more than seven years ago by Rev. L. N. Wheeler, a missionary at Foochow China. After several interruptions, its publication has been resumed and it is intended for the mutual interchange of views among missionaries and those interested in missionary work. It is published once every two months, and the present number for January and February 1874 has just reached us. It contains many useful and entertaining articles relating to matters touching missions and the work of missionaries. Published by the Mission Press, Shanghai, at $3 00 a year in advance.

Premium List, Rules and Regulations of the North Carolina Agricultural Society News. Publishing Co. Raleigh.

We are indebted to R. T. Fulghum Sec'y of the Society for a copy of the above named publication. It shows a liberal list of premiums &c, offered by the Society for exhibitions at the coming Fair which will doubtless induce many entries from exhibitors.

A large indignation meeting was held in Memphis on the 29 ult. Speeches were made by ex-Gov Harris, Landon C Haynes, ex-Jeff. Davis, Chancellor Morgan, Gen. Forest, and others, all denouncing the slaughter of the negro prisoners at Trenton. The committee reported resolutions condemning the outrages and calling for the arrest and punishment of the murderers, and a copy of the resolutions was sent Governor Brown, and asking that the power of the State be exercised in discovering and bringing to justice the assassins. The meeting was enthusiastic, and was composed of the leading citizens.

Notwithstanding the great flood in the Mississippi valley in the Spring, the New Orleans TIMES estimates that the sugar and rice crops will be abundant, the latter yielding 30,000 barrels more than in 1873. In sugar, the losses by floods will be about 10,000 hogsheads, and the total yield from 90,000 to 100,000 hogsheads. The acreage devoted to rice culture shows an increase of 6000 acres over last year, and the rice crop is expected to be 110,000 barrels.

"We learn that our friend, R. W. Best, Esq., of Raleigh, is a candidate for the office of Principal Clerk of the House of Representatives. Mr Best is every way well qualified for that position, and would make an excellent clerk. As clerk of Greene county court, in which capacity he served eight years and as Secretary of State for three years, Mr. Best has given general satisfaction to the public. We hear also that he took a most active part on the day of the election in bringing about the political redemption of Wake county."

General News.

Hon. A. H. Stephens, of Georgia, has been renominated for Congress.

The President has signed the following commissions: Adam Wolf, Surveyor of Customs at Nashville, Tenn.; W. L. Iverson, Receiver of Public Moneys at Larnesville, New Mexico, and Lawrence La Rue, Register of Land Office at Larnesville.

Resolved, That General Sherman, having lost a faithful and exemplary life-guard much for his services to the Indians, and that there is not an available man that can be added to the soldiers already in the South.

Resolved, That General Sherman be requested to visit the Indian nation to the West and all wise measures for the protection of the settlers on our border, and that he be authorized to employ as many scouts as may be necessary, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President, and a copy be sent to General Sherman at San Antonio, Texas.

A LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT.—The following from President Grant, dated Sept. 3rd, speaks for itself. It is a matter of surprise to the whole country that the President of the United States should not use his powerful position legitimately that he will resort to unnecessary and unlawful means to protect party rather than the public good The following is the letter:

"Gen. W. W. Belknap, Secretary of War:

"The recent atrocities in the South, particularly in Louisiana, Alabama and South Carolina, show a disregard for law, civil rights and personal protection that ought not to be tolerated in any civilized government. It looks as if unless speedily checked, matters may become a reign of lawlessness and property there will receive no protection from the local authorities until such authority be made powerless.

"Under such circumstances it is the duty of the government to give all the aid for the protection of life and civil rights legal authorized to this end. I wish you would consult with the Attorney General, and have him informed as to the outrages and the localities where the local authorities are powerless, and so order troops as to be available in cases of necessity. A proclamation for the protection of the South will be issued by the Law Department of the government, and will be directed by the Attorney General in accordance with the provisions of the enforcement act. No instructions need therefore be given the troops ordered into the Southern States except as they may be transmitted from time to time on advice of the Attorney General, or as circumstances may determine thereafter.

"Yours, truly," U. S. GRANT."

Died on the 8th instant at the residence of S. D. Bragg at Ocracoke, Mrs. Elizabeth Dixon, wife of Rev. B. Dixon. She passed away in great peace and in joyful hope of the heavenly inheritance.

Died, at her home in Stanly Co. Aug 22nd 1874 Mrs. Emma, wife of Mr. G. R. McCain and daughter of Rev. A. F. Atkins. The disease of the consumption of her life was consumption. Sister McCain had been a member of the church for several years, and a seeker of holiness during the time, but only became satisfied of her acceptance with God a few weeks before her death. She expressed herself as being ready. She has gone to join her friends on the other shore, leaving a kind and affectionate husband to whom she had been united less than a year, to mourn her loss. May her surviving friends all meet her where parting will be no more!

R M R.

Departed, this life in Caldwell Co. N C., June 6th 1874 Mrs Elizabeth E Earnest, in her 71st. year. She had been a member of the Methodist, Episcopal, Church, South, for more than 50 years, having made a profession of religion and united with the people of God, when she was quite young. At the time sister Earnest joined the church there were but few Methodists in that part of the country, and consequently Methodism was no so popular as it presently, but that did not deter her choice which she made from principle, for from that choice she never faltered nor declined, her heart was fixed. In the large circle of our acquaintance, I have known but few such zealous christians; her zeal was not of a noisy character, but was exhibited in the beautiful consistent daily walk and conversation upon the means of grace.

During four years that I was her Pastor, I never saw her absent from church but three times and then it was impracticable for her to be present. She belonged to the class that the Lord represents, called when it is said "Come up to the house of the Lord." Her home was the home for the preachers when on that part of the work. It was a source of real pleasure to her to minister unto them of her temporal things. If the giving of a cup of water to a disciple is rewarded, how large a reward must have awarted her, but she now rests from her labors and her works follow her. Owing to the character of her last illness she said as little about her departure, as she was dying or leaving when compared with many years of such living testimony as she presented. She has left an only daughter and many relations and friends to mourn her loss but they mourn not as those who have no hope. The church militant has lost one of its best and faithful members, but the church triumphant has gained an accession. Earth has been made poorer, but heaven has been made richer.

G. W. Ivy.

Died in Rockingham county N. C. August 23d 1874 George Clifton, son of J. W. and Z. A. McDowell, aged 6 years and 5 months,

I lose these little lambs said He,
And lay them on my breast
To protection they shall find in me,
In me be ever blest,

Death may the bands of life unloose
But can't dissolve my love,
Millions of infant souls compose
The family above.

A united Quarterly Conference of Deep River Circuit, held at Mercers Aug 15th 1874, the undersigned were appointed a committee to draft resolutions of respect to our weak and beloved brother, Rev. George Stuart, a local preacher in Deep River Circuit, who departed this life June the 22nd 1874, aged 55 years.

Whereas, it has pleased our heavenly father, to remove from us our beloved brother, who was for over forty years a local preacher and zealous laborer, and whose life, during his connection with the Church, was an example of piety, therefore,

Resolved, that in his death the Church has lost a faithful and worthy member, whose exemplary life and earnest labors, have done much for her interests.

Resolved, that we bow with humble resignation to the dispensation of a benevolent, and all wise Providence in removing from us our beloved brother, feeling, that, our loss is his eternal gain.

Resolved, that we deeply sympathize with his family in their sad affliction and bereavement, and pray that they may have strength and grace to bear their affliction; and above all that they may be enabled to look forward, with a sure and steadfa hope to a happy reunion in that land "Where sick ess sorrow pain and death are felt and feared no more."

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and also a copy be furnished to the Raleigh Christian Advocate for publication.

A. H. TEMPLE,

(Successor to Lynn Adams,)

Grocer, Cotton Factor

AND

Commission Merchant.

Nos. 5 Martin St. and 5 Exchange Place.

Having succeeded to the business of Mr. Lynn Adams, I am prepared to offer to the public the best inducements in my line and respectfully ask a continuance of the trade hitherto given Mr. Adams, promising to give satisfaction in all cases.

In addition to my regular line of goods, I have on hand a full stock of the

made in Wake county, and adapted especially to the farmer's use.

I have just returned from the North where I purchased a full line of choice groceries and am now daily adding to my stock. I promis those who may favor us with their custom to give them as good bargains as they can get elsewhere.

A. H TEMPLE.

✱I most respectfully ask my former patrons and friends to patronize Mr. Temple as successor, who will, I am assured, give satisfaction to all.

I will still keep my office, as Cotton Factor, in the same building.

RALEIGH DISTRICT CONFERENCE SCHOOL.

Male and Female.

At the late session of the Raleigh District Conference a Committee was appointed to locate these schools. We are now ready to receive applications from different localities.

Persons wishing to have these schools located in their midst, will please communicate with me at once, stating what their several communities are willing to do in the way of material and buildings &c and also at what price board can be had.

Every District needs such a school. The General Conference of the church has advised it. Let us have it brethren, and such a one as shall be an ornament to the District, and an active auxiliary to our College in the State.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,

Staunton, Va.,

Will begin its 25th annual session Sept. 17th, 1874. Rev. W. A. Harris, D. D., President, with an able corps of twenty-three Teachers and Officers. Modern languages taught and spoken by European Teachers. Music by several Professors and Teachers.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world Its unrivaled efficacy in the rapid promotion of the physical health and vigor of our pupils. Those who come hither from the South, with feeble constitutions, colds and climate diseases, are entirely restored.

Buildings elegant—famed by the purest breeze, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery, ranking it one of the most delightful College homes in the Union.

The last session, one hundred and eleven young ladies attended this school, as boarding pupils from fifteen Southern States.

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONIALS.

From Bishop D. S. Doggett, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, located in Staunton, Virginia, under the Presidency of Rev. W. A. Harris, is, in my judgment, one of the best institutions, for young ladies, in the South. I have occasion to know and appreciate the value by the advantages enjoyed by one of my daughters, now a pupil there. It possesses all the facilities of a thorough female education. Its personal accommodations are all that can be desired for health and comfort, or taste. No location could be more eligible; nowhere more magnificent; no atmosphere more salubrious. It is now in a state of great prosperity. I do not hesitate to recommend it to the patronage of all who wish their daughters to receive the benefits of a useful and ornamental culture.

D. S. DOGGETT.

From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the Church its instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music, advantages are offered of very high order. The most talented Professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent. The School is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, at Staunton, deserves the brilliant success it enjoys. It has a good corps of teachers, a beautiful situation, and excellent management. Having had a daughter under Mr. Harris' care, during the present session, my observation leads me to believe this school to be one of the best of Female Seminaries which adorn our State.

SCOVILL'S

BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP!

All cutaneous eruptions on the face or body indicate AN IMPURE CONDITION OF THE BLOOD, and this may, or may not be SCROFULA; but in either case the disease is nothing more than an insidious poison that as it courses through the veins, souling seeds of death with every pulsation.

In this condition of things something is needed AT ONCE, to CLEANSE THE BLOOD; and

SCOVILL'S BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP, will positively effect this desideratum, expelling every trace of disease from the blood and system, and leaving the skin

SOFT, FAIR AND BEAUTIFUL.

Hundreds of certificates attest its Little Things.

Sweet-eyed Bell flowers should Pluck
Tast I try not to be too small
To heed my little call,
And so not bloom at all.
How much that's pleasant we should lose
For want of paying heed,
Every little flower that blooms
Did a big duty owe.

Suppose the little cloud or fleecy
They were not too small
To do their part on earth,
And so not rain at all,
Why, the fruits would never grow
Nor flowers gem the bowers
For all the bird and drops help
To make refreshing showers.

And so shall little deeds of kindness
That they are much too small
To be of any use to others,
And doing none at all
Add desert to their lives, I tell you,
For lack of loving deeds
Are judged by the sight of God,
And counted up above.

—CHRISTIAN'S FRIEND.

Using the Lord's Money.

Recently an eminent Baptist called on Mr. Spurgeon, and made a statement to the following effect:

Ten years ago he had set aside 1,000 sovereigns toward building a chapel, but untoward circumstances had intervened, and prevented the execution of his design. This he was now, he said, desirous of carrying into execution, and trusted Mr. Spurgeon would render him his assistance.

"What do you wish me to do?" asked the pastor the Tabernacle.

"To give me your powerful aid in raising a second thousand, which is imperatively required."

"I understand," said Mr. Spurgeon, "but let me see, you have had the use of this money ten years!"

"Yes."

"During that time it must have been worth to you at least ten per cent. per annum!"

"Well, I dare say."

"Then, my dear sir, you have got the money without troubling me. Go and build the chapel."

And the applicant departed, fully satisfied with this business-like and thoroughly practical view of the matter.

Keep Still.

We fancy this is what every small boy would like to say if he only knew how:

Keep still! That's what they always say to us boys. Just as if there never had been any noise in the world until we were born. Haven't old folks all been boys and girls once? Didn't some of them get boxed on the ears at school? Didn't some of them drum on the milk pans, or crack nuts with the flat iron, or slam the doors? Everything that is smart goes off with a bang. This would be a dull world if it were not for the racket the boys make. Noisy boys are not always smoy. Some are, but we are not. We belong to the "Boy's Rattle-Bang Society o' Good Manners," and we invite all our young friends to come join us.—Advance.

The Moss.

A little boy, who was one day walking in the fields with his father, asked him how it was that there was so much more moss on one side of the trees than on the other.

"My boy," replied the father, "just as the good God gives a fleece to the sheep to keep it warm and snug during the cold weather, so He puts this green coat on the trees to protect them during the winter, and He is so good that He takes care to make it grow thickest on the side where the north wind blows; for trees and sheep are not like children, who have mothers who can make winter clothes, therefore the good God clothes them for all seasons.—From the French.

Doings of Froga.

Naturalists have not left us entirely without anecdotes of froggy. Dr. Roots had a frog which domesticated itself in the kitchen. Every evening, when the servants went to supper, he peeped out of his hole, as if to reconnoitre, jumped out if all seemed right, basked on the warm bright hearth, and there remained till the family went to bed. A friendship sprang up between froggy and an old cat, who shared the fireside with him, and was solicitous not to disturb or incommode his strange companion. A writer in the Zoologist states that on one occasion he saw several frogs gather round a window, crawl up the sun blind, and peep into the room, each in his turn. At the time he did not understand what it meant; but on the following morning he found a frog which had accidentally been imprisoned between the window and the blind. The episode became clear enough; the frogs had anxiously clambered up to see a comrade who was in trouble, and were no doubt sorry at being unable to extricate him.—All the Year Round.

Rural and Domestic.

BAKED APPLE DUMPLINGS – Roll out some dough thicker than pie-crust and inclose a handful of sliced ripe apples well covered with sugar and butter. Bring the edges together as in any other dumplings. When as many are made as required, place them side by side in a pudding, spread butter and sugar over them, and pour boiling water to about half cover the dumplings. Set them in the stove and cook moderately fast until they are nicely browned. The butter, sugar and water make a nice sauce, which can be enriched with more butter, and flavored with nutmeg if desired.

Is Hired Help Profitable?

Ordinarily farmers estimate their crops by the acre—so many bushels of corn, wheat or other grains per acre. This is probably the natural method where land is scarce and dear. In the South the other method estimating the crop of cotton at so many bales per hand—is the usual one. On most Southern plantations, in the olden time, land was of little account. Labor represented by negro slaves was a cash article—slaves selling for one thousand dollars and higher each. With a thousand dollars thus invested the planter naturally calculated his profits or losses on this, leaving the amount produced per acre as a secondary consideration. In the great corn growing regions of the West, farmers have learned to estimate the number of acres that one man can tend during a season, and these estimates are such as to astonish eastern farmers used to small fields, and one, if not two, hand-hoeings of the crop. Where mixed farming prevails, estimating the labor of a hand employed on a dozen different crops is a more difficult job; and is seldom attempted.

It would be well if farmers would adopt this method of keeping accounts for one reason at least—it would inevitably set them to thinking. Within certain limits—and nobody knows where these limits lie—the productive capacity of an acre of ground depends upon the labor and manure put on it. Land itself is inert—worthless; with no culture it produces nothing of value. If seeded it can be pastured, but the cows have to be milked and the sheep to be shorn before produce can be turned into cash. From this form of lowest productiveness to the highest results of market gardening, there is a regular gradation, depending almost entirely on the capital and skill employed in cultivating the land. Farmers invariably reckon "interest on value of land" as part of the cost of a crop, but this item goes on just the same whether the field be cultivated or barren.

Now we come to the drift of the question which heads this article. If a certain expenditure of labor on fifty or one hundred acres produces a certain amount in return, how much more might be produced by the addition of one, two or more hands through the working season? The interest on land, taxes, family expenses, and a host of other items, are the same on a hundred acre farm, whether it produce much or little. The farmer on such a farm who "saves" hiring needed help; "saves" the cost of manure, of underdraining, or of thorough tillage, is guilty of withholding more than is meet, which the wise man tells us "tendeth to poverty."

Farmers often complain that they "cannot afford to hire." This is true of some sections of the West where lack of markets brings the price of grain below the cost of production. But when eastern farmers make this complaint, it will generally be found that their failure lies in not hiring enough. Whenever a profit can be figured on any crop, including cost of all labor employed, the fact is self-evident that, with enough of such labor to make the farm as productive as possible, farming must pay. All have doubtless heard of the merchant who boasted that he had an exceedingly profitable business, which paid him 100 per cent. on his investment. It proved, however, that he was a peanut peddler, and only sold fifty cents worth per day. As his expenses were two dollars a day, it did not take long to exhaust his capital. Farmers who use all their manure and most of their labor on a few acres, often make an equally good showing. But if they have one or two hundred acres left unproductive, while this one crop is produced, the farm, as a whole, may not pay expenses. The remedy is plain—employ more labor, and thus make a larger capital productive.

Every farmer should know something about the average production from the labor of one man on his farm for the season. Of course this varies largely in different seasons—with prices and crops, &c.; but he can at least tell whether the farm produces enough more, for the labor of one man year by year, to pay his wages and leave a balance. If it does, he should use more labor and make greater profit. That the farmer finds it hard work to raise money to pay his help, signifies nothing. As likely as not he is kept poor because he does not hire enough. On almost any hundred-acre farm, two farm hands besides the farmer are absolutely needed and can be paid easier than one. If the farmer does not know enough to use the labor of two men profitably on such a farm, he had better vote himself incompetent and retire from the business.

Two men on fifty acres of arable land will produce more than one man can on a hundred acres; and three men on fifty acres will be equal to two on a hundred. There is an advantage in large farms, for six men on a hundred acres is a considerable larger force than three men on fifty. But the fact remains that our present method of reckoning the production of a farm at so much per acre, instead of so much per man employed, is wrong and should be superseded.—W. J. F., (Monroe county, N. Y.) in Country Gentleman.

BAD FARMING.—What is bad farming? It consists in the farmer neglecting to raise his own bread and meat, and some to spare, and giving his attention almost entirely to the culture of tobacco relying on this article to buy the necessaries of life which too often fails to do it.

Right here, in this tobacco growing region, we are now paying $1.50 for a bushel of unbolted corn meal, and about a shilling a mouthful for bacon. Where, oh where is the Grange? Can't it give us cheaper bread and meat?—Milton Chronicle.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

The Cant of Impostors.

It is so obvious that pleasant and consolidations vigor is the best defence against disease, that even the vendors of drastic purgatives advertise them as tonics stomachics and restoratives, in the hope of enlisting the confidence of the public in the destructive and pernicious potions. It is amusing to note how these impostors imitate and copy the language in which the medicinal properties of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are described. Although the effect of their nasping excoriants is to destroy the tone of the digestive organs and the bowels, and to rob the system of its vital strength, they are unscrupulously recommended to the weak and prostrate victims of disease as stimulants! It is time this humbug and a very successful one it is too, thanks to the mature common sense of the American people) was stigmatized as it deserved Such infernal poisons & nostrums should be exposed and branded. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, be it understood, is a genuine, scientific preparation. It has a specific curative, as simple, and as sure as any law in nature, and that basis is the vegetable which differences its action from every other sanitary principle through every part of the system. The tonic, alterative and regulating ingredients of the Bitters would be comparatively inert if they were not made to act, curative, to the cells where they are required by their solutive action. The cant which proceeds against the new is just stated and that which emphasizes the use of it deserved ing full effect to medicinal exercise of the ill-fated quality is the case of ejaculations also. Every well-meaning physician is very cautious. It was his duty to employ only such remedies as experience has convinced of their efficacy, and in prescribing nothing to the patient as a cure. It was his duty to employ only such remedies as experience has convinced of their efficacy, and in prescribing nothing to the patient as a cure. It is a delusion and a snare. If such Bitters, the great results of which are in the mind of the age. Is he to be hindered from using, and prescribing a wholesome, vitalizing, renovating preparation?

DR. C. M'LANE'S CELEBRATED LIVER PILLS,

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder-blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for a rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the liver to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. M'LANE'S LIVER PILLS, in case of AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them A FAIR TRIAL.

Address all orders to

FLEMING BROS., PITTSBURGH, PA.

P. S. Dealers and Physicians ordering from other than Fleming Bros., will do well to write their orders distinctly, and take none but Dr. C. M'Lane's, prepared by Fleming Bros., Pittsburgh, Pa. To those wishing to give them a trial, we will forward per mail, post paid, to any part of the United States, our box of Pills for twelve three-cent postage stamps, or one vial of Vermifuge, for fourteen three-cent stamps. All orders from Canada must be accompanied by twenty cents extra.

Sold by all respectable Druggists and Country Storekeepers generally.

Dr. C. M'Lane's Vermifuge

Should be kept in every nursery. If you would have your children grow up to be healthy, active, and vigorous Men and Women, give them a few doses of

M'LANE'S VERMIFUGE,

TO EXPEL THE WORMS.

The Crucial Test of the value of a medicine is time. Does experience confirm the claims put forth in its favor at the outset? Is the grand question. Apply this criterion, as simple, and severe as it is, to FARRANT'S EFFERVESCENT SELTZER APERIENT. How has it worn? What has been its history? How does it stand to-day?

FARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT is a household name throughout the United States. It is administered as a specific, and with success, in dyspepsia, sick headache, nervous debility, liver complaint, biliousness, bowel complaints (especially constipation), rheumatism, gout gravel, nausea, the complaints peculiar to the maternal sex, and all types of inflammation. Should it fail in its operation that it can be given with perfect safety to the weakest child and so agreeable is it to the taste, so refreshing to the palate, that children never refuse to take it. For sale by all druggists.

Leach Brothers,

No. 3 Exchange Place,

RALEIGH, N. C

We have just received the attention of the Trade in Central North Carolina to our large and well selected stock of

"FAMILY," "EXTRA" AND "SUPERFINE" FLOURS.

We feel confident we can do as well for them as consumers in Baltimore or Norfolk, freight and cartage considered.

Our Senior Partner and Buyer, who resides all the time in New York, has for the past eight years been connected with the most well known Foreign House of Messrs. H. K. Thurber & Co., and has recently been connected with the Flour Exchange in that city, as their buyer of Flour, which gives us every advantage of the largest buyer in New York, as well as Baltimore or Norfolk, enabling us to sell Flour in this market for less than those STRICTLY AT FIRST HANDS, and with only one profit to the retailer.

Our facilities for handling these goods being equal to any house South of New York, and having them at "Head Pier" side for cash we are determined to handle them at as small a profit as any one in North Carolina.

Samples sent upon application and prices guaranteed.

We also offer the same to the wholesale trade.

Hope of Heaven.

I would not give the hope I have
Of Heaven pure and bright,
The gates of pearl, its golden streets,
And streams of joyous light;

I would not give the hope I have
Of Heaven bright and fair,
Its early flowers, its fragrant flowers,
That shed their fragrance there.

Not Ophir's gold, nor India's wealth,
This earnest hope could buy—
As sure by faith that hope I see,
I pearly gates descry.

When earth is drear and sad and dark
What strength this hope can give!
It buoys us up, it cheers us on
While here on earth we live.

Hope on, my heart! 'twill not be long
Till God shall bid thee rise
On joyous wings of hope and love,
Home home beyond the skies.

From Heaven's high ethereal dome
The light streams bright and fair,
And with this hope within our breast
We'll soon cast anchor there.

The Southern Methodist Publishing House and the Cash System.

It has been our policy since 1866, when we were first placed in charge of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, to conduct the business of the House on the cash system. We have, however, at different times so modified our rule as to extend to preachers and other dealers a credit of thirty, sixty, or ninety days on purchases of books, as well as on periodicals and Sunday-school literature.

Our great anxiety to accommodate the views and wishes of our brethren who were co-operating with us in recovering the fortunes of the Publishing House, more than any thing else, induced us to depart from the safer method which we had adopted in entering upon our labors. To many of the preachers, especially, the cash system, strictly adhered to, seemed to hinder them in the circulation of our books, and, in some instances, to prevent their dealing in them altogether. Having passed through almost every stage in the life of a Methodist traveling preacher, and familiar by experience with the difficulties that confront him on a mountain-mission or a poor circuit, our inclination led us to extend to brethren every facility with in our power to enable them to circulate our Church-literature. In too many instances persons indebted to us have been unable, because of disappointment, to meet their liabilities at the time agreed upon, and frequently accounts that were to be settled in ninety days have remained unsettled for several years.

With all the vigilance and care that we have been able to exercise, there is now an outstanding indebtedness due the Publishing House to the amount of nearly ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS. There is not another Publishing House on this continent, unless it be the Book Concern under the supervision of the M. E. Church, at New York and Cincinnati, so far as we are advised, that has such an outstanding debt, or that has extended the same credit to its patrons that we have.—The business of all other houses is done on the cash system, or monthly settlements.

It is easy to conceive the embarrassment in which such an exhibit places us. The money now due us, if collected, would not only relieve us from all pressing embarrassments, but would enable us at once to cheapen every book in our Catalogue. Our capital consists very largely in real estate, stereotype plates, and presses—all of which, however important to us in the prosecution of our work as a Church, may become—indeed are—comparatively useless, without money to aid us in the accomplishment of the work the Church expects us to perform.

Almost everything entering into our business requires cash. Money due us, in hands however responsible, unpaid, will not meet the demand.—Printers, press men, book-binders, clerks, and book keepers—amounting to about one hundred persons—must be paid weekly, otherwise their families cannot live. We must be prompt, else they will work for persons who will pay them.

Besides this, we must pay cash for the paper on which we print our books, and periodicals, and Sunday-school literature; also for ink, an occasional new font of type, and for stereotype metal—requiring in the aggregate between four and five thousand dollars, which we are compelled to have every week.

We have made the above statements that the Church may see that we are not influenced by a captious spirit when we say that the business of the Publishing House cannot be conducted upon a system of credit. Indeed, on the credit system, the larger amount of business we do the greater will be our embarrassment, and the sooner will misfortune overtake us.

In returning to the cash system, strictly, we feel confident that we will be sustained by every one who loves the Church, and desires the success of the Publishing House, both in the ministry and laity. We think, too, it will be better for the preacher who purchases from us, as well as for the House. Persons who purchase books, or subscribe for our periodicals, will the more readily pay him promptly when they know that he has paid the cash for them.

It has been suggested to us that the cash system will greatly diminish the sale of our publications, as well as lessen the circulation of the Christian Advocate and our Sunday-school papers. There is certainly no good reason why this should be so. The terms of subscription both for the Advocate and the Sunday-school papers have always been cash in advance. We have in a few instances departed from this rule, especially in reference to Sunday-school papers, and unpaid accounts yet on our books demonstrate the impropriety of this course, and teach us a lesson we will do well to observe.

In some instances there may be preachers who may find it inconvenient to make their first purchase of books. There is scarcely a charge, however, where there may not be found a steward, or some other brother in the laity, who will cheerfully advance to his preacher a loan of fifty or one hundred dollars with which to order books that he may supply the people, especially as he knows that the amount will be returned to him in a short time. In selling books we had a large experience while traveling, on missions, circuits, and Districts. Previous to the divisions of the Church we made our purchases from the Book Concern in Cincinnati, and by the improper indulgence of the Agents incurred a debt which we found ourselves unable to meet at maturity, as we had expected to do. Reluctant to ask further credit until we had paid what we owed, and yet desirous to supply the people we served the following year with Methodist literature, we took with us catalogues to all our appointments, and in all our pastoral visitations, and requested the people to subscribe for what books they wanted, and to pay us for them in advance, that we might be able to send the cash with our order. Before we made the round on our circuit we had enough books sold and paid for to make a handsome order. This was our most successful year in selling books. Our profits furnished us a good capital for future operations.—With very little effort a preacher may engage to his people a large box of books, and receive payment for them before he sends us his order. Will you send for catalogues, and give this method a trial?

The Publishing House belongs to the Church. It is the property of the preachers and people of the M. E. Church, South, and its cause is their cause, and its success is their success—and we believe they will sustain it.

Wesley's Method.

Nearly every paper we take up has something about preaching. We take this as a good sign. The preaching of God's word is his select means of enlightening and saving men. Other means are aids, this is the chief. No man was more successful as a preacher than John Wesley, and few, if any, men, have done it better and more successfully; therefore he should be heard with attention on such a theme. Hear Mr. Wesley's own beautiful statement of his position:

"I am a creature of a day, passing through life as an arrow through the air. I am a spirit come from God and returning to God. Just hovering over the great gulf; till a few moments hence I am no more seen! I drop in to an unchangeable eternity! I want to know one thing, the way to heaven; how to land safe on that happy shore. God himself has condescended to teach the way; for this very end he came from heaven. He has written it down in a book. Oh, give me that book! At any price give me the Book of God. I have it. Here is knowledge enough for me. Let me be a man of one book. Here then, I am, far from the busy ways of men. I sit down alone; only God is here! In his presence I open, I read his book; for this end to find my way to heaven.—Is there a doubt concerning the meaning of what I read? Does anything appear dark and intricate? I lift up my heart to the Father of Lights. . . . I then search after and consider parallel passages of Scripture. . . . I meditate thereon with all the attention and earnestness of which my mind is capable. If any doubt still remains, I consult those who are more experienced in the things of God, and then the writing whereby being dead they yet speak. And what I thus learn, that I teach."

TRUTH is like a torch; the more you shake it the more it shines.

Maffitt as a Pulpit Orator.

BY THE REV. J. B. WAKELEY, D. D.

I heard Mr. Maffitt preach in my boyhood, in my youth and in my manhood. I do not assume to be any great judge of eloquence, but I have heard some of the most eloquent preachers in America, as well as a number from the Old World, but I never heard one who could excel John Newland Maffitt in his palmiest days for sweetness of voice, for purity of diction, for elegance of style, for beauty of imagery, for perfect self-command, for sweetness of manner, for melting pathos, for persuasive eloquence. It may be thought I am wild and extravagant, and that I have greatly exaggerated his powers as a pulpit orator; but no, I have not done him justice. It would require another Maffitt to do it. Permit me to say I am not alone in my high estimation of him, and therefore I introduce a few witnesses whose testimony will have great weight.

The first is the gifted historian of American Methodism, Abel Stevens LL. D., who knew John Newland Maffitt right well. In his volume, Compendious History of American Methodism, his 35th chapter has the title, "Representative Ministerial Character—Summerfield, Maffitt, Cookman, Olin." After a splendid eulogium upon Summerfield as a preacher and a man, he thus describes the orator of Erin:

"John N. Maffitt, an Irishman, joined the itinerancy in 1822, and for thirty years was one of the most extraordinary and anomalous pulpit orators of the nation. As an elocutionist he may be said to have been perfect, in voice and gesture unrivalled. To the last his arrival in any city produced a general sensation, and no preacher, not even Summerfield or Bascom, attracted larger multitudes. His style was Ossianic, too extravagant to be read, but sustained by his elocution, seemed natural, and was even fascinating in the desk, and his discourses were always wonderfully effective. He was eccentric, simple and indiscreet as a child, 'a paradox,' says one of his brethren, 'of goodness, greatness and weakness.' The Spartan-like severity of the elder ministry was perplexed with wonder and doubt before his singularities; but these good men could not question his usefulness. They reluctantly tolerated his Hibernian peculiarities, and received through his labors thousands of his converts into their societies. He broke away from the 'regular itinerancy' and for years traveled over most of the nation, streaking its whole sky as a comet. He was elected chaplain to Congress, and produced a powerful impression at the national capital. He abounded in illustrations and anecdotes, and could play on the sympathies of his hearers like an accomplished musician on the string of his instrument. They seemed to yield themselves entirely to his magical power, alternately smiling and weeping, often sobbing aloud and nearly drowning his voice. He drew them in penitent crowds to the altar for prayers and for religious counsels, and was everywhere successful as a 'revivalist.' A cloud came over his eccentric career at last. Checked in the Northern church, he found refuge in the Southern, and died in Mobile, mourned by many, impeached by not a few, but the wonder if not the admiration of all."

Dr. B. F. Tefft, in his Methodism Successful thus speaks of the eloquence of Maffitt:

"Once, in the city of Boston, the writer of this gave out an appointment for Mr. Maffitt, at the close of the morning service, that he would preach that afternoon and evening in one of the largest audience rooms in the capital of Massachusetts. It had not been known a moment before to the public that he was anywhere within the neighborhood of Boston. The afternoon and evening came; a seacoast storm of wind and rain had set in, soon after the morning hour; and before the second service of the day began, it rained in torrents, and continued to rain more and more copiously from that time through the night. The tempest was so black with cloud and fog that the gas-lights had to be lit in the afternoon to enable the audience to find their seats. There was not another man in Boston, nor in Massachusetts, excepting only Daniel Webster, who could have called out a hundred gentlemen under circumstances so utterly unpropitious. Mr. Maffitt's audiences, however, both afternoon and evening, made up of about the usual proportion of the sexes, were as brilliant as can be imagined. The place was the old Federal street theatre; it was packed from pit to dome with the elite of Boston; not only were all the seats, but the aisles and corners were densely crowded, hundreds of ladies being obliged to stand, below and in all the four galleries, because the whole living mass was so wedged in that no gentleman could move out of his place to make a vacancy; the more venturesome, crowded more and more by those pushing forward from the doors, clung to the front railings of the galleries, where they seemed to hang like bees when swarming; and when the preachers arose to read the first hymn, and the full head of gas was poured on the scene, it was both curious and exhilarating to behold what multitudes of human beings, gathered by so brief a notice, could be so crammed together. The next morning I was told by the sexton, that, though all the ladies and most of the gentlemen were compelled to come in carriages, nearly as many arrived and rode away, after the house was full, as had been admitted. This, however, was the universal experience of Mr. Maffitt; for it was at this time, only a few days before this visit to Boston, that the street in New York, on which stood the church in which he had been advertised to preach, had been so blocked by the masses of carriages and foot passengers striving to make their way to the spot that it had to be cleared by the help of the municipal authorities."—*N. Ruskin on Sermons.

THERE are two ways of regarding a sermon—either as human composition, or a divine message. If we look upon it entirely as the first, and require our clergymen to finish it with the utmost care and learning for our better delight, whether of ear or intellect, we shall be necessarily led to expect much formality and stateliness in its delivery and think that all is not well if the pulpit have not a golden fringe around it, and a goodly cushion in front of it; but we shall at the same time consider the treatise thus prepared as something to which it is our duty to listen without restlessness for half an hour or three quarters, but which, when that duty has been decorously performed, we may dismiss from our minds in happy confidence of being provided with another when next it shall be necessary. But if once we begin to regard the preacher, whatever his faults, as a man sent with a message to us, which it is a matter of life or death whether we hear or refuse; if we look upon him as set in charge over many spirits in danger of ruin, and having allowed to him but an hour or two in the seven days to speak to them; if we make some endeavor to conceive how precious those hours ought to be to him,—a small advantage on the side of God, after his flock have been exposed for six days together to the world's temptations, and he has been forced to watch the thorn and the thistle springing up in their hearts, and to see what wheat had scattered there, snatched from the way-side by this wild bird and the other; and at last, when breathless and weary with the week's labor, they give him this interval of imperfect and languid hearing, he has but thirty minutes to get at the separate hearts of a thousand men to convince them of all their weakness, shame them for all their sins, warn them of all their dangers, to try by this way and that to stir the hard fastenings of those doors where the Master himself has stood and knocked, yet none opened,—thirty minutes to raise the dead in,—let us but once understand and feel this, and we shall look with changed eyes upon that frippery of gay furniture about the place from which the message of judgment must be delivered, which either breathes upon the dry bones that they may live, or, if ineffectual, remains recorded in condemnation, perhaps against the utterer and listener alike, but assuredly against one of them.

Conception Of God.

To those who ask, How shall we conceive of God? we would say: 1. Do not try to define him either in thoughts or words. As Joubert says, "Do not bring into the domain of reasoning that which belongs to our innermost feeling. It is not hard to know God, provided one will not force himself to define him." Beware how you interpret even Biblical figures and statements with a dogmatic literalness.

2. Do not let your mind dwell too much on this or that favorite view of God. To protect yourselves, even the noblest and best part of yourselves, and call it God, is preposterous. Emerson observes that the God of the cannibal will be a cannibal, and the God of the crusader a crusader. So the God of the philosopher will be a "dry, bloodless, empty shape," and the God of many a loving, unreasoning soul." It is the vice of religion as well as theology that men content themselves with such views of God as are most congenial to themselves.

3. Cling to Christ as the one Mediator. We need him, not simply as sinners, or because God is holy, but as men, or because we live in a world of sense and cannot easily apprehend him who is a spirit, and even as finite beings with such limited faculties that we cannot ascend to the infinite. When we accept of Christ clearly and fully we no longer cry, "Show us the Father,"—Advance.

The Angels.

Lovely spirits—Angels fair,
Hov'ring 'mid celestial air—
Soothing minds oppressed by care,
Smiling sweetly everywhere,

What were earth without a ray,
From the sun of endless day?
Glimpses from the Far-Away,
Cheer us still to watch and pray.

Angel voices whisper sweet,
Of a land where kindred greet;
Part we here—Oh! where to meet?
Angels whisper—"Golden street."

Throne of grace, approaching bold,
Melting hearts oh! Jesus mold,
Dross consume—and shape the gold,
Spotless garments 'round us fold.

Linger near oh! spirits kind,
Bright plumed messengers divine;
Breathe of Jesus 'till each mind,
Solace sweet in Jesus find.

PATTIE JULIA.

The only Remedy for Sin.

Men may honestly differ in their interpretations of certain passages in the Bible, and they may, as honestly, construct differing creeds, from which springs denominationalism, which, in itself, is not a calamity, but a blessing to the church universal. It is indeed true, that even Christians cannot read the Bible alike, but it is as true, that the Christian Church thus divided into different denominations is stronger, spiritually, and cultivates a wider territory to the glory of the name of Immanuel than if the church were one compact whole, like an army without regiments. Denominations become an evil only, when we build the separation walls so high that they shut out all mutual and universal fellowship among believers, but if we keep the walls low, so that we can grasp hands above them and can even pass over them, then they are a blessing instead of a curse. But let us never lose sight of the one grand mission of the Christian Church, is the overthrow of evil, and the enthronement of divine love in all hearts. The church is not a mutual admiration society, nor a pleasant circle of believers for prayer and praise, but the church is an army of the living God, an army on the battle-field, an army face to face with the enemy, an army organized to fight and conquer, until Satan shall be vanquished and Christ is Lord indeed. The great difficulty to-day is, that the Christian Church loves encampment better than aggressive warfare, and a very large prorportion of its members are at ease in Zion, satisfied with their own hopes of salvation and feeling no responsibility for salvation of others. Our Lord commanded His disciples "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on High," and many Christians obey the injunction to "TARRY," caring not for any outpouring of the Spirit, which would compel them to go forth to save the lost, at the sacrifice of selfish purposes.

The amount of selfishness in the Church of Christ is simply TERRIBLE. Instead of praying, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" many practically pray, "Lord, give me nothing to do, for my one grand life work is to be rich in this world's goods, satisfied if my little soul shall at last be saved from Hell."

But what can the Church do to destroy the gigantic power of sin, which seems omnipresent in this day of social and political corruption? What remedy has the Christian church which has escaped the notice of great and philanthropic souls in ages past. All true, earnest hearts have been burdened with this stern problem of sin and its cure, but all human efforts to solve the problem and eradicate evil have failed. Education has failed. General culture of civilization has failed. Law has failed. Religious forms and creeds have failed. For knowledge and sin may and do go hand in hand. And Satan still comes into the sanctuary with the sons of God to worship. But is there no power which can successfully wrestle with this many-headed monster, Sin? I recall this passage in the writings of Goethe. "If certain phenomena of nature, looked at from the moral standing-point, force us to assume the existence of a primitive evil, so on the other hand, many phenomena force us to assume a primitive good. The spring of goodness, when flowing into life, we name Piety, as the ancients did, who regarded it as the basis of all virtue. It is the force which counterbalances egoism, and if, BY A MIRACLE, it could, for a moment suddenly be active in all men, the earth would at once, be free from evil." "And if by a miracle." Ah! that is it. But how shall this miracle be accomplished? This force, which Goethe calls "Piety" is NOT active in all men, but evil IS active, and men love evil more than goodness, and hence sin has possession of the stronghold, and bids defiance to all efforts for its overthrow. But Goethe was right in his theory of the only remedy while at the same time, he failed to recognize in the Christian faith, the province of this miracle in the person and mission of Jesus Christ.

For this Christ came into the world to save sinners, to save them not only from the condemnation of the law, but from the power of sin, and this He does by changing the heart by His Holy Spirit, which is the most stupendous miracle of grace. "I will put within you a new heart, and renew a right spirit within you." This is His promise, and this promise God has gloriously fulfilled in the heart of every sinner who has looked for the Great Physician for this sovereign remedy.

Society, then, can be purified and all evil removed from this beautiful earth but only as the individual heart is regenerated, and the love of sin gives place to a supreme love of God, from which love spring new desires and holy purposes. Just so far, then as Christians, manifesting in their live the power of this new creation within, go forth to save others, to lead other sinrunned hearts to this miracle-working Saviour, will the millennium be hastened on. Building church edifices will not do it, sectarian zeal will not do it, only individual Christian labor,—only when the Church is a bee-hive of earnest disciples, consecrated to the one sublime mission of regenerating the world by the regeneration of individual souls. "Awake! awake! put on thy strength, O Zion!" The pierced hand holds the remedy for sin, and we who love Him because He first loved us, may give to others this remedy, and when all Christians are thus consecrated, loving others more than self, then all the powers of hell will not be able to stand against the hosts of Immanuel, and "all shall know the Lord, from the least even unto the greatest."

Christian friend, the question is not one of denominationalism, but of your duty and privilege in this conquest of souls to the sceptre of Divine Love. While some are trying to close the liquor saloon with the hand of the law, let us seek the conversion of the drunkard, and then the saloon will close for want of customers. While governments are erecting prisons and jails, and increasing their police force, let us, by labor, faith and prayer, change criminals into disciples of Jesus, and gather all hearts within the fortress of God's love and truth, and the prisons will be empty, and our police will have nothing to do. It can be done, for God Almighty leads the host, and in Him love and omnipotence are united for the salvation of a lost world.—By Abbott E. Kittredge, in the Interior.

State and Character of Infants.

We have so often set forth the Methodist, Catholic, Scripture doctrine of the state and character of infants, that our readers will hardly wish for us to discuss it again at large, as a correspondent requests us to do.—Matt. xviii. 14, "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish," has no relation to the subject, as that passage refers to the childlike character of disciples—"these little ones which believe in me," verse 6. "Of such is the kingdom of God," Mark x. 14, means, to such belongs the kingdom of God—the gospel dispensation, —the Church—that is, children are entitled to membership in the Church. The Bible says not one word about their being born regenerated, or holy—or that they are regenerated by baptism, except in a ceremonial sense. Our Church teaches that we are born in sin—that we are naturally depraved that we must be born of water and Spirit—that is, baptized, to admit us into the kingdom of God, visibly considered, and inwardly renewed by the Holy Ghost, to admit us into the kingdom of God, spiritually considered. This the Bible teaches, and it goes no further—nor do we. How the depravity of our nature is removed from those who die in infancy, we can not tell—we know it is removed by the sanctifying Spirit, who is the source of all the holiness in the universe.—How it is antagonized by the Holy Spirit in the case of those who arrive at years of discretion, and who can and do voluntarily comply with the conditions of salvation, repentance, faith, and obedience, and who thus realize justification, regeneration, and sanctification, we cannot tell. But surely there is no more mystery in that than there is in the justification, regeneration, and sanctification, of one who has wandered from his Father's house, and who comes back with an humble, lowly, contrite, penitent, believing, and obedient heart. We baptize children, not because they are holy, but rather, as Augustin says, because they are born in sin, and their baptism symbolizes "the renewing of the Holy Ghost," of which they stand in need. No one can baptize infants according to our Ritual, and be a Pelagian. Read the first paragraph in the Baptismal Office. See also Watson's Institutes, page 392—the passage beginning, "As to infants, they are not indeed born justified and regenerated; so that to say that original sin is taken away as to infants, by Christ, is not the correct view of the case," etc Also pp. 712—721, of our edition.—Nashville Advocate.

Temperance People, Awake!

A circular has been issued by liquor dealers in this city (New York,) says the Christian Intelligencer, urging that all "persons engaged in the sale and manufacture of liquors, wine and beer in every city, village and town of the State" of New York, "should form themselves into liquor dealers' protective unions, preparatory to holding a State convention, at which delegates from the different organizations can convene and adopt such plans and measures as will give them not only protection, but a representation of a very large and heavily-taxed business." Immediate organization is called for in order that their "grievances may be properly placed before the people, the majority of whom are always willing to discriminate in favor of justice and equality before the law." And the precise object of this State convention is that liquor makers and dealers "may have a voice in framing a law, to be submitted to the next Legislature, which will restore" to them their "invaded rights."

The friends of temperance cannot too speedily combine against this mischievous combination of the liquor traffickers of all kinds to control the next State election with their money and political power. The "liquor dealers, brewers, distillers, wine and spirit traders and maltsters, of the State of New York," to whom this circular is addressed, have felt the pressure of wholesome laws, and especially those which restrict their Sunday trade. And now they are girding themselves to resist these "attacks" of "an ever-zealous class fanatics, blinded as to the proper manner to secure what they call social reform." Their plan contemplates the imperative necessity of meeting these "blinded fanatics" "at every point where they make war upon" their "interests."

We have given much of the language of this circular, so that all good citizens, and especially the active friends of temperance and of the Sabbath, may know what to expect from these formidable foes of existing laws which protect the community, and of those other public movements by which the traffic has been repressed for the time. Those men are forming a combination for a desperate fight. It will probably extend to every other State in the Union where they are not free to do as they please. Their resistance is not surprising, but its magnitude and strength should not be underrated for a moment. Prompt and decisive measures alone can avail against their compact combination.

Enlightened public opinion, free and full discussion before the people in all proper forms, and a thoroughly Christian basis of principle and organization are necessary to keep what has been secured, and to follow up the victories already gained. Friends of religion, and of moral and social reform, should be warned in time, and should act vigorously. A brave resistance is half the battle. Aggressive movements wisely arranged, and then carried out "in the strength of the Lord," will insure the triumph.

Civil Rights and Uncivil Wrongs.

The Civil Rights Bill, now before Congress, is as impolitic as it is unjust and unwarranted. Further, if it be not hypercriticism to say that the bill has no constitutional warrant, it is open to that objection as well. It is impolitic, because it is not demanded by any principle of right or expediency; it is unjust, because it violates the inherent right of every State to regulate its own internal affairs, and it is unconstitutional, in that it seeks to establish a monopoly of rights and privileges in favor of color. The Fourteenth Amendment, under which alone authority for the bill is claimed, simply defines what citizenship shall be, and declares that "no State shall "make or enforce any law which shall abridge the "privileges or immunities of citizens of the United "States." Yet here is a bill which says to each State: "You must send white and black to the same school." It is not easy to see that such a measure is as arbitrary as it is unjust? By what right does Congress interfere with the schools of the States organized by the State and supported by the State? Yet this is not only contemplated in the bill, but an amendment, allowing each State to provide separate schools for black and white, was voted down. And what good is sought to be accomplished? Does Congress really think to force whites and blacks into the same school? and if it succeed, will it benefit the black, will it change his color or better his condition? On the contrary, the result of this foolish legislation will be to overthrow the entire school syetem of the South; it will retard the education of the negro; it will arouse antipathies, and it will weaken public confidence in our National Legislature—a confidence which is already no stronger than it should be. The truth is, our State Governments, North South, East, and West, are sufficiently well established to attend to their own legislation. They not only do not ask for help from Congress, but we believe they are every way better qualified to know what they want, and provide what they want, than Congress is able to provide for them. The future of the African in this country depends now very largely upon himself. All his rights are, under the law, secured to him. His opportunities for advancement are, so far as the law can make them, equal with those of the whites. Now let special legislation in his behalf cease. Let Congress give us a return to specie payments, reduce our taxes, weed out its supernumeraries, consolidate superfluous "bureaus," and reduce the expenses of Government. So long as Congress leaves these all important matters unsettled, it has no time to waste over an impracticable and bungling Civil Rights Bill.—Talmage in Christian at Work.

God's Work in us.

The most minute events of life, nay, every need and every obstacle in our paths, are channels of the grace, goodness and power of God, and those who wait on him in prayer and watchfulness shall see it is no vain thing to rest on him. The tide of our sorrows and sins have often arisen from a trivial spring; and the same is true of our earthly joys. Our daily trials and hourly blessings gather something of the radiance of the bow in the clouds in the day of rain, as we receive them from the pierced hands of him whose death and intercession have made all things ours.—Anna Shipton's "Waiting Hours."

EVERY MAN A MISSIONARY.—Every man is a missionary now and forever, for good or for evil, whether he intends or designs it or not. He may be a blot, radiating his dark influence outward to the very circumference of society; or he may be a blessing, spreading benediction over the length and breadth of the world; but a blank he cannot be. There are no moral blanks; there are no neutral characters. We are either the sower that sows and corrupts, or the light that splendidly illuminates, and the salt that silently operates; but, being dead or alive, every man speaks.—Dr. Chalmer's.

THE ARTS.

IT is stated that the medal of the Institute of British Architects, declined by Mr. Ruskin, is to be offered to Mr. G. E. Street.

A young boy, thirteen years old, has published, in London, twenty pieces for the piano, entitled "Childish Fancies."

Professor Anton Bachmaier has presented to the British Museum a cast of the upper part of a statue, supposed to be that of Sappho, from Cyprus.

A society has been formed in London, called "The Musical Association for the Investigation and Discussion of Subjects Connected with the Art and Science of Music.' The London Graphic says: "What may be the precise views of the Society we are unable at present to make out, but it is consoling to learn that concert giving is not one of them."

The London Athenæum, in reviewing a work, entitled "The Chronological Sequence of the Coins of Syracuse," by Mr. B. W. Head, says: "Syracuse alone presents us with a perfect epitome of Greek art; indeed, we have before us all but its incunabula, together with each successive stage of its development, till all individual expression is obliterated by Roman centralization. Two or three well selected specimens of each period of Syracusan art, as exhibited on its coins, would give any student a clear insight into the progress of Greek art from its birth to its death. . . . How completely the coinage of Syracuse forms a cyclopaedia of Greek art, may be seen by the barest reference to Mr. Head's work, in which the coins of that city are arranged under no less than fifteen distinct heads, from the time of the Geomoroi or Gamoroi (the land-apportioned), who had resisted Hippocrates of Gela toward the close of the sixth century B. C., down to the Roman conquest, about B. C. 212. In this catalogue all Greek numismatic art is represented, excepting the Ionian coinage attributed dubiously to Croesus, and certainly as old, if not older than he. Of these fifteen periods, we may, perhaps, indicate those of the tyrants Gelon and Hieron, among the earlier ones, and those of Hieron the Second and Queen Philistis, among the later, as the most interesting. At the same time, it is but right to say; that the brightest efforts of Greek art unquestionably coincide with the periods when the people were free, during the democratic government that intervened between B. C. 466 and B. C. 406. This period is memorable as that of the highest efforts of sculpture at Athens, under Pericles and Phidias: and Syracuse, we may well believe, although Dorian in origin and feeling, appreciated, perhaps more than any other city, the greatness of the works archieved by her Athenian rivals.'

Support of the Ministry.

The Conference year is drawing to a close and the question arises, what are the congregations doing toward the discharge of the obligation they are under to the support of the ministry? Are the ministers throughout our Conference relieved of anxiety as to the temporal well-being of their families? or oppressed with a sense of want and fear for the future? Are their purses and larders empty, or are they supplied with what will cheer and comfort them and make their immediate future pleasant to contemplate? Are their children enjoying the benefits of schools, or kept at home because of the inability of their parents to meet the tuition charges? Is their personal attire of that neatness and quality which the dignity of their office demands? These are plain, practical, matter-of-fact considerations, but such as to affect greatly the interests and efficiency of the ministry. When men quit the fields of secular employment and engage in the divine work of preaching the gospel and teaching morality by example and precept, they do not lay aside their character as mortals and are as much affected by the wants of the body, as other men are. They must eat and be clothed, pay debts and give their children education, refinement and culture, no less than those who follow the plow, push the saw, wield the yard stick or work for fees at law and medicine. Frost bites them as fiercely and hunger pinches them as severely as they do other people, and they must be provided against.

It is not necessary in this day of gospel enlightenment and after so much has been said and written upon the subject, to argue the duty of supporting the ministry comfortably and well. A recent sermon by Rev. Dr. Burkhead, printed at this office, and, we hope, widely circulated, enforces in no uncertain way the responsibility of the church in this regard, and explains clearly the reasons upon which it is founded. All who reflect upon the matter, will readily grant that a class of men who forego other and more profitable and less laborious means of livelihood and devote themselves to a work whose influence is to suppress evil and elevate men and communities, should be supported in that work by those who are its beneficiaries. That 'they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel' is too plain for argument. But people often forget their duty and neglect its performance, and we only wish now to direct their attention to it. They fail frequently to give that support which is due from them to the ministry. But it is oftener through forgetfulness, (criminal, we admit it is) than from a wilful refusal to do their duty. We trust, therefore, that they will bethink themselves of the demands which the gospel rightly makes upon them for the maintenance of its heralds, and that they will meet those requirements faithfully, which means promptly.

Our ministers often suffer more keenly for the want of a prompt and liberal support, than they are willing to signify by word or act. They prefer to endure necessity in silence than to fill the ears of their congregations with murmurings and complaints. It behooves their charges, therefore, to anticipate their wants—at least, to meet them when they arise.

We appeal to the churches—to official Boards and individual members, in behalf of the toiling and self-sacrificing standard-bearers of the gospel, to see to it that the assessments (which are always small enough, and often too meagre) are paid to the uttermost farthing before the Conference year is ended.

Now is the time to make the effort, if it has not been made before now, when the crops are being marketed and money is circulating. Do not postpone it until the last month or week, for if made in indecent haste, it will be only half successful. Your pastor cannot afford to wait. The time for fulfilling promises he has made is ripening—bills are being presented with annoying frequency,—and the probable, perhaps certain change in his field of labor is opening up new expenses which must be met. Do not allow your minister to go away from the charge burdened with debt, wounded in conscience, sore at heart, and with unpleasant impressions of your want of liberality and faithfulness to duty.

The revival at Edenton St. Church is progressing with increased interest. The pastor, Rev. A. W. Mangum, was assisted two days the past week by Rev. W. H. Bobbitt, Presiding Elder of the District. It is probable that services will be continued during the present week.

Honor to Whom Honor is Due.

Quite a number of our lady friends are showing commendable zeal in soliciting subscriptions for the Advocate. We have recently received several clubs voluntarily made up by the ladies of our church, and we hear of others who are actively canvassing for the paper. They are ever true and ready to help in a good cause. Indeed they are, in a great measure, the strength of the church. From the time they lovingly ministered to the Savior, in life and at death—met with the Apostles for prayer, prior to the pentecostal baptism, and were the co-laborers and helpers of Paul in his missionary labors, even down to the present day they have been among the foremost in every good work. They have so lived and worshiped—have so exemplified the virtues of the wife and mother—have so illustrated the beauty of holiness have so trained for the church its noblest men, that they have compelled the admiration of the worldling and the skeptic. Many a man has found that the last link which still bound his unbelieving mind to some intellectual faith in Christianity was, the remembrance of his mother's piety, or the daily vision of the purity of his wife The eulogy of Libanius, pronounced upon the Christian women of the Primitive Churches, has lost none of its meaning in this nineteenth century. In chasteness of morals, general intelligence, social culture, self-denying benevolence, and unaffected piety, our Christian women are the glory of the age. God bless the women of the church!

The Louisiana Trouble.

In our news columns will be found an account of the disturbances in Louisiana, to which the oppressed citizens of that misruled State have been driven. On Saturday morning the telegrams (the latest received to the time of our going to press with the Advocate) stated that the McEnery party had surrendered the State offices to the Federal forces, who had been commanded to interfere. What the final result will be, we do not know. Troops have been ordered thither and the outraged and indignant citizens may, in their desperation, resist the Federal interference, although the offices have been vacated by their leaders.

The history of the troubles is, in a few words, as follows: In 1872 an election was held for Govenor: Kellogg being the candidate of the Radical wing of the Republican party, and McEnery of the more liberal and decent Republicans, with whom the Democrats united.

The friends of Kellogg manipulated the returns of the election and declared Kellogg elected by 5000 majority. The returns were alleged by the McEnery party to have been fraudulent, and the matter was contested before the U. S. Senate which refused to recognise Kellogg as duly elected. But as he was in peaceable though wrongful possession of the office, President Grant refused to interfere, on the ground that he had no right to do so. The misrule of Kellogg and his subordinates, their corrupt principles and practices and the disorder that grew out of them, were borne in silence by the outraged Louisianians who hoped, in the election this Fall to remedy their grievances, at the ballot box.—But this hope was frustrated by the partisan and illegal appointments of inspectors of elections. On last Monday resort was had to the only mode that presented itself of redressing their wrongs, and placing in the offices those who were rightfully entitled to them.

While we sympathise strongly with the oppressed people of Louisiana, we regret that they made the unfortunate step of revolution. A strong feeling of sympathy for the misruled South, was springing up in the North, and this movement will tend to check and repress it. Plausibility will be given to the arguments and assertions of Northern politicians that the fire of rebellion against the Union is still burning among the Southern people and that they are anxious to renew the war of secession. The South has been too much misrepresented and has suffered in consequence to a deplorable extent, and she cannot afford to show even "trifles light as air," which to the prejudiced mind of the North, will be "confirmation strong" of a feeling of rebellion among her people.

We beg our patrons who see pencil cross (X) mark on the margin of their paper to renew promptly. If you have not the money at hand, have your subscription renewed and pay the money to your preacher between this and the meeting of our Conference. At all events do not let the paper be discontinued. You cannot afford to do without it. It is the organ of our Conference, and the Church in North Carolina is pledged to its support, by resolution of Conference.—Subscription only $2 a year.

DEATH OF A MINISTER'S WIFE.—After our issue of the 16th, a letter was received from our beloved brother, Rev. W. M. Robey, President of Davenport Female College, bringing the sad news of the death of his wife. She passed away on the evening of the 10th at half past six o'clock. For more than a year she had been in feeble health. During that time she had two strokes of paralysis—the third and final stroke was fatal, and she suddenly fell asleep in Jesus. She was an excellent Christian lady, a devoted and loving companion, and an affectionate mother. Our stricken brother will have the prayers of his brethren and his many friends in this sore bereavement.

EDITOR RALEIGH CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE,—A friend has called my attention to two numbers of your paper, in which I am personally named, and called up on for correction, explanation, and defence of, or against, the newspaper reports of what I said and did during my recent visit to the Round Lake and Sea Cliff camp-meetings. Bishop Doggett, who was a sharer with me in the pleasures of that visit, is also made a partaker in the tribulations of these newspaper reports and of these demands for explanation. I have no authority to speak for the Bishop, and he is in no wise responsible for anything herein said. But it would ill become a warm and confiding friendship of nearly half a century, when we have both been thrown into a ditch by news-reporters, if, in getting myself out, I failed to lend him a helping hand. Neither he nor I, however, except in so far as we are held responsible for the misconceptions and misstatements of press reporters, need either explanation or defence in the premises.—I, perhaps he, also, after the denial of the correctness of these reports of our speeches by the editors of the Richmond Christian Advocate, did not suppose it necessary to speak for ourselves. Silence with us was the fruit of conscious innocence and integrity; with others it seems to wear the suspicion of dissimulation and shirking.—The publicity given to these suspicions, through your columns, requires, and I hope will secure me, a hearing before your readers.

Your correspondent "Nim Shi," issue September 2d, after referring to "the utterances of our Southern visitors to Round Lake and Sea Cliff," says: "Bishop Doggett and Dr. Lee were very badly reported. They did not say the things as reported in the papers." "Nim Shi" knew whereof he was speaking. For, in his presence and hearing, I had repudiated and discredited all the reports of our speeches that I had seen. Why, after this "Nim Shi" should say, or think, that we, the Bishop and myself, should "rise to a question of privilege," and enter into personal explanation, and that many are demanding this, is one of the mysteries of press reporting that will have to be referred to a special committee.

In your paper, September 6th, my brother, the Rev. W. S. Black, reports on the statement of "Nim Shi," and enlarges somewhat on his own troubles as to these newspaper reports of the speeches of Bishop Doggett and myself. Quoting "Nim Shi," as to Bishop Doggett and Dr. Lee," he says:

"Now the visit of these honored men of the M. E. Church, South, to Round Lake and Sea Cliff, has been noticed by every paper I read, from the Nashville Advocate down, and this is the first intimation that I have had that they were not correctly reported in the New York Herald and other papers. When we remember the universal sentiment of the late General Conference, and then the things reported as having been said by these brethren at the two places mentioned, some of us have been greatly astonished."

Bro. Black did not read, or forgot, the denial of the Richmond Christian Advocate, resting on personal assurance of one, or both, of the parties named. But "these brethren" did not speak "at the two places mentioned." I was only a witness and a listener at the Fraternal Meeting at Round Lake—the only meeting of the kind, by special designation and object, held during my visit North. If Bro. Black had been there and present, I mistake him very much if he had not agreed with me in saying, "it is good to be here."—It was a meeting, not for the union of Methodist bodies, but for the interchange of fraternal sentiments and feelings, and for the increase of the spirit and practice of fraternity among the various Methodist bodies of the world. There were representatives of five or six of these bodies present at the time, who participated in the meeting. Bishops Kavanaugh and Doggett spoke for the M. E. Church, South. It is enough to say here, and for them, that, as Bro. Black has it, "The universal sentiment of the late General Conference" was neither invaded nor compromised by these eminent and worthy men. Possibly, neither Bro. Black, nor any other receiver of "the things reported as having been said by these brethren," could have better maintained "the universal sentiment of the late General Conference." As, personally, I have nothing to correct or explain, since I did not speak and was not reported, I may say for Bishop Doggett, that it seems to me his history, position, and character, ought to have protected him from the suspicions and censures expressed or implied among the "many demanding" explanation ("Nim Shi"), and "the some of us (who) have been greatly astonished," as Bro. Black puts it. So much for the reports from Round Lake.

At Sea Cliff there was a great deal of fraternity, but no Fraternal Meeting as such. There was a formal public reception of five Southern ministers who were present. It was an ovation. We were welcomed with a hymn, richly sung, composed for the occasion. Prayers were offered; we were singly introduced; each of the five made a brief speech; and the large audience requested the privilege of shaking hands with their Southern brethren, and expressing in that way their great pleasure in having us with them.—It was cheerfully accorded. Ministers and people, of both sexes, young and old, pressed to the greeting, and welcomed us to their confidence and courtesies. It was a grand affair—one to be long and gratefully remember. But of the speeches, or, rather, the newspaper reports—what of them? I speak of and for myself; but it may be taken, generally, as true of the rest as of mine. I repeat here, what I have usually said to my brethren since my return, "that the newspaper report of my speech at Sea Cliff is as like to my speech as a calf is like a cake of cheese." Cheese is a possibility of a calf; the report is a possibility of my speech, hardly that; certainly not more than that. It falls immeasurably below the dignity of "a hop, skip, and jump" resemblance. Let me edify my complaining friends by another press report; and, at the same time illustrate the report of my speech. At Round Lake I preached on Sunday morning on the Personality, Divinity, and Dispensation of the Holy Spirit. The following is a newspaper report of the service and the sermon:

'FORENOON SERVICES,

and the people listened to a sermon by Rev. Dr. Lee, of Richmond, Va., who announced his text from John xvi: 15. The sermon was on the doctrine of the Trinity and offices of the persons of the Godhead as related to mankind. It was an able discourse, and in some parts of it was displayed the true Methodist fire at the children's meeting and witnessed a touching scene.'

Will Bro. Black hold me responsible for such nonsense as that? If not, let him measure the report of my speech by the same rule,

Again. Bro. Black says:

"Every member of the General Conference, who spoke, avowed his opposition to organic union with the M. E. Church, North.

"Yet, in a few weeks quite a number of our prominent men visit the North, some of whom are reported as saying: I have come North to promote the partriotism of the Church. Union is the order of the day. I expect to live to see the day when there will be but one Methodism in this grand country, spreading over the North, South, East, and West.'

I was one of those who spoke at the General Conference. Did Bro Black hear me? Let me remind him of the following sentences, one out of each of three speeches on the general subject:

"Anywhere this side of formal, organic union. I am willing and ready to go for the inauguration of fraternal relations, and the promotion of fraternal feelings.'

"I desire that in fraternity we may be one as the sea; but in organism and independence, distinct as the waves."

Speaking of the inexpediency and impracticability of organic union, I said:

"I do not know how my Methodist religion—my Southern Methodism—could survive the formal organic union of the two bodies.'

I may be mistaken, but it seems to me that the free and public expression of such opinions and feelings might have been allowed by Bro. Black, to live and govern me "a few weeks" after their utterance in Lonisville.

Again: Ten or twelve Southern ministers visited these camp-meetings. A speech is reported as from one. It is in the first person singular: I have come North; I expect to live to see, &c. Now, how can Bro. Black, in such a case, speaking of "quite a number of our prominent men," say "some of whom are reported as saying"? Is it just? especially where, a few lines below, he says, "It is due the M. E. Church, South, and themselves, that Bishop Doggett, Brothers Lee, Poisal, and Sargeant, should formally put themselves right.' He read the report, and publishes it above. Was not the speaker's name prefixed to the speech, or the press report of it? Why, then, some? If one, in his own name, and of his own will, said or is reported as saying it, and if it be held to be wrong and unworthy, why subject the three others named, or the "quite a number of our prominent men' visiting the North,' to the suspicion (I express the sense of Bro, Black, and from his own standpoint,) of betraying the trust reposed in them by the M. E. Church, South?

With respect, especially, to "Bishop Doggett and Dr. Lee,' the reports of their speeches, and their silence concerning these reports, Bro. Black asks "What does this silence mean?'

Speaking for the parties named, I may answer, nothing that either need be afraid or ashamed of. But the question itself was evidently born of doubt and distrust. He suspects the Southern Methodist fidelity of his Bishop and his Bro. Lee. I am sorry for it; and the Bishop, it is likely, will be sorry too, when he comes to the knowledge of the fact. But what could we do, knowing the reports to be erroneous, attaching very little importance to them, and not knowing they were working mischief in the many of "Nim Shi,' and so much astonishment, trouble, and distrust in the bosom of Bro. Black! Silence, in our case, was not dissimulation, nor fear of responsibility, It was the naturalness of conscious integrity and innocence; indifferent to press reports and ignorant of the effect these reports were producing on the opinons and feelings of our brethren, whom we thought knew us too well to impeach our personal honor, or suspect our long and well-tried love and fealty to Southern Methodism.

Bro. Black. says: "I am not opposed to their visit North, or to the good' time they had, but to some things reported to have been said by them What if the things reported were not said? Will our brother "forgive us this wrong?'

In conclusion, I may, without offence, I hope, be allowed a little self-gratulation. Our brother is "for fraternal relations.' So are we. We advocated them in our late General Conference, went North "a few weeks after' to promote them, enjoyed them hugely, remember them gladly, are committed to them, and will labor to promote them in all Christian ways, and with all our might.

I hope my brother is relieved, and, for "a few weeks,' at least, undisturbed by newspaper reports, will feel better.

LEROY M. LEE.

MR. EDITOR: To my mind the proposed change of the rule on 'spirituous liquors,' is a question of great importance; and I have been surprised at the indifference with which it has been regarded by the Methodists of N. C. As no one has spoken out we are not advised as to the probable vote of our Conference, and wish, before the vote is taken, to call the attention of the voters to a few facts:

1. 'Whatsoever is not read (in the Holy Scriptures) nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man.' Articles of Religion No. 5.

2. The law of God does not forbid the making, buying, selling, nor using 'spirituous liquors.'

3. We do not need any 'Higher Law.'

4. Under the new rule you arrest the character of our Lord.

5. Under this rule, it is extremely doubtful if any one of the twelve Apostles could be received into the Methodist church without promising to reform his life.

6. Christians have the right to form societies and bind 'themselves to any practice which is not immoral, but they have no right to exclude men from the church by any law which is not sustained by the Holy Scriptures.

Now if these are facts, and we a church and not a mere society, it is plain that we cannot adopt the new rule without over reaching our authority.

L.

We learn from Rev. B. B. Culbreth, agent of Trinity College, who has just returned from a visit to the Henderson circuit, that the pastor of that charge, Rev. A. A. Boshamer, is being greatly blessed with refreshing seasons of grace on his work. We also learn from Bro. Culbreth that he had much encouragement and gratifying success in raising funds for Trinity College during his visit to this charge. They are a liberal and noble hearted people.

Rev. F. L. Reid, who has for several weeks been enjoying a pleasant vacation in the West, passed through the city last week en route for Louisburg to resume his pastoral labors. He informs us that the volume of sermons of his Father, Dr. N. F. Reid, are now about ready for the printer.

In another column Dr. L. M. Lee has an article setting himself right before the people on the question of reunion

MR. EDITOR: As the Wilmington District Conference shortly convenes I would like to suggest to the Brethren the propriety of some legislation at the said meeting for this district. Almost every district in the bounds of the Conference has its camp meetings and we feel the need of one. If I am not misinformed, a proposition was made from the President of the Wilmington & Weldon R. R. Co., to our then Presiding Elder that if we would establish one, he would have the trains run and give the District a portion of its proceeds. The matter was brought up and a committee appointed who, I believe, had almost concluded to locate it at or near Duplin Road, a small station on the W. & W. R. R., but when the next Conference convened the Brother to whom I believe the chairmanship of the committee was entrusted, had been transferred to another field of labor and the project died a natural death. Right here, Mr. Editor, I would suggest that when a Brother is appointed on a committee and is to report at the next session of the District Conference but is transferred to a new field of labor that his successor on the work at which he was laboring at the time of his appointment shall fill the vacancy. The Elders might by common consent make such an arrangement as is thus proposed. I am digressing however from my subject; what I started to say is that I hope our District Conference will act upon the matter. Summerville a few miles from Wilmington accessible by River and the central Rail Road has also been suggested as a suitable place on account of its shade and abundance of water.

Yous truly,

ROMULUS.

Wilmington District, Sept. 15th '74.

Revival Intelligence.

Rev. C. H. Phillips writes:

"The Lord is with us on Davidson circuit. At the 3rd Quarterly Meeting there were 25 professions. Also a precious revival is in progress in Lexington;—17 have been converted up to this time. Praise the Lord!

Rev. W. D. Lee writes:

"We have had a profitable meeting at Harrison's, Pineville ct. Twelve applications for membership. Bro. Bruton was with us five days and preached with great acceptability"

Rev. R. P. Bibb writes:

BRO. BOBBITT: I have for the last four weeks been engaged in holding protracted meetings on my circuit.—About 25 have been converted, and between 30 and 40 penitents left at our altars. Our camp meeting is now near at hand, and we are anticipating very happy results. I will write you more in detail at another time in regard to the work of religion on my field of labor

---

Rev. J. N. Andrews writes Septamber 14th:

"God has blessed us with a gracious revival on Mt. Olive circuit. I received into the church at Indian Springs forty-eight persons, at Mount Olive thirteen, at Dudley two, and at Falling Creek, where I now am, ten The meeting at this place is going on with great displays of the Holy Spirit's power. God be praised!

I have been assisted by Revs. J. E. Mann, E. A. Yates, F. B. Audrews, Jos. M. Rhodes, and John Moore, a minister of the Society of Friends.—These brethren have preached the gospel with great power, and the Lord has blessed them."

Bro. D. G. Fox, a layman from Marley's Mills, Randolph Co. N. C., writes September the 14th:

BRO. BOBBITT: The Lord is reviving his work on the Deep river circuit. Brother H. F. Wiley has just closed a protracted meeting of eight days continuance at Rehoboth. The church was greatly revived and strengthened. Nineteen souls professed conversion and eleven united with the church others will soon. Nearly the whole community appeared to feel a deep interest in the work.

We have seen the young and the aged side by side inquiring the way to Christ.

Yet there were some who refused to bow at the foot of the Cross. We think that Brother Wiley, though his health is very delicate, has done his whole duty in preaching and pointing sinners to the Lamb of God. We have never had a pastor who was more beloved and zealous in his work. May the Lord give him strength of body to carry on the work throughout the bounds of the circuit? We have not been so greatly blessed because we were worthy, but that God is merciful to all who call upon him faithfully through Jesus Christ.

Rev. J. T. Bagwell writes Sept. 16th:

BRO. ROBBITT: Our 3rd Quarterly Meeting embraced the 1st Sunday in September. The church at which it was held—just completed—was dedicated on Sunday by Bro. Black, our P. E.

The meeting was protracted till Friday night, resulting in 18 accessions to the church.

Bro. Black remained with us till Wednesday morning, and by his warm, earnest, and very efficient preaching, drew all hearts to him.

The new church dedicated cost about $2000.

Rev. T. Page Ricaud says:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: We are in the midst of a glorious revival at this place, and to give you some idea of its magnitude and extent, I would state, that on last Friday night, there were 30 mourners, and 14 conversions!

The work is going on, with increasing interest, and we are having the efficient labors of our indefatigable and faithful brother Wood, P. E.

The people of God are alive; thus far there have been 31 conversions in all. On last night a crowd of mourners at the altar, and the membership at work. To God be all the praise!

Rev. W. H. Watkins writes:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: The Lord has been with us graciously at an other point on my work (Stanly cir.) On last Thursday night I closed a meeting of 12 days at Wesley Chapel, near Gold Hill. The membership was greatly revived, and sixty (60) professed conversion. The membership of the church was nearly doubled, though quite a number of the converts will join the Lutheran church.

Rev. Jno. Williams, of Gold Hill, preached for us twice. Bro. Williams is a man of deep thought, and speaks with great power.

Rev. I. Shaver, was with us several days, preached several times with great power and demonstration of the spirit, administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and baptised 8 children, and 5 adults. We also had the assistance of Bros. D. Plyler and J. D. Redwine; in short, christians of whatever name were earnestly engaged in the noble work. Up to this time there have been between ninety and one hundred who professed conversion on my work. Bless the Lord, who healest all diseases, and redeemest life from destruction. Forget not all his benefits!

Rev. James Mahoney sends us cheering revival intelligence from his circuit. In a letter of 10th September he says:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: We are again blessed with the pleasure of sending our brethren, through our excellent organ, cheering news from our, (Cokesbury Circuit.) The meeting alluded to in my last, at "Wesley's Chapel," conducted by Bros T. W. Smith and Owen Spell, Saturday and Sunday after I left on Friday, resulted in four more accessions to the Church, and in still deepening and widening the religious influence that prevailed the week previous. On Sunday 11 A. M. the 31st ult, I preached at Cokesbury church to a large attentive, and we think appreciative congregation. At 4 P. M. same day I commenced a series of meeting at "Bethany" which continued till the next Saturday. Great grace come upon the Church, God wrought with the ministers and confirmed the word with signs following. The Lord was in his holy temple.

The blessed divine spirit was there, to apply the truth, and to shed abroad a Savior's love in the hearts of all the true followers of Jesus; and to make glad the hearts of penitents. Truly 'twas a great and good meeting. I know we are apt to be lavish in the use of superlatives, but I think I may use one now and say 'twas the very best meeting I ever attended. The church or very nearly the entire membership was baptised with the holy ghost. No trouble to bretiren to preach, and scarcely any labor either, under such circumstances. I do think if I could be in such a revival monthly, I'd last several years longer than probably I will. Had only one minister to assist, and he could only be with me twice, viz., two nights—and yet, tho' I preached every day twice the most of the time for 7 days in all and did altar work, I came out well, in as good health as at first. Twenty-two were added to the church at Bethany. Praise the Lord!

Religious Brevities.

On Friday night at a camp meeting at Jonesville, Tennessee, recently, it was proposed that all who had been at the first camp meeting held there sixty-four years ago, should arise. None arose.—Holston Methodist.

Christendom paid last year for the support of her war system, two thousand millions of dollars. Christians—all who profess and call themselves by that name—paid for missions in the same time, five millions of dollars.

A bequest of $150,000, intended by a citizen of New Bedford, Mass., to establish a charitable institution for colored people in that city, has failed in its purpose from a singular fact The will, written by himself, provided that the bequest should be available on condition that his daughter should leave no "heirs." He probably meant on condition that she should leave no issue. Although the daughter died without children, her mother was her legal "heir,' and the bulk of the property now goes to the latter's relations.

THE REVISION OF THE SCRIPTURE is diligently prosecuted by the joint labors of the British and American Revision Committee. Different companies are at work on the Old Testament and the New. The English revisions are sent to this country for examination; and the American criticisms are returned to be reexamined in England. Seven or ten years will be required to complete the revision of the whole Bible.

State and Local.

— J. P. Gulley is now North buying and shipping a large stock of fall and winter goods. He will have a full stock of Burt's, Miles', and other popular hand made shoes for ladies and gents. Also a fine assortment of ready made clothing, and dry goods of every description. He will introduce himself to our readers in our next in the form of an attractive advertisement. Mr. Redford, chief clerk of Mr. Gulley, is well and favorably known to the people.

— A Camp-meeting will be held for Double Shoals circuit at Union Camp ground, commencing on Wednesday the 30th of September at 3 o'clock P. M. Our Ministerial brethren, Itinerant and Local, are respectfully invited to attend, and give us their ministerial aid.

R. P. BIBB.
Preacher in Charge.

— Our city merchants are busy receiving and opening new goods. Alex. Creech, Esq, we learn has purchased a very large stock. He will make his announcement in due time. Raleigh is beginning to put on the accustomed business-like appearance.

— Mr. Tim Lee has surrendered the keys of the sheriff's office, jail, &c., to Mr. S. M. Dunn under protest. What action will be taken by Mr. Lee is not yet made public. It is generally supposed, however, that he will contest the matter before the court.

— The following are the marshals for the approaching State Fair:

CHIEF MARSHAL.—A. W. Graham, Orange.

ASS'T MARSHALS (STATE AT LARGE)—W. W. Gleun, Yadkin. P. F Pescud, Jr., Wake, R. B. Peebles, Northampton, and Frank Fries, Forsythe.

— Caldwell Hunter, of Mecklenburg, 12 years of age, picked 205 pounds of cotton on Friday last.

— Prof. Kerr delivered a lecture on Coal at the Davenport Female College one night last week. The audience was large.

— The Newbern TIMES learns that President Humphrey, of the Atlantic & North Carolina Railroad, in connection with his other efforts to make the road one of importance, has entered into an arrangement with a New York firm that will result in the running of a new line of steamships from that city to Morehead City and Newbern.

— Over 1,700 entries have been made at the Secretary's office of the North Carolina State Agricultural Society. Some 200 entries were made on Tuesday of last week.

— Dr. John A. Collins, of Enfield, was severely hurt a few days since by being thrown from his buggy, his horse taking fright and running away.

— MANY persons estimate that the tobacco crop of Granville will be less than half of the average yield in point of quantity.—THE TORCH LIGHT.

— The Hillsboro Recorder says: The barn of H. N. Brown took fire on Monday afternoon and was speedily consumed with its contents of hay, oats and clover. Spontaneous combustion was probably the cause.

— At the Orphan Asylum there are now one hundred and thirty-four orphans, sixty-seven of whom are boys and sixty-seven girls.

— Our previous reports of great damage to the growing cotton throughout this section still hold correct. The damage in some sections is estimated to exceed one-third, while in other parts it is not so great. Corn promises an abundant yield. —GOLDSBORO MESSENGER.

The Louisiana Trouble.

We yield much of our space to the following account of the troubles in Louisiana:

NEW ORLEANS Sept. 15—Noon—The entire force of Metropolitan police, the besieged militia with the exception of [illegible] surrendered at nine o'clock this morning to the citizens of Penn and the besieging forces and others have taken possession of the Custom House.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15—Noon—Because of the New Orleans affairs. The meeting to-day in the Clay Statue was called in order to protest against the seizure of arms belonging to private citizens. Resolutions were passed declaring that citizens at or of the United States had the right to keep Kellogg was not elected and that the outrages committed [illegible] were unjustifiable and demanded of him to withdraw [illegible] was appointed to bear these resolutions to Kellogg, but he was not [illegible] Speeches were made by Senator Carpenter, Senator Morton, Speaker Blaine, Governor Dix and Governor [illegible] upon the subject.

During the morning the Fed[illegible] troops were at the Custom House [illegible] been apprehended that they would [illegible] country [illegible] by protecting them [illegible] officials [illegible] their duty by enforcing the [illegible] ment ac in the statute.

The communications between the [illegible] tion and Governor culminated in mutual threats. The meeting [illegible] but the people were advised to go home and arm themselves.

Subsequently D. B. Penn, Lt. Governor on the McEnery ticket, issued a proclamation, assuming gubernatorial functions, and appointing officers to organize the militia. The following order was also issued:

To the Colored people of the State of Louisiana.

In the grand movement now on foot against the usurpations of the United States Government to [illegible] your rights, your property or your life. Pursue your usual avocations and you will not be molested. We warn all disturbers, plunderers and spies that we [illegible] involving your race and ours in common ruin. The rights of the colored, as well as of the white race, we are determined to uphold and defend. P. B. PENN, Lieutenant Governor and Acting Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Louisiana State Militia.

Armed men were soon stationed at strategetic centers of the streets. Five hundred Metropolitans, General Longstreet commanding with cavalry and artillery appeared at the head of Canal street [illegible] A despatch to the Baltimore [illegible] Penn were driven away the citizens captured one piece of artillery, barricaded the streets and destroyed the police and fire telegraph.

There was a sharp fight at the river, at the end of Canal street, in which some fifty persons were killed, including Capt. [illegible] painter and newspaper correspondent, and [illegible] A Toledano, on the citizen's side. Gen. Badger, of the Metropolitans, was badly wounded.

There was a large number of Metropolitans killed. The following were [illegible] were received at the citizen's [illegible] Gen. Chas Kirk, James Cross, [illegible] John McCabe, Wm Betts, Frank Owens and D. Sobell.

The President has issued the following proclamation:

WHEREAS, It has been satisfactorily reported to me that turbulent and disorderly persons have combined together with force and arms, to overthrow the State Government of Louisiana, and to resist the constituted authorities of said State and whereas it is provided in the Constitution of the United States, that the United States shall protect every State in this Union on application of the Legislature, or of the Executive, when the Legislature cannot be convened against domestic violence, and whereas it is provided in the laws of the United States that in cases of insurrection in any State, or of obstruction to the laws thereof, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, on application of the Legislature of such State or of the Executive, when the Legislature cannot be convened, to call forth the militia of any other State or States, or to employ such part of the land and naval forces [illegible] judged necessary for the purpose of suppressing such insurrection, or causing the laws to be duly executed; and whereas, the Legislature of said State is not now in session, and cannot be convened in time to meet the present emergency, and the Executive of said State, under section 4, article 4, of the Constitution of the United States and the laws passed in pursuance thereof, has therefore made application to me for such part of the military force of the United States as may be necessary and adequate to protect said State and the citizens thereof against domestic violence and to enforce the due execution of the laws, and whereas, it is required that whenever it may be necessary in the judgement of the President to use the military force for the purpose aforesaid he shall forthwith, by proclamation, command such insurgents to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective homes within a limited time.

Now, therefore I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby make proclamation and command said turbulent and disorderly persons to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes within five days from the date and hereafter to submit themselves to the laws and call [illegible] thereof to said State; and I invoke the aid and co-operation of all good citizens thereof to uphold the law and preserve the public peace.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done in the city of Washington this the 15th day of September, in the year of our Lord, 1874, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-eighth.

(Signed) U. S. GRANT.

By the President.

HAMILTON FISH,
Secretary of State.

SHREVEPORT, Sept. 15—Noon—The action of the people of New Orleans has been received with the greatest enthusiasm here and throughout the north of Louisiana. A meeting was held in this city last night to take action on the proclamation of acting Gov. Penn. Speeches were made by leading citizens of the parish, advising moderation and assuring the colored people that no violence was contemplated, and that their rights should be most carefully respected. The undersigned were appointed a committee to telegraph to the agent of the Associated Press at New Orleans that the white men [illegible] in North Louisiana is complete. It will be bloodless. The parish officials elected in 1872 will be installed at ten o'clock to-morrow a. m. The militia will be organized at twelve o'clock M. (Signed) W E Eagan, J C Morcure and A H Leonard, Committee.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 15—10 A M—The State House was surrendered at seven o'clock this morning to Lieut Governor Penn's militia, without firing a gun. Gov Pean's militia are about 10,000 strong. All State and city property, police stations, arsenals, police and fire alarm telegraphs are in possession of the League. Kellogg is in the Custom House, under the protection of United States troops. —Jackson Square police station, under command of Gen Longstreet, is reported to have just surrendered.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept 15—Night—The Kellogg government has been overthrown and the entire city is in the hands of its opponents. Lieutenant Governor Penn has taken the reins of government and will at once install in office all those who were voted for on the same ticket with McEnery in 1872. The Courts will at once be organized, and the entire machinery of the government set in motion, not only in this city, but throughout the State.

The following dispatch was sent last evening by Acting Governor Penn to the President of the United States:

NEW ORLEANS, Sept 14, 1874.

U. S. Grant, President of the United States:

Hopeless of all other relief the people of this State have taken up arms to maintain the legal authority of the persons elected by them to the government of the State against the usurper, who has heaped upon them innumerable insults, burdens and wrongs. In so doing they are supported by the great body of intelligent and honest people of the State. They declare their unswerving loyalty and respect for the United States Government and its officers; they war only against usurpers, plunderers and enemies of the peace; and they affirm their entire ability to maintain peace and protect life, liberty and equal rights of all classes of citizens. To prevent any and officials of the United States from [illegible] our special aim to defend against [illegible] assaults, and to treat with the profoundest respect and loyalty. We only ask of you to withhold any aid or protection from our enemies and the enemies of Republican rights, and the peace and liberties of the people

(Signed) D. B. PENN,
Lieut. Gov. and Acting Governor.

J. H. WILLS.

Died, at Mount Olivet, Granville county, on the 15th of August, Mrs. Mary Lowry, daughter of Mr. Wm. Lowry, aged about seventy years. She was born and raised in Rowan county, and was married to George Lowry, about the year 1824. Mary Lowry, daughter of the above Lowry, was born in Rowan county, Sept. 3, 1799. George Lowry, son of Mary Lowry, was born in Rowan county, May 1, 1797. They were converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the M. E. Church, South, and were members of the Church, became members of the Church, and were married in marriage and continued the battle of life together with their children, and were blessed in their union with ten children, ten of whom survived the exposure. Counting up the years of pilgrimage, that she was permitted to live, Counting with the number of years of suffering in the Lord's Israel. Their liberality in the cause of their Master, their labor for it, their ability—having accumulated a competency of dollars in support of the Church and her institutions. Husband and these lines will remember her piety, both at their home and at the camp-meetings at Ward's Chapel, Mount Zion Camp-ground, and Barry camp-ground, but many will call them to mind the fruits of our father's labors at the quarterly meetings, during the all-day meetings (seventy three years) of faithful servant of God, as a faithful exhorter, and in the full extent and result of their labors to the 4th quarterly Conference."

CANCER.

It is well known that the whole medical faculty of all schools of medicine have pronounced Cancers incurable. What sublime effrontery in any person to stand up boldly in the face of all this authority, and claim to be able to cure Cancer. To put forth such a claim in the teeth of the medical profession, in the city of Philadelphia, with its world renowned scientific professors and medical colleges, unless it be substantiated in the most unquestionable manner, a height of impudence rarely attained by mortal man. Dr. Thorne boldly claims that he can cure, has cured, does cure, and will cure Cancer, in spite of disease of a chronic and scrofulous nature; and, further, that in cases EVERY CASE TAKEN BY HIM He does this by a system which no other physician in the world practices. His method of treatment invigorates the body, stirs up the dormant energies of nature, purifies and cleanses the system, and imparts tone and health to all the organs of the body; this method is the most potent ever discovered, and that it is what it is claimed to be will be established to the entire satisfaction of any one who will investigate. Commission Merchant.

Nos. 5 Martin St. and 5 Exchange Place.

Having succeeded to the business of Mr. Lynn Adams, I am prepared to offer to the public the best inducements in my line and respectfully ask a continuance of the trade hitherto given Mr. Adams, promising to give satisfaction in all cases

In addition to my regular line of goods, I have on hand a full stock of the

made in Wake county, and adapted especially to the farmer's use.

I have just returned from the North where I purchased a full line of choice groceries and am now daily adding to my stock. I promis those who may favor me with their custom to give them as good bargains as they can get elsewhere.

A. H. TEMPLE,

I most respectfully ask my former patrons and friends to patronize Mr. Temple my successor, who will, I am assured, give satisfaction to all.

I will still keep my office, as Cotton Factor, in the same building.

TO THE Wholesale Trade.

—:o:—

Judging the future by the past, we enter with confidence upon this our new enterprise, of separating our Wholesale from our Retail Trade, by having a separate and distinct House for each; and in doing so we flatter ourselves that it will not only meet the approval of our numerous customers, but that as "Exclusive Wholesale House" will bring us a large influx of new trade, and of a character not heretofore enjoyed.

It must be obvious to every buyer that a strictly "Wholesale House," arranged and adapted for that Trade only, with a corps of experienced Wholesale Salesmen, with a Stock carefully selected for that Trade only, and moreover, the avoidance of coming in contact with retail buyers. Such a house, we assert, must and will commend itself to the trade.

Four years ago we advertised that we intended to make Charlotte a wholesale mart and ours "The Wholesale House." We now have the proud satisfaction of seeing it an accomplished fact.

We now call attention to the fact that we have converted our superb store into an exclusive Wholesale House, where you can find all lines of goods necessary for a country store, to wit: Dry-goods Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Notions, Groceries Hardware, Millinery, all in complete lines, bought in large quantities and from the very first hands.

Our stock is now arriving and will be complete about the 1st of September, and will be the largest of any here, the pretensions of others to the contrary notwithstanding. We respectfully invite your personal inspection, or write to us for circulars.

Very truly yours,
WITTKOWSKY & RINTELS.

—:o:—

RETAIL

Now, a few words about that. We now occupy the superb house heretofore so favorably known as the Messrs. Brem, Brown & C.'s Dry-goods House, to carry on our Retail business, and as "Excelsior" is, and has always been, our motto, we claim also in that line to excel in stock, to excel in lowness of prices, and to excel generally. We will, in that house, have a corps of thirty Salesmen and Sales-Ladies, all experienced, affable, and obliging.

We will make the Millinery branch a specialty Charlotte, N. C., Aug. 11th, 1874.

Youth's Department.

Living and Dead.

A mother sits by the glowing hearth,
And she dreams of the days that will come no more,
When the cottage echoed with youthful mirth,
And the patter of feet on the kitchen floor;
When three little jackets in a row,
With three little hats hung on the wall,
And three sets voices whispered low
The prayer the mother had taught to all.

But the ruddy rays of the firelight
Discover a tear that is silent now;
And the mother's hand, in vain to night,
Reaches in search of an upturned brow;
And the three little pegs stand brown and bare,
And the mother cries, "O, but to see
The three little jackets han ing there,
And the three fair boys who knelt by me!"

But one lies under the ocean wave,
Down with the ruined and dead;
And one lies in a Southern grave—
God alone knows the soldier's bed.
But the day will come when the trumpet's sound
Shall waken the dead to life again
From the ocean wave, from the battle-ground,
The mother knows, and it soothes her pain.

And what of the youth with the eye of light,
The last who clung to the mother's breast?
Better by far did he lie to-night,
Dead with the twain in their peaceful rest.
Better to die in his youthful grace,
With never a blot on his fair young name,
Than live with the curse of a blasted face,
And a soul that is steeped in the dyes of shame

And never that mother wept, I ween,
Such bitter tears for the boy who lies,
Somewhere under the grasses green,
Or he who sleeps where the sea-gull flies
As she weeps for the one death left to her—
Her baby boy, who walketh now
In the ranks of the great destroyer,
With the seal of the drunkard on his brow.

—ELLA WHEELER, in TEMPERANCE ERA.

Mary's Love for her old Grandmo her.

The following pretty little story shows the sacrifices a loving girl could make for her dear old grandmother. "Wear the old gown still,' is a great sacrifice for a young girl—it hurts one's pride and vanity so—but how proud Mary must have felt to realize that through her sacrifice her old grandmother was made so happy. If our little girls wish to taste of her happiness, let them deny themselves in something for their dear Lord's sake And now to the story, which we select from an exchange:

Some years ago a poor Irish family sailed from Dublin for America. Their poverty compelled them to leave behind a poor old grandmother, who must be placed in the parish work-house.

One of the children, a slender girl of some twelve years, was deeply attached to the old woman, who had taken care of her in sickness, and been especially tender of her in her early years.

"It is hard to have you go," said the old woman, at parting. "I have toiled for you, and cared for you, and denied myself for you until my hair is white, and I hoped to die with you, and lay my bones beside you. But twon't be long with me. I can go the rest of the way alone. God bless you! Go.'

"Grandmother,' said the girl, "you have spent your life for us, and watched by me when I was sick, and if I can save my thing from my wages in America, I will never have a new dress to my back till I fetch you over the sea.'

"No. I shall never see you again—none of you. But I shall always remember the sweet love in your heart, Mary.'

A bitter expression trembled on her wrinkled lip, and her tears ran down the furrows of her cheek. The girl clung to her neck fondly till the departure of the boat forced a separation.

Two years passed. One crisp September morning there might have been seen standing upon the Fall River steamboat wharf, a poorly clad girl gazing out upon the waters of the bay, far into the hazy distance, where lay, like gates of light amid the shadowy landscape, the shining outlets to the sea. Her brothers and sisters gathered around her, barefooted and thinly clad, and shivering in the keen, frosty air.

"She is coming!' at last exclaimed the girl, trembling with nervous excitement, as the magnificent Sound steamer swept into full view, and came glittering up the bay. The railroad train was at the landing, and when the boat came in, a crowd of travellers passed from steamer to cars, and were soon borne rapidly away.

Then there came tottering down the plank a poor old Irish woman, with hesitating steps and a face full of anxiety. Suddenly the cloud passed from her face as her eye fell upon a group of children. She stopped a moment, as though half distrusting the reality of the scene. "God be praised!' she exclaimed, lifting her withered hands. "God be praised! 'Tis worth all the toils and troubles of my poor life to live one blessed moment like this.'

As she uttered these words she folded the girl who had awaited her, to her bosom. "'Tis all your work, Mary all your work, you dear child!'

She paused a moment. The tears flooded her eyes as she added, "An' it's little ye've changed since the sad day ye left me in ould Ireland. It's the ould gown ye ar wearing still, and that these old hands helped to make in the old cabin at home. Yes, child, and may God bless ye for remembering the grandmother who loved you, and was lonely without you."

Rural and Domestic.

Fall Crops.

Of these, oats first claim attention. We have urged an increase of this crop so often and so much that we are almost afraid our readers will become weary of it. But our profound conviction is that it should be the principal grain crop at the South for work animals. It is entitled to this position by its relative cheapness, certainty and value as food. The first point will be accepted without discussion. The second may not; but we beg the reader to recall the volunteer crops that have fallen under his notice. Have they not been equally if not more certain than corn on uplands? The secret of success with a crop of fall oats is an early start and good land. To resist freezes the plant must have time to root well, get a firm hold on the soil; and it must, in the next place, be able to find readily in the soil food to sustain it in the fight with the cold. In other words, we want a comparatively old and vigorous plant to pass successfully through the winter. In mild winters, like the last, these points are not so essential, but we speak, of course, of the average winter. Where the thermometer ranges below twenty degrees the crop ought to be started, if possible, before the twentieth of September; where the mercury seldom descends to twenty degrees, a month later will answer.

Sometimes the convenience of the farmer may require the seed to be sown in August, as in seeding down at last plowing of cotton; in that event, on good land, they will make too much growth before frost if it is seasonable, and are liable to be killed by cold unless grazed down.

In this connection we beg to make a suggestion. We have often urged the planting of the pea to itself, making it one of the regular crops of the farm. Planted late in June, and drilled and worked like cotton, it not only makes valuable returns as a food crop, but becomes an admirable cleanser to clear land of objectionable growth and fit it for subsequent crops. It prepares the way admirably, for instance, for a crop of fall oats, the seed of which may be sown at the last plowing of the peas, as they are at the last plowing of cotton. This last plowing of peas comes on later than that of cotton, and has, therefore, decided advantage over it; and, besides, the dense shading of the peas keeps the oats from making too much growth before frost. Lastly, the pea enriches the ground for the oats; in this respect being almost if not quite equal to a dressing of manure.

To sum up, sow early from the first to the twentieth of September, give enough manure to make strong, vigorous plants, and, if any disposition to joint is observed before cold weather, graze down. In spring give a top dressing, and, if the rust-proof variety is sown, we venture the assertion that no crop raised on the farm is more certain to reward your labor.

CLOVER AND WINTER GRASS.

If dronth does not prevail, September is the best month for seeding down clover and grass. It gives ample time for the young plants to become well rooted before the hard freezes, and they are much less liable to be killed by dronth the following summer than spring-sown, because their roots will have had so much soil. We have so often discussed the preparation for and seeding down of these crops that it is unnecessary to repeat. It may be summed up in a few words: Clean land thoroughly pulverized, well manured, thick seeding and very light brushing, followed by rolling. For the grasses, ammoniated manures, like cotton-seed meal, or the seed itself, and Peruvian guano; for clover, ashes, bone-dust, superphosphate or plaster. On stiff soils sow common red clover; on light, sandy soils, the crimson clover or California clover would be better. Both of the last-named are annuals.

BARLEY AND RYE LOTS.

No farm is complete without these, and nothing on it pays better than they. The saving of dry forage, the health of animals, the copious flow of milk at a season when it is most scanty, all combine to urge them upon the attention of the farmer; and every farmer's wife is entitled to them, in consideration of her dairy alone. The land ought to be very rich, especially for barley, and well broken up by repeated plowings and cross plowings. Sow of barley not less than three bushels per acre of rye, one and a half to two will answer; and the seeding down should be done early in the present month. This is absolutely essential to securing first-rate growth.

—Southern Cultivator.

ENGLISH, German, Swiss, French and Italian agricultural journals speak of the value of the sunflower as a preventive of malarious diseases. A recent account comes from Holland of a farmer upon the low banks of the Schuldt who planted some plots of sunflowers around his house, with the effect to preserve his homestead from fever, while it was very prevalent all around. The Swiss Times, in reporting this case, strongly recommends the planting of sunflowers, not only for this reason, but also for the value of its seeds for feed, and that of its stalks for fuel.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

The Cant of Impostors.

It is so obvious that physical and constitutional vigor is the best defence against disease, that even the vendors of drastic purgatives advertise them as tonics, stomachics and invigorants, in the hope of enlisting a confidence of the public in the debilitating and pernicious potions. It is amusing to note how these impostors imitate and copy the language in which the medicinal properties of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are described. Although the effect of their rasping evacuants is to destroy the tone of the digestive organs and the bowels, and to rob the system of its vital strength, they are unscrupulously recommended to the weak and prostrate victims of disease as stimulants! It is time this humbug (not a very successful one it is true, thanks to the mature common sense of the American people) was stigmatized as it deserved. Such mischievous falsehoods should be exposed pro bono publico. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, be it distinctly understood, is a stimulant. It has a spirituous basis, and that basis is the vehicle which diffuses its wonderful sanitary principles through every part of the system. The tonic, alterative and regulating ingredients of the bitters would be comparatively inert if they were not, so to speak, carried to the localities where they are required by the stimulating agent. The cant which protests against the use of a pure alcohol fluid, when employed as a means of giving full effect to medicinal extracts of the highest ability, is the cant of charlatanism. Every intelligent physician so characterizes it, and the sick who are gulled, convulsed and debilitated by the numerous and disgusting nostrums of the parties who put it forth, soon find to their sorrow that it is a delusion and a snare. Hostetter's Bitters, the great sanitary stimulant of the age, is in the truest sense of the word, a wholesome, vitalizing, renovating preparation.

Bradley's Patent Enamel Paint.

It is but little more than a quarter of a century since the art of mixing paint was confined almost exclusively to a few comparatively speaking. Now, however, through the ingenuity of BRADLEY, we are not only enabled to apply the paint if we desire, but can see the shades in advance, sample cards being furnished gratis, with the different shades or tints numbered. Those who have used the "Enamel Paint," speak from experience, that it will fully be claimed for it, and evidently supercede the "old style paint." As an evidence of the great worth of the Enamel Paint, we most respectfully request all our readers to carefully read the excellent testimonials of Mr. C. P Knight, in this paper.

DR. M'LANE'S
Celebrated American
WORM SPECIFIC, OR VERMIFUGE.

SYMPTOMS OF WORMS.

THE countenance is pale and leaden-colored, with occasional flushes, or a circumscribed spot on one or both cheeks; the eyes become dull; the pupils dilate; an azure semicircle runs along the lower eyelid; the nose is irritated, swells, and sometimes bleeds; a swelling of the upper lip; occasional headache, with humming or throbbing of the ears; an unusual secretion of saliva; slimy or furred tongue; breath very foul, particularly in the morning; appetite variable, sometimes voracious, with a gnawing sensation of the stomach, at others, entirely gone; fleeting pains in the stomach; occasional nausea and vomiting; violent pains throughout the abdomen; bowels irregular, at times costive; stools slimy; not unfrequently tinged with blood; belly swollen and hard; urine turbid; respiration occasionally difficult, and accompanied by hiccough; cough sometimes dry and convulsive; uneasy and disturbed sleep, with grinding of the teeth; temper variable, but generally irritable, &c.

Whenever the above symptoms are found to exist,

DR. M'LANE'S VERMIFUGE
Will certainly effect a cure.

The universal success which has attended the administration of this preparation has been such as to warrant us in pledging ourselves to the public to in every instance where it should prove ineffectual: "providing the symptoms attending the sickness of the child or adult should warrant the supposition of worms being the cause." In all cases the Medicine to be given IN STRICT ACCORDANCE WITH THE DIRECTIONS.

We pledge ourselves to the public, that

Dr. M'Lane's Vermifuge

in any form; and that it is an innocent preparation, not capable of doing the slightest injury to the most tender infant.

Address all orders to

FLEMING BROS., PITTSBURGH, PA.

P. S. Dealers and Physicians ordering from others than Fleming Bros., will do well to write their orders distinctly, and take none but Dr. M'Lane's, prepared by Fleming Bros., Pittsburgh, Pa. To those wishing to give them a trial, we will forward per mail, post-paid, to any part of the United States, one box of Pills for twelve three-cent postage stamps, or one vial of Vermifuge for fourteen three-cent stamps. All orders from Canada must be accompanied by twenty cents extra.

For sale by Druggists, and Country Storekeepers generally.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,
Staunton, Va.,

Will begin its 25th annual session Sept 17th, 1874. Rev. W. A. Harris, D. D., President, with an able corps of twenty-three Teachers and Officers. Modern Languages taught and spoken by European Teachers Music by seven Professors and Teachers.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world. Its marked effect is the rapid promotion of the physical health and vigor of our girls. Those who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, chills and chronic diseases, are entirely restored.

Buildings elegant—fanned by the pure mountain breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery, ranking it one of the most delightful College homes in the Union.

The last session, one hundred and eleven young ladies attended this school, as boarding pupils from fifteen Southern States.

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONIALS.

From Bishop D. S. Doggett, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, located in Staunton, Virginia, under the Presidency of Rev. W. A. Harris, is, in my judgment, one of the best institutions, for young ladies, in the South. I have occasion to know and appreciate its value by the advantages enjoyed by one of my daughters, now a pupil there. It possesses all the facilities of a thorough female education. Its personal accommodations are all that can be desired for health and comfort, or taste. No location could be more delightful; no country more magnificent; no atmosphere more salubrious. It is now in a state of great prosperity. I do not hesitate to recommend it to the patronage of all who wish their daughters to receive the benefits of a moral and ornamental culture.

D. S DOGGETT.

From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music, advantages are offered of very high order. The most talented Professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent. The School is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

From Prof. F. H. Smith, M. A., L. L. D. University of Va.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, at Staunton, deserves the brilliant success it enjoys. It has a good corps of teachers, a beautiful situation, and excellent management. Having had a daughter under Mr. Harris' care, during the present session, my observation leads me to believe this school to be among the best of Female Seminaries which adorn our State.

RESTORE YOUR SIGHT.

Spectacles Rendered Useless.

Save Your Eyes.
RESTORE YOUR SIGHT,
THROW AWAY YOUR SPECTACLES.

Old Eyes Made New.

All diseases of the Eye successfully treated by

Dr. J. BALL & CO.'S
NEW PATENT IMPROVED IVORY EYE CUPS.

Read for yours-If and Restore your Sight.

Spectacles and Surgical Operations rendered useless. The Inestimable Blessing of sight is made perpetual by the use of the new PATENT IMPROVED IVORY EYE CUPS.

Many of our most eminent physicians, oculists, students and divines have had their sight permanently restored for life, and cured of the following diseases:

1. Impaired Vision; 2. Presbyopia, or Parsight; 3. Amaurosis, or Weak Sight; 4. Epiphora, streaming or Watery Eyes; 5. Sore Eyes—specially treated with the Eye Cups—are guaranteed; 6. Weakness of the Retina, or Optic Nerve; 7. Ophthalmia, or Inflammation of the Eye and its appendages, or imperfect vision from the effects of Inflammation; 8. Photophobia, or intolerance of Light; 9. Over-worked Eyes; 10. Myiasmopia—moving Specks or floating bodies before the eyes; 11. Amaurosis, or Obscurity of Vision; 12. Cataracts; Partial Blindness; the loss of Sight.

Any one can use the IVORY EYE CUPS without the aid of doctor or medicine so as to receive immediate beneficial results and never wear spectacles; or, if using now, to lay them aside forever. We guarantee a cure in every case where the directions are followed, or will refund the money.

2,300 CERTIFICATES OF CURE

from honest Farmers, Mechanics and Merchants—some of them the most eminent leading professional and business men, and women of education and refinement in our country—can be found at our office.

Under date of March 29 Hon Horace Greely, of the New York Tribune, writes: "J. Ball, of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

Prof W. Merrick, of Lexington, Ky., wrote, April 24th, 1869: "Without my spectacles I pen you this note, after using the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS thirteen days, and this Morning perused the entire contents of a daily newspaper, and all with the unassisted eye.

"Truly am I grateful for your noble invention. May Heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using spectacles twenty years; I am seventy years old.

Truly yours, PROF. W. MERRICK."

Rev. Joseph Smith, Malden, Mass., cured of Partial Blindness of 15 years' standing, in one minute, by the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS.

E. T. Ellis, late Mayor of Dayton, Ohio, wrote us, Nov. 15th, 1869: "I have tested the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS, and I am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them. They are the greatest invention of the age.

Wm. Beatty, M. D., Salyria Ky., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions, my sight is fully restored, after being almost entirely lost for 26 years.

Alex. K. Wyeth, M. D., Attalbro', Pa., writes: After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by paralyzed the optic nerve, to my utter astonishment your PATENT EYE CUPS restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes.

All persons wishing for full particulars, certificates of cures, prices, &c., will please send their address to us, and we will send our pamphlet on the ILLUSTRATED PHYSIOLOGY AND ANATOMY OF THE EYESIGHT, of one hundred pages, free of charge, by return mail. Write to Dr. J. Ball & Co. P. O. Box 957. No 91 Liberty Street, New York City, N. Y.

For the worst cases of MYOPIA or NEAR-SIGHTEDNESS we use our NEW PATENT MYOPIC ATTACHMENTS, applied to the IVORY EYE CUPS. Has proved a certain cure for this disease.

Send for pamphlet and certificates—free. Waste no more money by adjusting huge glasses on your nose and disfiguring your face.

Selected Poetry.

The Grove was God's First Temple.

HANSON PENN DILTZ.

The grove was God's first dwelling place;
'Twas fairest early morn and dewy eve,
His earnest worshiper, with beaming face,
Came, his kind blessing to receive.

'Twas here he came to breathe his prayer,
Pure as the rosy clouds which o'er him bent,
And ont upon the fresh and gentle air,
It stole across the firmament.

He walked adown the woodland aisles,
A temple grander than man ever made,
And where the violet skylight ever smiles,
He knelt before his God and prayed.

'Twas here he came to make his vows,
Ere man had learned to lay the chis'led stone,
And build thereon a stately, noble house;
'Twas here he sought his Master's throne.

O sweet it is to see the grove,
In this cold age of progress and of art,
And there kneel down with ministers of love,
And hope to God the hardened heart.

Father! thy hand hath reared this dome,
Through which yet floats the fragrant heavenly breath
And when into its stately halls I come,
From me is driven each thought of death.

All, all is beautiful and fair!
And as the gentle zephyrs round me play,
I thank thee for thy tenderness and care,
As now I tread life's thorny way.

'Tis here I come at matin hour,
When all is silent save the hunter's horn,
To kneel beside some blooming woodland flower,
And praise thee in the early morn.

And when the sunset fades away,
And shadows drift across the amber West,
I come unto the forest aisles to pray,
For thee, O God, for peace and rest.

Scientific Nonsense,

Hugh Miller said, "There is a cycle in nonsense as well as opinions of a more solid nature," and every now and then we are furnished with a verification of the truth of this remark. A certain class of scientists would like to impress the world with the belief that they have gone a little farther on the foreground of human thought than other people, and that what they are unable to discover or demonstrate, would be quite foolish in others to declare. Such men as Sir William Thompson, Darwin and Tyndall may be placed in this class. There is an egotism about some of their declarations that places them, often, in a ridiculous attitude before the thinking portion of mankind, and that is well calculated to bring the science they teach into disrepute.

In Prof. Tyndall's recent address before the "British Association for the Advancement of Science," we find some rare specimens of that sort of expressions which we have chosen to denominate 'scientific nonsense.'

Quotation first. "In matter we see the promise and potency of every form and quality of life."

Quotation second. "The whole process of evolution is the manifestation of a power absolutely inscrutable to the intellect of man. As little in our day as in the days of Job, can man by searching find this power out?" Considered fundamentally, it is by the operation of an insolnble mystery that life is evolved, species differentiated, and mind unfolded from their prepotent elements in the immeasurable past." Notice: first, he saw it in matter; secondly, he could not see it, because it was "inscrutable."

These two quotations will suffice to show the character of many declarations set forth in the name of science. Compare these two extracts from the same speech and see the glaring contradiction. First, 'matter has promise and potency of every form and quality of life.' Secondly, there is a "power absolutely inscrutable to the intellect of man." There is an "insoluble mystery" connected with the question how "life is evolved."

A sensible writer says, "there is a subtle power that lies back of all material forces;" this inexplicable power, the Christian says, is a spiritual being —God.

If Tyndall cannot approach or explain this "mystery," why should he scorn the faith of those who explain, by attributing the secret movements of nature to the operations of an All-wise and All-Powerful Creator.

It would be very difficult for Tyndall or any one else to deny the truth of the proposition of Paley, that "contrivance proves design." On this subject, Agassiz (Tyndall's superior) says, "Nature is the work of thought, the production of intelligence, carried out according to plan, therefore premeditated."

Carlee says: "Every organized being forms an entire system of its own, all the parts of which mutually correspond, and concur to produce a certain definite purpose, by reciprocal reaction, only combining to the same end."

Such a declaration stands and must forever stand uncontradicted, because it is truth, and such truth leaves us but one chance for a logical deduction, that is, intelligence must precede plans The more complicated the plans, the greater must be the intelligence. As the universe is one grand system of plan, purpose and harmony, an intelligence of infinite capacity must have preceded and founded the grand outlines, and given laws to all its lesser operations. Rock Spring Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: "In journeyings often" and "in labors more abundant" than any previous year of my life, I am trying to "make full proof of my ministry." "The care of all the churches," and especially of all the camp-meetings of the "Empire District," taxes my mind, heart and body, 'till they almost break beneath the load.

Rock Spring Camp Ground, in Lincoln county, N. C., is an institution of more than forty years standing. The camp meeting for 1874 began August 6th. Between three and four hundred tents on the ground. From five to ten thousand people go up annually to this time-honored place. The camp meeting for 1874 was a "trying time" as well as a solemn and glorious time. At our experience meetings, old men and women pointed out the very places in the altar where "God for Christ's sake spoke peace to their troubled hearts." No wonder these tried soldiers of the Cross love this place. They ought to love it, and their love for it should stimulate them to guard the honor of this consecrated spot from the descrating touch of the arch-enemy's "cloven foot."

Behold the vast crowd! There are five or six thousand people on the ground. This vast crowd has gathered here for objects as wide apart as the poles. The ministers of God are here to preach the "unsearchable riches of Christ" to dying men. Christians are here to receive with gladness the engrafted word. The worldling is here to have a good social time. They sit in their tents, visit their neighbors, and walk to and fro, in and around the encampment. Vast crowds of boys and girls, lads and lasses, and young men and women, traverse the grounds day and night, even during the hours of Divine service at the stand. They talk loudly, laugh immoderately, and some of them smoke and swear and drink. Liquor-sellers hide about in secret places, like wolves of darkness, and sometimes smuggle their jugs into the tents of the wicked.

Certain low and base fellows, with pistols in their pockets, and more or less under the influence of liquor, prowl around and swear and swagger and boast of their deeds of darkness. Many are here to serve God. Many are here to serve the devil. I attended the camp meeting at this place in 1873. There was much disorder. I therefore took every precautionary measure that I could to prevent disorder. I was there in good time, preached the introductory sermon, made an earnest appeal to the tent-holders and visitors to co-operate with me in my efforts to keep order. I appointed marshals to seat the congregation and see that no one be troubled while hearing the word. A meeting of the tent-holders was called, and they passed resolutions pledging themselves to assist us in every possible way to prevent disturbance. The place is incorporated, and the authorities appointed are efficient police with authority to call in to service every good man on the ground, if necessary, to enforce good order.

I was most warmly seconded in my efforts to preserve order and win souls to Christ by all the ministers, traveling and local, and by a large proportion of the tent-holders. Never did a general, in the midst of a great battle, receive more hearty and efficient aid from his subordinate officers than did the Presiding Elder of the "Empire District" at Rock Spring, from Revs. J. W. Pratt, H. T. Hudson, V. A. Sharpe, Henry Asbury and Rev. Dr. Sherrill.

What of results? The meeting was a success. Christians were edified.—Sinners were awakened; 30 or 40 souls were converted. Some of the disturbers of the peace were arrested by the police, and much work cut out for the courts.

But perhaps some Ex-Presiding Elder of the "Empire District is ready to ask, "Did you have good order?" Well—yes—no! At the stand during service the order was good. Outside the lines of tents, and at the arbor, after night services closed, the order was not so good. The "riff-raff" of the devil's army stoned the preachers' tent and some other tents. They also stoned the arbor. There was drunkenness and profanity under the arbor at night, and cursing, drinking, firing of pistols, &c., in the thickets just outside of the tents. Shall we hold another camp meeting at Rock Spring[s] August 1875? Yes; but I suggest to the authorities and tent-holders the following forward steps, viz:

1. Clear off all the undergrowths for 100 yards in every direction from the outside line of tents.

2. Reconstruct the stand, and enlarge the arbor, so as to seat twice as many people as now.

3. Make better arrangements for the accommodation of the ministers of Christ, and also for their horses.

4. Let some enterprising man build a large boarding tent for the accommodation of strangers and stalls for their horses, and thus give good fare for reasonable pay.

5. Allow no man to sleep under the arbor at night.

6. Procure an efficient police force.

If some such steps be taken, the ancient character and glory of Rock Spring may be regained and perpetuated.

Revival Work.

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: Four weeks ago, though I arrived at a late hour in the pretty little town of Mount Olive, I went immediately to the house of Rev. J. N. Andrews, whom I found well but very much worn down from excessive labours, having just closed a meeting at Indian Springs, where 48 were added to the church, and without any time to rest he had commenced a meeting in the almost new church in Mt. Olive. In thirty days he preached about 40 sermons. Bro. Mann was there assisting him, as a man can do. The meeting was productive of much good. I do not know how many converts there were, but I think more than 20. I formed many new acquaintances and renewed old ones. Spent two weeks there and at Dudley where Bro. A. also had a meeting going on, a part of the time, preaching in the day at Dudley, and at night at Mt. Olive.

Mt. Olive is a very pleasant village. Two churches, Methodist and Baptist, a very good school taught by Mr. English, several stores, one turpentine distillery and near by Bro. Luke Pearsell has a steam saw mill which he is running to good purpose. He is just the kind of a man, which every new town needs. He saws the lumber, then builds the houses, in good style, then sells or rents as may be desired by the new comers.

Two weeks ago to night I started home, reached Littleton, Saturday 29 Aug. I went to Calvary (a church about 4½ miles from Littleton) where I met Bro. J. W. Heptinstall. Each of us preached to a large and very attentive congregation, four presented themselves at the altar for prayer. Monday we assembled and I preached. Tuesday Bro. Burton came in (having closed his meeting at Bethel which resulted in 41 conversions) and took charge of his meeting and from that time to the present writing we have spent each day there, and God has blessed us. Forty five have professed religion and about 40 joined our church. Many of the most prominent citizens in and around Littleton have been converted and nearly all have joined our church.

A subscription list has been started in view of building a church in Littleton. This has been a most wonderful work. Bro. Burton says he has never witnessed such a work. Truly, it is God's work, never did a people behave more orderly, and with more united effort work for the Lord, setting aside all worldly cares without the least murmur. All or nearly all of the people for many miles around have been found at their places in the Sanctuary every day for two weeks. In the midst of this work, last Tuesday night God sent down the Messenger death, (and while all of his family were asleep), took the faithful old Class leader, Bro. Marcus A. Allen away from his sufferings, to his reward above. Bro. Allen was about 76 years old, and for about 25 years a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South. We buried him on Thursday evening. Such a funeral procession has seldom been seen in this country.

We are to rest to morrow and, God willing, we are to meet again Sunday to press the battle in the name of our God. Bro. Burton is doing a fine work. His health is tolerably good. I dare not ask more space.

For the Advocate.

BRO. BOBBITT: The suggestions made by your correspondent, O. L. E. STYLES, in your last issue are worthy of consideration and in view of their general adoption I would like that your correspondent should addan addition al question as to the example christian parents, superintendents, teachers &c. should set before children and Sabbath school scholars. In vain will our teachers labor to instruct children in the school room if wine, beer and strong drinks are placed temptingly before them at their homes or if our christian preachers, teachers, members &c. are seen visiting Bar Rooms or with the bottle and glass in hand. Sabbath school labors with such a course as this will be just as futile as temperance addresses, sabbath school addresses or church exhortations by a man who retires immediately after the exercises are over to his hotel room or house, and indulges in his glass.

Yours truly,

PHILO.

Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and Thou Shalt be Saved.

BY W. S. PLUMER, D. D., LL.D., COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA.

That seems to be a very simple way—this way of faith in the Redeemer. It well suits my case. I am foolish and ignorant; Christ is the wisdom of God. I am very sinful and guilty; Christ is the Lord our righteousness. He is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. I am very weak; I am without strength; Christ is the power of God unto salvation. I have no cloak for my sin. But the merits of Christ are the linen, white and clean, with which my poor soul may be beautcously arrayed. My tears cannot wash away my sins; but the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin. In him sinners boast the possession of greater blessings than angels have—even redeeming love and redeeming grace.

And then I am not required to bring any price in my hand. By the gospel, salvation is without money and without price. It is well for me that I am not required to pay for salvation. If I were, I should be forever lost. I am a poor sinner—as poor as my sins can make me. I have nothing to commend me to a just and holy God. I deserve all the evil he has denounced against me. I am guilty. I am all unworthiness; but Jesus is worthy. I rely on Jesus. I take Jesus for my Savior. He is all my desire and all my salvation. He has borne all the curse. He has died, the just for the unjust, the innocent for the guilty. He is the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. By his stripes we are healed.

One said: 'I am no scholar, sir; I have taught myself the last fifteen years, and now I can read a good bit of the Bible; but I can't make out all the big words, you know, sir. Ah! sir, that word 'believe,' that is a great word with me; it is everything to me; and, as far as I can make out, there is no other way of getting to Jesus. He says: 'Come unto me;' and, thank God, I am very happy in coming to him by believing on him.'

Oh, yes! no one can rely on Christ too much. He bids us do that great work—that work of God—believing on the Lord Jesus. To believe on him with the heart is always unto righteousness. It is to look unto him. It is to come unto him. It is to receive him to all ends and purposes of a complete salvation. It is to reject all other plans, and accept the gospel plan. It is to refuse all other physicians, and accept the one great Physician.

Nor is there any danger of being rejected if we come to Christ. He says so: "Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out.' Then, since men began in faith to call upon him, he has never spurned any from his presence. The penitent thief, the trembling jailer, and millions on millions have looked to him and were saved. In all the annals of time can be found no record of a sinner believing with the heart and then perishing in his sins.

Moreover, Christ's atonement is enough. He has satisfied. He has done enough. He has suffered enough. He has shed enough blood. His undertaking is a glorious undertaking; and it will appear more and more glorious to all eternity. His merits are all-sufficient.

"If all the sin that men have done,
In will in word, in thought in deed,
Since worlds were made, and time begun
Were laid on one poor sinner's head,
The blood of Jesus Christ alone
Could for this mass of sin atone;
And sweep it all away."

Who dare say there is any limit to the sufficiency of Christ's atonement? I have never seen nor heard of any good man attempting so presumptuous a sin.

Then the door is so open: "Behold, I have set before thee an open door." And every needed preparation is made: "Behold, all things are ready." And the Lord is in such earnest: "As I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked: but (I have pleasure) that the wicked turn from his way and live; turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?" And I am in such need of help, of just such help as is offered me in Christ Jesus. "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else." O God, Jesus is made unto us wisdom and righteousness, and sanctification and redemption.—He is all and in all. It is only by faith in Christ that we enter into rest—a blessed rest, that shall last forever.

"Rest, weary soul:
The penalty is borne, the ransom paid,
For all thy sins full satisfaction made.
Strive not thyself to do what Christ has done.
Take the free gift, and make the joy thine own,
No more by pangs of guilt and fear distressed,
Rest, sweetly rest."

How An Indian Prince Was Converted.

THE STORY OF A BIBLE.

Many years ago, in one of our mission schools, was a bright, young Hindoo boy, named Bhajan Lal. Active in play, he was also diligent in study, and as a reward for his proficiency in learning, a Bible was given him. The boy did not value the gift because it was God's Word, for child though he was, his young heart was joined to the idols to which his parents bowed down; but because the book was a prize given him on account of his diligence as a student, he gave it a place among his treasures.

Ten years before this time the Maharajah of the Punjaub, in Northern India, died. The heir to the throne was his little son, Duleep Singh, then but four years of age. As he was too young to wield the sceptre of government, regents governed in his place, and at the time when our story opens these regents were engaged in war with the British. In this war they were defeated, and the sceptre of the Punjaub passed into the hands of the English.

The British Government placed the young prince, then fourteen years of age on a pension, and removing him from the country where he had expected one day to reign as king, sent him to Futtehgurh to be educated. Those to whose care he was committed desired to make as pleasant as possible the life of the exiled prince, and to amuse him sought for him a young companion. The person to whom the choice of such a companion was intrusted visited one day the school in which young Bhajan Lal was a pupil. The bright, handsome face of the boy at once attracted his attention, and the intelligent answers he gave when questioned in his classes delighted and surprised him, and he resolved to secure this young student as a companion for the boy prince.

Bhajan Lal was pleased with the distinction conferred upon him and was at once transferred from the school room to the home of the young prince, a fine mansion in the midst of extensive grounds, on the banks of the sacred Ganges.

One day young Duleep Singh found lying among the possessions his companion had brought to his new home the Bible which he had received at school as a prize. It was a new book to him, and he curiously turned over its pages.

"What is this?' he asked.

"It is the sacred book of the Christians,' was answered, and it was given me as a prize at school, so I keep it.'

"I wish to know what it contains,' said the prince. Turning over its leaves he pointed to a chapter. "Read that to me,' he said.

Strangely enough, it was the chapter in Acts containing the account of the conversion of Saul. Eagerly the young prince listened. Again and again the story of the wonderful change in heart and life in this man was read to him. And then he desired to know more of that Gospel which had power to convert the fierce persecutor into the faithful and self denying minister and missionary of that faith which he had once sought to destroy. And so day after day the wondrous story of redemption was read to him, until he began to feel a personal interest in the great theme. Did he not find in his own heart just such passion as once burned in the heart of Saul; and did he not need just such a Saviour as Saul needed? Some of the faithful missionaries at that time living in Futehgurh were made acquainted with his case, and sought to instruct him more perfectly in the things of the kingdom.

Duleep Singh withdrew his confidence from the Brahminical priests, and placed his trust alone in Christ as his great High Priest, and on the 8th of March, 1853, he received the ordinance of baptism in the presence of all the servants of his retinue, of the European residents of the station, of the missionaries, and of the native Christians. He was at that time eighteen years of age.

In the years that have come and gone since that eventful day, Duleep Singh has continued faithful to his vows. For many years he has resided in England, but he does not forget his own country and people. A large number of mission schools for boys are supported by him in India, and each year, on the anniversary of his marriage, he sends a princely gift to the mission, in one of whose schools his wife, to whom he is devotedly attached, first heard the story of the Cross. Mere logic will lend itself to error as well as to truth, and will lead to any depths of falsehood, if the premises are wrong. The more closely the man reasons, the further he goes astray. It is like a compass vitiated by the ship in which it is placed; and the more dangerous the more it is trusted. Logic and compasses need constantly to be rectified by observation soutside of themselves.

Hot Hearts.

BY JENNIE F. WILLING.

Sheridan said, "I like to hear Rowland Hill, because his preaching comes red-hot from the heart."

There is immense energy in the force-pump that supplies the figure for the motive power of our sensibilities. Contracting and expanding hour after hour, never stopping for repairs, each contraction sends the blood through the farthest, finest capillary. If it grows weak and irregular in its action, you can feel it at the ends of your toes. The blood slides sluggishly through arteries and veins, unable to carry along and throw off effete matter; it dams up, every now and then, producing an eruption on the surface. The extremities become cold; the brain and lungs and liver get more blood than they know what to do with, and lumber on with their work in a very awkward, imperfect way. Everything gets out of repair, because the heart is not equal to what it is required to perform.

God says, "Give me thy heart."—Every Sunday-school child knows what that figure means, though it would puzzle a metaphysician to explain it satisfactorily.

The Chinaman said, "Send us men with hot hearts to teach us of Christ." Some people blunder just here. They seem to think that warm hearts and stupid heads necessarily go together; so when they set about loving God with all the heart, they take leave of their common sense. They do all sorts of abrupt, uncanny, senseless things in God's work, enough to wreck completely any other enterprise, trusting God's power to save their efforts from natural results, and bring them out right, in spite of the bungling.

By way of scriptural defence they quote PAUL: "God hath chosen the weak things of this world to confound the things that are mighty.' In making themselves "weak' they believe they are meeting the conditions of success. Now PAUL never laid aside his grammar, or rhetoric, or logic. If one will show us a sentence of twaddle or wishy-washy sentimentalism in the sermons or writings of the apostle, we will give him leave to make a fool of himself in doing God's work. The fact is, we are quite weak enough for practical purposes at our very best.

There is risk of our attending to mental culture at the expense of the spiritual. We must guard this point. If we are faithful to God, our beliefs will be at right angles with those of the people of this world, and will be "foolishness" to the wise Greeks and their descendants; and yet when our heart is in the best working order our thought will be the surest and steadiest and strongest. We must cultivate our minds as we would build an engine. Let each part be perfectly adjusted. Let no whit of polish be lacking. Then as we turn the steam on our fine piece of machinery, let us ask God to turn on the power, by setting our hearts on fire with His love. Baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire, we can hardly venture to prophesy how much the least of us might accomplish.

Purity of Character.

Over the outer coat of the plum and apricot there grows a bloom more beautiful than the fruit itself—a soft, delicate powder that overspreads its rich colors. Now, if you strike your hand over that, and it is once gone, it is gone forever; it only appears once. The flower that hangs in the morning empearled with dew—arrayed with jewels—once shake it, so that the heads roll off, and you may sprinkle water over it as you please, yet it can never be made again what it was when the dew fell gently from heaven.

On a frosty morning, you may see the panes of glass covered with landscapes, mountains, lakes, and trees, blended into a beautiful fantastic picture. Now lay your hand upon the glass, and by the scratch of your finger or by the warmth of the palm, all the delicate tracery will be obliterated.

So there is in youth a beauty and purity of character, which, when once touched and defiled, can never be restored,—a fringe more delicate than frost work, which, when torn and broken, will never be repaired. When a young lad or girl leaves the parent's house, with the blessings of a mother's tears still wet upon the cheek, if early purity of character be once lost, it is a loss that can never be made up again. Such is the consequence of crime. Its effect cannot but be in some way felt, though by God's mercy it may be forgiven.—Early Days.

A coin doesn't grow in value by passing from hand to hand and getting worn and clipped. Going about and undergoing all sorts of experiences won't make a man wise if he was a fool to begin with.—Edward Garrett.

AGED people are blessings to the community as well as the church.

Temperance.

The last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, passed a stringent rule against the liquor traffic, on the part of regular members of the church, referring the rule to be ratified or rejected by the annual conference. The whole question is being discussed in our Methodist exchanges. From a communication in last week's issue of the Richmond Advocate, from the pen of Rev. H. C. Cheatham, we make the following extract:

"The new law is not coercive—at least, not coercive in any other sense than all the laws of God and his Church are coercive. It only states one of the conditions upon which men may remain in our Church. If they stay in, they must cease making, buying, and selling spiritous liquors. If they persist in making, buying, and selling such liquors, they must go out of the Church. That is what the law means. This interferes with no man's liberty. This is not coercion. No man is compelled to come into the Church; nor is any man compelled to remain in the Church.

The Bible and the Church prohibit profane swearing, slander, theft, false-witness, murder, &c. Is that coercion? Every man has a right to freedom of speech. This is one of the privileges and glories of our land. But if a man uses his freedom of speech to blaspheme his Maker or injure his fellow man by false swearing, the Bible and the Church exclude him from the communion of saints.—Does any one call this coercion? Now, if it is right to legislate against one class of sins and one class of sinners, where is the evil of legislating against another class of sins and sinners? If it is not coercion to exclude from the Church the blasphemer, why is it coercion to exclude the liquor dealer?

To press this point: Suppose a man follow horse racing for a living; or, suppose he opens a dance house or theatre—shall he cry out coercion if he be excluded for these known and willful sins? Why, then, is it coercion to exclude from the Church men who carry on a business in itself and carrying in its train a great multitude of evils?"

"The Church seeks to save men from their sins, and not in their sins. When men profess to be converted and seek admission into the Church, we expect them to cease to do evil and learn to do well. The church neither tries nor expects to get men to heaven with their sins upon them. The swearer must cease to swear, the drunkard cease his drunkenness, the gambler his practice; and the man who is working wretchedness, ruin, poverty, crime, disease by making and selling intoxicating liquors, for the mere love of gain, must be made to cease to war upon the best interest of society."

Rev. J. Powell Garland thus speaks in the same paper:

"An evil, fearful in the ruin it works, is now confronting us. Its victims are around us everywhere. Its dark shadow rests upon our altars, and brings woe and death to homes that otherwise would be the abodes of prosperity and peace. We are seeking to expel this mighty evil from our midst. We are striving to crush this destroyer of souls and bodies of men. We are seeking to promote sobriety, purity, and good order in the Church And shall the Church be intimidated in its efforts to save the people by the fear that because of the adoption of this law its members at some distant day may be asked to use no more tobacco? Upon such a principle as this, we would abandon all efforts at reform. If an undue tendency to special legislation result from the adoption of this law, I hazard nothing in the prediction that an extreme in special legislation can and will be more easily corrected than this evil that now confronts us."

PAUL not only said: "All things work together for good to them that love God," he said also: "We know it." But how often, when the sky darkens over our head, and the path grows thorny under our feet, this knowledge seems to slip away beyond the grasp of faith, and we are "in trouble even as other men." We have need to wall out these overwhelming waves of unbelief from the soul, with the "many exceeding great and precious promises" of our Heavenly Father—promises remembered, promises appropriated, promises of which prayer seeks and praise celebrates the fulfillment. O, what confidence should buoy us up and brace us, when even Socrates, the heathen, could say: "To a good man, nothing is evil, neither while living nor when dead, nor are his concerns neglected by the gods!"

The house in which Mozart composed his "Magic Flute,' in Salzburg, has been presented to the Mozart Society, of that city, by Prince Staremberg.

Mrs. Van Cott is laboring in revival meetings in California.

Let us Help one Another.

This little sentence should be written on every heart and stamped on every memory. It should be the golden rule practiced not only in every household, but throughout the world. By helping one another we not only remove thorns from the pathway, and anxiety from the mind, but we feel a sense of pleasure in our own hearts, knowing we are doing a duty to a fellow creature. A helping hand or an encouraging word, is no more loss to us, yet it is a benefit to others. Who has not needed the aid of a kind friend? How soothing, when perplexed with some task that is mysterious and burthensome, to feel a gentle hand on her shoulder and to hear a kind voice whispering: Do not feel discouraged; I see your trouble, let me help you.

What strength is inspired, what hope created, what sweet gratitude is felt, and the great difficulty is dissolved as dew beneath the sunshine. Yes, let us help one another by endeavoring to strengthen and encourage the weak and lifting the burden of care from the weary and oppressed, that life may glide smoothly on and the fount of bitterness yield sweet waters; and he, whose willing hand is ever ready to aid us, will reward our humble endeavors, and every good deed will be as "bread cast upon the waters to return after many days,' if not to us, those we love.

Two Rich Men.

A New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette writes: "The chief holder of personal estate in this city is Commodore Vanderbilt, who is estimated at $40,000,000, the largest part of which is in railway property. He owns enough of the Connecticut river and New Haven roads to be a director in each, and he also owns the controlling interest in the Central, Hudson, and Lake Shore, besides his stock in Ohio and Mississippi, and other important roads. It was said of George Peabody that he made almost the entire bulk of his enormous wealth after his fiftieth year. I think a stronger statement can be made of the Commodore, for he made the largest part of his money since he was sixty—that is, within the last score of years. I suppose that when the war broke out he was not worth five millions. The incessant and enormous increase of railroad values and the colossal extent of his operations have brought an increase so stupendous as to remind us of the old stories of Oriental magic. The only instance in which real and personal estate is combined almost equally in the vast possessions of one individual is found in A. T. Stewart. He owns enough in each of these shapes of wealth to make a dozen men rich. In point of real estate he has two great dry goods establishments on Broadway; also the Metropolitan Hotel, and the former Unitarian church. Add to these the Baptist church in Amity street, now used as the stables of his business teams, the Depeau row, in Bleecker street, and above all, his Fifth avenue palace, which cost $1,000,000. In personal estate is his stock in trade, capital and bills receivable, which must be $10,000,000, and also a large quantity of bank stock. In this manner Stewart wields both classes of property. He has differed entirely from Vanderbilt in this point. The latter has invested almost solely in railway stocks, while the former has eschewed this form of property in a very peculiar manner. He has a strong affinity for those things which pertain to trade and to this alone. It it said his estates can not be less than $30,000,000.

A CASE OF CONSCIENCE.—A member of the Presbyterian church in Parkersburg followed the trade of a milkman. He delivered milk on Sunday, and was arraigned before the Session. His defence was twofold. First, that the perishable nature of the article he dealt in made it impossible to serve the people on Saturday so that they could have sweet milk on Sunday; second, his best customers were the minister and two of his elders, who were then sitting as a court upon him. The latter defence was deemed sufficient and the case was dismissed.

Literature.

Mr. T. S. Perry, for some time editor of the NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW, has become the American correspondent of the London ACADEMY.

A new volume has been added to the edition of Bayard Taylor's travels, published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, entitled "Egypt and Iceland."

A volume, entitled "Brittany Picturesque," written by Mr. Henry Blackburn, and illustrated by eminent artists, will soon be published in London.

The library which was sent from this country as a present to the people of Iceland, was delayed in transportation, and did not reach its destination in time for the millennial celebration.

Mr. Hodder Westropp, a well-known archæologist, author of "Epochs of Painted Vases" and a "Handbook of Archæology," has in the press, in England, a Manual of Precious Stones and Antique Gems."

All letters on business with this office should be addressed to the Editor of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

RALEIGH, N. C., SEPTEMBER 30, 1874.

The Cross (X) Mark is to remind you that your subscription has expired. Let all renew promptly.

Our preachers who interest themselves in circulating the Advocate will receive their paper free of charge.—Will not all make an earnest effort to place the Advocate in every Methodist family? The young converts who are coming into the church should be early supplied with a copy

Brethren write us that where the Advocate is generally taken and read, the church is prosperous in every good cause. This of itself is a sufficient reason why every pastor should be active in extending its circulation. Every Methodist family in the Conference should have the paper. In this way the Sunday school cause, missions, education and pastoral support will be promoted. We insist that every preacher and reader of the Advocate make an earnest effort to extend our circulation. Let those whose time has or will soon expire renew as early as possible.

The revival intelligence from almost every portion of our Conference is truly a cause for rejoicing among our people. The Lord be praised!

We have received an account of the Greensboro District Conference. It came too late for this issue. We will publish it in our next.

We learn from the Charlotte Observer that Bro. Carraway is conducting a series of meetings in his church at Charlotte. His congregations are large and considerable interest is manifested.

The revival at Edenton St. Church in this city closed last Sunday evening. As the result of the work of grace, nine joined the church at the morning service on Sunday. Others will be received next Sabbath. Bro. Mangum, the popular pastor, labored earnestly and faithfully during the meeting.

The Piedmont Press says Davenport Female College has seventy-two pupils, more than it has had since the war. We are rejoiced to hear of the prosperity of this most excellent school that has educated so many noble women all over the Western part of this State and upper South Carolina

We publish in another column a brief notice of the death of Mrs. Sallie K. Jones, who died at her residence near Rolesville, on the 23 inst, in the 80th year of her age. We received her into the Methodist church at Rolesville about seven years ago and had repeated conversations with her on experimental religion before and after her connection with the church. She was an excellent christian, and she leaves behind an example of piety worthy of imitation.

An interesting revival of religion is in progress at Sidney Chapel near this city, conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. E. Thompson. We were present and took part in the exercises on Sunday. The crowd was immense—a large number of penitents were at the altar, —ten joined the church, and the work goes on with increased interest. The communion on Sunday was highly interesting and deeply impressive.

The Trinity Gazette says: Such is the general belief and practice of the day. Parents think and say they are too poor to educate their children.—What will be the consequence? The children will be still poorer, and the lowest degree of intelligence among any people, which does and must furnish the practical serfs, "the hewers of wood and drawers of water." The most certain and economic expenditure for children is to educate them. Whoever leaves his children uneducated, leaves them a legacy of poverty.

PROFESSOR TYNDALL.—The Religious Herald says "this distinguished scientist, in an address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, of which he is President, gave utterance to the following words:

"I discern in that matter, which we in our ignorance, and notwithstanding our professed reverence for its Creator, have hitherto covered with opprobrium, the promise and potency of every form and quality of life."

The expression has excited very general interest, as it is supposed to commit the Professor to the support of the doctrine of materialism. We are not sure that it does. It leaves undecided the questions: Whence came matter? and who endowed it with the promise and potency of life? To us it seems that undue stress has been laid upon the utterance. It is not new. It's mere speculation. It is supported by no evidence. If all forms and qualities of animal life are evolved from matter, whence came the order, harmony and stability of the universe? Intelligence shines in every sphere, glows in the sun, is proclaimed by every rolling sphere, and is inscribed on every law of nature; but matter is not intelligent."

The Coming Circus.

The devices of the devil to ensnare the souls of men are many and ingenious, and among the "many inventions" which his emissaries have sought out to demoralize and corrupt the sons of men, no one is more artful and dangerous than the circus, with its ghire and tinsel, its noise and show and immodest exhibitions. The extensive advertising in the secular papers and the huge daubs upon walls and bulletin boards, tell us that the circus, with all its glittering paraphernalia, is coming to pander to the vitiated tastes of the wicked and worldly, to entice the unwary, to soil virtue, and to carry away from an already depressed people money that is needed for better and more useful ends. In view of the demoralizing tendencies and wide spread evil of such enterprises, we deem it our duty to cry out against them, and to caution our people, and especially professed Christians, against lending them encouragement or patronage.

We submit, first, that circuses are useless, and serve no good purpose If their exhibitions afforded the least instruction to the mind or taught any valuable rules for physical exercise and health, there would be some little excuse for their recognition. But no such end is aimed at by their conductors; they strive only to amuse and to excite wonder, and that by the employment of means improper and in many cases indecent. The advocates of theatrical representations raise the plausible plea that they are educators —that history and the mysteries of the human heart are depicted more clearly and forcibly on the stage than by other methods, and that they are, therefore, commendable. But no such argument can be employed in defence of the exhibitions of the ring, the perilous feats of the gymnast and acrobat, or the foolish antics and stale and obscene jests of the clown. They teach nothing which it will elevate or benefit the mind to remember or the body to practise

Second; the circus not only serves no good purpose but does positive injury to good manners, morality and religion. The scenes that are witnessed there are such as would cause a blush to crimson the face of ordinary modesty, if seen on the street or in the home circle; while the blasphemy, the sacrilege and obscenity of the jests, if attempted in a genteel circle, would create disgust and ensure the summary expulsion of the unclean jester. Morality is ignored and religion sneered at and ridiculed in the ordinary circus, and we do not know that one circus differs from another in this respect. A community always suffers when it lies in the track of the circus—its serpent trail is always seen in the rudeness of conduct and conversation, the lowered tone of morality and the increased disrespect for religion that it leaves behind it.

Third; to patronize the circus is to encourage fellow beings in a profitless, vicious and dangerous life. The actors and employes of the circus are usually of the lower and disreputable classes of society,—roues, libertines and idle persons, who do not benefit themselves or others, and add nothing to the common good of society.

Fourth: such exhibitions while they leave nothing, or little, but harm to a community, absorb great quantities of the money that is needed for circulation and the support of good and necessary enterprises.

It is not too much to say that one circus making the tour of the State, abstracts at least one hundred thousand dollars from the pockets of her people—enough to build forty or fifty handsome churches, to rear a school house in every county in the State, or to support for eight or ten years the one hundred and thirty orphans who are being educated to intelligence and virtue at Oxford Orphan Asylum. To say nothing of the loss to morality and religion, our people cannot afford to spend their substance upon such useless and profitless amusement as the circus affords. Preachers and teachers, parents and guardians, and especially all who are professed followers of Christ, should not fail to impress upon the attention of those, whose keepers they are, the folly and danger of giving countenance to the Devil's ring.

Education of Youth.

Parents and guardians have great responsibility resting upon them in respect of the education of those who are committed to their keeping. In their hands rests, in great measure, the future of their children and wards: they are the potters who have the shaping of the clay into vessels of honor or dishonor—of beauty or deformity. Happiness or misery waits, as it were, upon their bidding to attend the career of those whom they lead into the arena of life, and it behooves them to use wisely the power they possess.

They err greatly who consider that their duty is fulfilled toward their children when they have fed and clothed them through infancy and youth and provided them upon emerging into manhood with money and lands, with the ruies and tricks of trade or experience in the conduct of a farm. These may serve to amass and increase their fortunes, but not to fit them for the rational enjoyment of life and the fulfillment of their destiny as beings born to immortality.—There is something in man that craves intelligence and culture, and unless that hunger is satisfied in youth, the maturer years will witness only dwarfishness, leanness and decrepitude. If it be satisfied, the youthful mind expands into full-rounded capacity for appreciating the beauties that moral and physical nature spreads before its enraptured vision.

The neglect on the part of many to give their children a liberal education is painful in the extreme. It is economy to educate, while ignorance is costly. The money spent in educating and cultivating the powers of the mind and refining the feelings of the heart, is an investment whose wisdom the fruits and profits of coming years will confirm. To this truth our people must awaken. They must regard the tuition of their children one of the necessaries of life,—just as much as meat and bread and clothing are necessaries—and not one of the luxuries whose indulgence must be postponed until times grow better and the coffers are filled.

"Ball's Creek" Camp-Meeting, Newton Circuit.

MR. EDITOR: I reached "Ball's Creek" at an early hour on Friday morning, before the second Sunday in September, and found only a few persons on the ground. Very little preparation had been made for the occasion. The grounds, arbor, seats and tents, all gave evidence of general neglect. But soon, however, the tent holders came pouring in, and before night everything seemed much improved. There are, perhaps, about 200 tents most of these occupied. The ministers who had been requested to attend were all on the ground in good time, and as at other places, every man ready to do his duty in the spirit of the Master. Revs. P. L. Herman, D. May, J. C. Hartsell, G. W. Ivey, J. W. Puett, R. L. Abernethy, Dr. Sherrill, Harmon and Killium were present. There were large congregations at the stand at every service. The seats provided would not accommodate more than half the people on Sunday. Many anxious listeners stood up to hear the word. But large numbers were in the tents and strolling in and around the encampment. The authorities employed a police force of 25 men, but they were not able to keep perfect order. Men were drunk on the ground. Profane oaths were heard in different directions. Pistols were fired. Tents were stoned, &c., &c.

Why all this disorder? We were encircled by half dozen or more "government distilleries."

The agents of the "best government the world ever saw" are engaged in converting "Catawba corn" into whiskey! I was told that members of the church (not Methodists, thank God) are engaged in this work! The followers of the "meek and lowly Jesus" are thus manifesting their love to God and man! Whiskey dealers were said to be stationed just far enough away to evade the law; but near enough to keep the camp disturbed by the riotous conduct of their "finished jobs!" But "none of these things moved us." "Broadside" after "broadside" of gospel shot and shell was poured into the ranks of the enemy. The whole truth was boldly declared. Sin and error received stunning blows. Their advocates felt the keen edge of the Gospel sword. Some cried for quarter and surrendered at the feet of the Great Captain of our salvation. Others resisted the truth and "cursed their wrath to keep it warm" Twenty five or thirty souls were converted to God. Forty dollars were raised for missions. The tent-holders passed resolutions looking to improvements. One of them I will lay before your readers:

"Resolved, That we do hereby most respectfully memorialize the next session of the Legislature of N. C. to so amend the "Act of Incorporation" as to authorize the Board of Trustees to punish offenders by a fine of not less than $50.00, nor more than $500.00, or imprisonment not less than 3 nor more than 6 months for each offence in the county jail."

The order was better than at the last camp meeting which was held two years ago. The parting scene on Tuesday morning was affecting. A number of penitents presented themselves in the altar, signifying their desire that God's ministers and people should pray for them when separated from them.

A sad reflection: the health of our dear Brother Herman is so precarious that he will probably be compelled to retire from the effective ranks. Let prayers go up to God in his behalf!

The controversy at Newton between Rev. D. May and Rev. John Smith has been conducted in good spirit, and the result thus far is satisfactory to the Methodists.

God's Money.

"Whose money did you say?"

"God's money!" "Is it not God's money; do you deny he has a right to it, that it is entirely His?" "Well I don't know. I have a large family dependent upon me, it takes almost all I can make to get them along. I don't see how I can give any of it away; besides you know what the Bible says he who neglecteth to provide "for his own household has denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." That my friend is just the point I wish you to consider. Do you claim to be long to "the household of faith?" "Yes! "Well, here is an object for the general good of the household of faith, the support of the Lord's prophets and their families; if they are not provided for, the gospel is stopped, the world lapses into idolatry, the triumphs of the cross cease, and this money which you hold back will but curse the children for whom you hold it. It is God's money and is now wanted for his cause."

Let us take another view of it, "how did you get this money?" "Sold cotton!" "How did you get the cotton?" "Plowed all summer for it!" "True, Who gave you the ability to plow, who protected your health, who gave you the season just right until you seemed about to burst with pride of your crop, then held up his hand a little and let some of it perish, leaving you still enough and to spare? It was God, the father of the household to which you claim to belong, "the household of faith." He has given the country enough for all His children, some of them have too much and some not enough, so He expects you who have 'a little over' to supply the wants of those who have "not quite enough" and thereby shew that you are a true brother or sister in the household. And you must do it. It is his money, send a portion to all the interests of his kingdom and then get down on your knees and be happy: Go and see your steward to-morrow to-day would be better, as you have not the promise of to-morrow,—go and see him, don't wait for him to come, he may not be able to see you, or he may be negligent of his duty, or waiting for the last quarterly meeting: you cannot afford to wait for him, the money is needed for the cause, "God's money." See what is required of you, add ten per cent to that and pay it up, the ten per cent is to make a sure thing that you pay enough, so that you will have a light and easy conscience during all the coming cold winter when you sit by your blazing fire and think how the preacher's wives and children are thickly clad and comfortably warmed all because you did your duty and applied "God's money" in a proper way.

Your loving brother,
O. L. E. STYLES.

Camp-meeting Revival --Rale on Temperance.

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: Our camp meeting at Pleasant Garden last week was a success. Dr. Wilson, Bro. Hendren and myself had most of the preaching to do, there being no other member of the Conference present, except Bro. King, who preached once for us. I cannot say definitely as to the number of converts, but suppose about 30. The attendance was large, people present from all over the circuit, and some from other charges the good influence therefore has diffused itself, we hope far and near, and eternity alone will disclose the entire result.

Up to this date we have had about 60 conversions on South Guilford Circuit, and the work moves on. We are about half round with our protracted meetings, and expect at least one hundred converts this year; pray for us, that this number may be doubled. Our young Bro. Craven is with me in all these meetings, doing good work By the way, he was recommended, by the Quarterly Conference the other day, for the travelling connection; the Conference will do well to take him in.

My mind is made up to vote against the proposed change of the Rule of Temperance. I will not now consume your space with my reasons for this conclusion. Allow me however to say, I have given the subject prayerful consideration, and shall vote against any change of Mr. Wesley's old Rule in regard to drunkenness and the use of spirituous liquors in our Church.

R. G BARRETT.

Sulphur Springs Camp-Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: Sulphur Springs, is four miles from Shelby in Cleaveland county. The camp-meeting embraced the 3rd Sunday in August. The session began on Friday and closed on the next Tuesday. Not more than 20 tents. Large congregation on Sunday. Order pretty fair. I was assisted here by Rev. J. W. Nash, Rev. H. T. Hudson, Rev. S. Leard, Rev. T. J. Gattis, agent Davenport Female College, Rev. B. F. Dixon, Rev. S. R. Trawick Rev Smith and Kenedy. A number of persons professed faith in Christ. Christians were encouraged and much good accomplished.

A missionary sermon of great force was preached by Rev. H. T. Hudson, and about $45 received for missions. The friends are preparing to build a good house of worship, to take the place of the old church, which is small and uncomfortable. Some forward steps should be taken at this place as well as at "Rock-Spring." Rev. J. W. North, one among the best theologians as well as one of the finest preachers in the conference, serves this circuit for $150. Vast crowds of young people in all this country who should be in our schools and colleges.

L. S. BURKHEAD.

Religious Brevities.

— Bishop Pierce and Dr. M'Ferrin, are on an official visit to the Pacific Coast.

— SALOONS, SCHOOLS, AND CHURCHES. There are 140,000 saloons in the United States against 13,000 schools and only 54,000 churches

— The Denver Conference refused to adopt the change in the General Rules by a unanimous vote. Not a dissent.

— A medallion of John Wesley is to be placed in Westminister Abbey, and under it a representation in basrelief of Wesley preaching on his father's grave.

— Bishop Pierce says that he has engaged the services of ten ministers for this Coast. They will be appointed to their work at Conference.—Pacific Methodist.

Revival Intelligence.

Rev S. H. Helsabeck writes:

We have had about thirty conversions at several protracted meetings on the North Guilford circuit.

Rev. H. H. Gibbons writes:

I have just closed a series of protracted meetings of great power and interest; about one hundred have been converted, many added to the church.

Rev. M. W. Boyles writes:

"I am glad to say that we have had some good meetings. Sinners have been convicted and mourners converted, and the church strengthened. Let all the praise be to God!"

Rev. H. F. Wiley sends us the following:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: The spirit of revival seems to be spreading on Deep River Circuit. I closed a meeting at Rehoboth last Sunday, which lasted 8 days, 19 professed conversion, and 11 joined the Church. Others will join.

Rev. Peter Womble of the Christian Church and Rev. Mr. Cooper of the Protestant Methodist each preached twice for us during the meeting. Also Rev A. Caveness, and Rev. J. Bowdoin, of the local ranks, were with us, and rendered good service by preaching and laboring in the altar.

Rev. L. Phillips a local preacher of this Circuit held a meeting at Mt. Zion embracing the 4th Sunday in August, which resulted in 7 conversions, and 2 accessions to the Church.

Rev. S. Leard writes Sept 13th:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: Writing on business, I wish to add a few words in relation to the State of the work on Rutherford circuit. We commenced a meeting at Pleasant Grove on the 2d Sunday in August, which lasted some ten or twelve days. We sum up as follows: Church much revived, and the addition of seven valuable members to the church. Immediate steps were taken to build a new church edifice, which is now in process of erection. There were many penitents, but only a solitary case of conversion, which came to our knowledge. Some days afterward we commenced a meeting at Ervin's Chapel, which resulted in great good to the church;—from this place we removed to Gilboa, the place appointed for the holding of our third Quarterly Meeting. Dr. Burkhead was with us, in feebleness of body, but strong in spirit. The opening sermon was on the "Unity of the Church." This was followed on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock by a clear, forcible, incisive argument on the "Mode of Baptism." It occupied two hours and three quarters in its delivery. The effect was beyond our most sanguine expectation. Some were offended, (of course) but our people rejoiced, were confirmed in their opinions, and many others were convinced. We have just closed a meeting there of a week's continuance, which exceeded any thing for spiritual power that we have seen this year. We sum up: Twenty-one additions to the church—many conversions of all sizes and ages, and a wonderful quickening of the church. To God be all the glory! Hallelujah!

Rev. J. P. Simpson and Rev. S. Rone send the following from Mount Pleasant Circuit:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: Since the 1st Sunday in August, seven churches in our charge, Union, St. Paul's, Olivet, Cold Spring, Love's Chapel, Centre Grove and Gold Hill, have been favored with an interesting revival of religion, 141 persons have made a profession of spiritual conversions—93 have joined our Church—26 were members, 10 joined other Churches, and 12 are without membership. Our "Week of Prayer" services at Cold Spring, were largely attended, and were eminently spiritual and profitable. The brethren from Saint Paul's Thos. Shinn, Alfred Smith, Wesley Miller, B. Sanders, Martin Bost and Ludwick, and brothers Paul Smith, Daniel Bangle and M. Dove at C. Spring were valuable and efficient helpers. They deserve this notice. The revival at Gold Hill, began with the services of the "Week of Prayer," led by Bro. Wilkerson, and assisted by brothers Snuggs, Earnhart, Canble, Lillycrop, and Ludwick, laymen in our church at that place. It was afterward conducted for a week by the assistance of our Baptist brethren, under Rev. brother Stiers. There were 70 converts. The zeal of the converts was rather in advance of many I have seen. Our young friends Adolphus Mauney and Matthew Cauble, were extensively useful. Others whose names I did not learn were deeply concerned for their friends.

The meetings at the other named churches were very lively and effective for good. At Centre Grove, there were 32 converts, a happy youthful band. Our brethren at Love's chapel were greatly cheered, and are hopeful of great progress in building up our Church at that place.

We, as Pastors, are devoutly thankful to God for His blessings on the people of our charge. And we are grateful to the brethren at Saint Paul's—more than to others for their valuable help at Cold Spring, Centre Grove, and their own church. Revs. John Williams at Gold Hill and Paul Smith at Cold Spring, have been as helpful to their Pastors as their circumstances would allow.

Rev. G. Farrar writes:

The Lord is blessing our people on the Uwharie circuit with the outpouring of his Spirit. We had a good camp-meeting at Concord resulting in the conversion of fifty souls or more. We are now in the midst of a gracious revival at New Hope church. Some fifteen have made a profession and a good many penitents still at the altar, and I don't know when the meeting will close. There are other appointments which seem to be ripe for revivals if we can get to them. We have a camp-meeting commencing at Pepar Springs on [illegible] day of [illegible] would be glad for you to come, and if you can't come, tell Brother Collier Brother Mangum, or some of your preachers about Raleigh to come, for we expect to be scarce of help If any of you should take a notion to come and will go to Trinity, I think Brother Jabez Leach or some of the Brethren there will bring you to the meeting. Pray for me.

Rev. T. Page Ricaud writes from Olin N. C. 21st instant:

MY DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: Yesterday (Sunday) was, religiously considered, an eventful and profitable day, as you may judge from the following exercises held;

1st Love Feast at 8½ o'clock.
2nd, Preaching at 11 o'clock in the College Chapel
3rd. Baptism of Converts.
4th, Admission of members.
5th, Experience meeting, at the church, at 3½ o'clock, and preaching at night.

The revival is progressing, and the attendance is very large. Thus far, there have been 52 conversions and 36 accessions. The reason, of the disproportion between the conversions and accession, is accounted for in the fact, that several were already members of the church and others who have not will join ere long.

The interest manifested is almost universal, and our county friends are crowding in from all quarters, and are deeply interested.

Our beloved P. E., M. L. Wood, is wonderfully efficient. He is emphatically a "Model Presiding Elder." He knows no one "after the flesh," taking care of all the interests of the church, and strong and successful in contending for the "Faith once delivered to the Saints." To God be all the glory!

Rev. R. M. Brown writes September 12th:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: The Lord has been with us at Zoar, (Albemarle cir.) I commenced a meeting there last Saturday night, which lasted five days, and resulted in 19 conversions and 9 accessions to the church. The membership were greatly revived. Others will join the church. Some six or seven of the converts were members of the church. All of the members of this church, about sixty, are now professors of religion. I had to leave there in order to meet an appointment at Walnut Grove There is a great interest in this part of the country in regard to salvation. Forty or fifty persons at least in the lower part of my circuit are seekers of religion.—I am to hold protracted meetings at Bethel and Stony Hill soon, from which I hope to send good tidings. I was assisted at Zoar on the Sabbath by Rev. A. F. Atkins (Local) of this circuit, and during the week by Rev. Whitlock, (Baptist.) These brethren labored efficiently. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow!"

Rev. P. F. W. Stamey writes:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: The good Lord is still reviving his work on the Dallas circuit. I have just closed a meeting at Concord resulting in the conversion of 23 souls, and 22 accessions to the church. I had no ministerial help, but the best of all was the Lord was with us. Saints were made to rejoice, and penitents were happily converted to God. One old brother said it was the best meeting they ever had at that church. I held a meeting at Lander's Chapel, during the week of prayer; 5 professed faith in Christ, and 13 were added to the church. On Friday every Saint was shouting the praises of God. Such a scene I never witnessed before.

Bro. Edwards, from the South Fork circuit, was with me. His labors were abundant. He preached with great effect. My companion in life was happily converted, and joined our church. Up to this time she was a member of the Lutheran church.

I held a meeting at Bethesda commencing on the second Saturday in August, and closed on Tuesday night following, 4 were converted and 16 joined the church all of whom were penitents. We were sorry to leave so many at the altar crying for mercy, but having no help we were compelled to close. Our Presbyterian brethren seemed to take great interest in the meeting.

Thus we have been preaching and laboring as best we could for the good of the people on my circuit, and I do thank God that He has blessed my labors Up to this time 120 have joined our church, and between 40 and 50 have professed faith in Christ.

Most all that joined have been at the altar for prayer, only those who belonged to other churches and were converted before they came to us.

We have received about 15 from other branches. Not unto us, but unto God, be all the glory both now and forever. Amen!

My brethren in the ministry, pray for me!

Rev. Thos. A. Coon sends the following cheering news of the revival of God's work:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: We commenced a protracted meeting at Wesley Chapel, on Saturday, August 22, and continued 13 days. The Lord was with us to own and bless the labors of his servants in the work of saving souls.

The meeting resulted in 20 conversions, and 27 accessions to the Church. The membership were greatly revived. We had, indeed a "feast of fat things." Such a revival influence had not before, been felt in the history of this Church. The young and the old, were alike impressed, with the great importance of yielding to the invitations of the Gospel. Penitental tears flowed from eyes unused to weep. Fathers, mothers, and children, were all represented in the number of those, who despairing of their own self-sufficiency, sought the "pearl of great price" and were filled with the "hidden manna" of God's love. Shouts of praise welled up from hearts overflowing with love to God and man. Secular interests were forgotten in the desire to promote the glory of God, in the salvation of souls. Our congregations were large and attentive, a spirit of seriousness pervading even the minds of those who could not be induced to cast in their lot with the people of God. Many of these expressed an intention to repent at some future time. May God in his infinite mercy, spare these, until they too shall realize the blessedness of pardoned sin!

Rev. J. F. Butt of Charlotte, was with us five days and nights. Bro. Butt labored faithfully, earnestly, and efficiently both in the pulpit and the altar. Doubtless, many who attended his ministry, will rise up in the "morning of the resurrection, and call him blessed." Bro. W. P. Williams, a local minister of this Circuit, and a resident of Davidson College, preached us one most excellent sermon. Family affliction prevented his remaining longer. Bro. Kistler was also, with us a short time, and by his preaching, his prayers, and his exhortation in our love-feast, contributed much to the happy results of the meeting. Bro. Brown encouraged us with his presence and by his labors.

We feel profoundly thankful to the great Head of the Church, for the recent, special displays of his presence and power in midst, and with humble reliance upon him, who is the source and fountain of all blessing. We hope to reap, still more abundant harvests from the seed that have already been sown.

HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE, by Henry E. Shepherd, Prof. of the English Language and Literature, Baltimore City College. E. J. Hale & Son, Publishers, New York, $1.50.

The study of the English language, its origin, growth, varied changes, and present perfection, is one of the most interesting and, at the same time, instructive subjects of investigation that one can pursue. The history of any language is at the same time a history of the people who use it. The inner life of a people is mirrored in the words and forms of expression by which they give utterance to their ideas and feelings. As nations grow more civilized and intelligent, their languages undergo as great a change as does the prattle of an infant to the smooth, full, exact and perfect speech of the philosopher or orator. The English language, especially, shows in itself the divers and complex elements of which the English race is composed and the progress it has made in civilization. The work under notice gives a full history of the language, from the time of the Teutonic invasion of the British Isles down to the Georgian Era. It is not a history of English literature, but only an account of the origin and gradual upbuilding, in the face of many difficulties, of the English tongue. Its origin and kinship with other languages are fully discussed, and an insight is afforded (which all should have who speak and write it,) into the language which is becoming, if it is not already, the leading tongue of the world, because it is the tongue of the leading race on the globe.

The author is a native of Fayetteville, N. C., and a son of the late Hon. Jesse G. Shepherd.

The book is published in excellent style by Messrs. Hale of New York, who are establishing a deservedly high reputation as publishers.

THE SERVICE OF SONG, A Treatise on Singing in private devotion in the Family, in the school and in the worshiping Congregation, by Rev. A. G Stacy A. M. A. S. Barnes & co., N. Y. 1874. Price $1. 50.

This is a valuable and exhaustive consideration of the importance of cultivating and exercising the powers of song in the worship of God. It assigns the "service of song" to its true and prominent place in divine worship. The author gives a general and scriptural view of the employment of music, by singing and instruments, in the ancient Jewish system and also under the christian dispensation. He tells who should sing, how and what and why they should sing, and discourses of choirs melody and harmony, of articulation, accent and attitude, of instrumental music, of spiritual singing and of the power of song.

A learned and highly commendatory introduction of the work is given by Rev. Dr. Summers, whose aid and encouragement the author acknowledges. It is a book of about 350 pages, and has been received with great favor, an evidence of which is that it has undergone a second edition. Ministers and all others who wish to worship aright, will not make a useless and profitless investment by obtaining the work.

A MEMPHIAN'S TRIP TO EUROPE, with Cook's Educational party, to which is added letters from several other parties, by Rev. Saml. Watson. Published for the author by the Southern Methodist Publishing House. Nashville, Tenn.

Ever since the time when the spies sent out by Moses to view the land of Canaan returned with their wondrous stories to the astonished Israelites, the narrations of travelers have possessed a peculiar interest to the listener and reader. We love to hear and are profited by learning of far-off peoples, their cities, their climate, their habits and customs of society and political government. What we are prevented from seeing with our own eyes, we can, thanks to the cheap and rapid production of books, see with the eyes of others. There are many histories of travels written and published, but in every one there is something new. Every traveler views objects from a different stand point and discovers features which escape the observation of others. Rev. Mr. Watson's letters to the Memphis AVALANCHE, which are now gathered in book form, are fresh and well written and disclose the fact that he traveled with eyes and ears open and viewed cities and objects with an intelligent and appreciative mind. The book contains other letters written by several gifted authors who were companions of Mr. Watson.

We are indebted to the kindness of Rev. Dr. Redford for the book and return our acknowledgments.

State And Local.

— We invite special attention to the new advertisement of B. H. Wood, which appears in this issue. He has an excellent assortment of family groceries and we feel assured that he will sell at bottom figures. Give him a trial, satisfy yourself that he will do as well by you as you can do elsewhere.

Rev. J. D. Huffham has been chosen associate editor of the BIBLICAL RECORDER. For several years, it will be remembered, Mr. Huffham was connected with the paper. We congratulate the friends of the paper and the Baptists of the State upon securing the service of one so competent for the position.

— NEW GOODS.—We were shown through the large dry goods establishment of Alex. Creech Esq. a few days since, and must say that he has displayed remarkable good judgment and taste in the selection of his fall and winter goods. His stock is very large and contains everything usually kept in his line. He has purchased at such figures as will enable him to sell as cheap as the cheapest. Mr. Creech is undoubtedly one of the best merchants in the South, and he has a large number of first class clerks who are always attentive and polite to customers. Be sure to give Mr. Creech a call. His new advertisement will appear in our next.

— The Grand Lodge of Good Templars met in New Berne last week. They had a pleasant and harmonious session.

— Dr. W. W. Gaither has established a Drug Store in Lenoir.

— A large lot of tobacco was recently seized by revenue officers in New York for want of proper stamp.

— Rev N. C. Hughes, late pastor of St. Paul's Church, Washington, N. C. has been elected Professor in the University of the South, an Episcopal Institution situated at Sewanee, Tenn.

— Gen. J. M. Leach will deliver the annual addresses before the Cumberland and Sampson Fairs.

— An examination of the accounts of the late County Treasurer, A. Mebane, Esq., reveals a discrepancy in the accounts of that officer of $3,721.

We learn that the Board of Commissioners has instituted suit against Mr. Magnin's sureties for recovery of the deficit.

— All our Eastern and Southern exchanges agree that there will be a very large falling off in the cotton crop this year. This is owing, in some sections to the rust, in others to the August drought.

— A call has been issued for the holding of a State Dentists' Convention during the approaching Fair.

— The Newbern Times says: A number of merchants met last night at the Chamber of Commerce for the purpose of taking steps looking to the establishment of a line of steamers between this city and Hyde county. After considerable discussion a committee consisting of Messrs. Wolfenden, Watkins, Berry and Allen were appointed to perfect a plan and report at a meeting to be held subject to the call of the chairman.

— IMPORTANT TO GUARDIANS AND ORPHANS.—Judge Henry has issued the following order to the Judge of Probate of the several counties composing the 6th Judicial District:

SIXTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT, IN CHAMBERS,
Raleigh, Sept. 18, 1874.

Attention of Judges of Probate is called to page 455, section 46, Battle's Revisal. A strict compliance with the statute will be enforced, and the reports therein required must be made on Monday of the first week of the term.

J. L. HENRY,
Judge, &c.

The following is the section of the code referred to:

"The grand jury of every county is charged with, and shall present to the Superior Court the names of all orphan children that have no guardians, or are not bound out to some trade or employment. They shall further enquire of all abuses, mismanagement and neglect of such guardians as are appointed by the Court of Probate. The Judge of Probate shall, at each regular term of the Superior Court, lay before the grand jury a list of all the guardians acting in his county or apprentice appointed by him."

—LITERARY.—We learn that Col. Peck, proprietor of "Our Living and Our Dead," has secured the services of T. B. Kingsbury, Esq., as a contributor to his magazine.

— Col. Sim G. Hayes has leased Cook's Hotel of this city and will soon have it in readiness to accommodate boarders.

— The work of putting down new carpets in the two halls of the General Assembly is progressing. Both rooms are being thoroughly cleansed out and will be in order for the reception of the legislature.

— The following letter has been received by Dr. W. H. Howerton, Secretary of State. Any person having information of the young man's parents or relatives, would oblige by writing to Mr. Kelly, stating particulars:

MASSILLON, O., Sept. 15, 1874.
To the Secretary of the State of North Carolina:

DEAR SIR—While in command of Co. A, 104th Ohio Reg., in March, and while on the march from Wilmington to Kingston, in either Jones or Lenoir county, I picked up a boy about 8 years of age. He could tell his name and that was about all. He has grown to be a stout young farmer. A few days ago he requested me to try to find his parents. At the time of finding him he gave his name as John Franklin. What parties in the locality mentioned had I better address? Please advise and oblige,

Respectfully yours,
GEORGE V. KELLY.

Commission Merchant.

Nos. 5 Martin St. and 5 Exchange Place.

Having succeeded to the business of Mr. Lynn Adams, I am prepared to offer to the public the best inducements in my line and respectfully ask a continuance of the trade hitherto given Mr. Adams, promising to give satisfaction in all cases.

In addition to my regular line of goods, I have on hand a full stock of the

made in Wake county, and adapted especially to the farmer's use.

I have just returned from the North where I purchased a full line of choice groceries and am now daily adding to my stock. I promise those who may favor us with their custom to give them as good bargains as they can get elsewhere.

A. H. TEMPLE,

I most respectfully ask my former patrons and friends to patronize Mr. Temple my successor, who will, I am assured, give satisfaction to all.

I will still keep my office, as Cotton Factor, in the same building.

CARY COTTON GIN.

The Latest, Best and Cheapest.

I offer the public the latest improved Cotton Gin, as well as the cheapest. The following certificates from well known gentlemen, will be more satisfactory than any thing I can say

NEAR CARY, N. C., Nov. 19th, 1873.

This is to certify that I am using one of the Cary Gins made by W. M. Sorrell, of Cary, N. C., and that I am well pleased with it and would cheerfully recommend it to any one wanting a good Gin.

A. B. YATES.

CARY, N. C., May 22nd, 1874.

It is a pleasure in saying that the fifty Saw Cotton Gin I purchased from Mr W. M. Sorrell, known as the Cary Gin, is far better work than any Gin I have heretofore used, though costing from 50 to 100 per cent. less money. I think any person in want of a Gin will save money by purchasing the Cary Gin. Its performance has been entirely satisfactory to me. I can cheerfully recommend it to others.

A. F. PAGE

We certify that the Cary Gin has given entire satisfaction to our neighbors, who have tried it, and we think it an excellent gin.

TO THE Wholesale Trade.

—:o:—

Judging the future by the past, we enter with confidence upon this our new enterprise, of separating our Wholesale from our Retail Trade, by having a separate as I did it from the first, and in doing so we flatter ourselves that it will not only meet the approval of our numerous customers, but that an "Exclusive Wholesale House" will bring us a large influx of new trade, and of a character not heretofore enjoyed.

It must be obvious to every buyer that a strictly "Wholesale House," arranged and adapted for that Trade only, with a corps of experienced Wholesale Salesmen, with a Stock carefully selected for that Trade only, and moreover, the avoidance of coming in contact with retail buyers. Such a house, we assert, must and will commend itself to the trade.

Four years ago we advertised that we intended to make Charlotte a wholesale mart and ours "The Wholesale House." We now have the proud satisfaction of seeing it an accomplished fact.

We now call attention to the fact that we have converted our superb store into an exclusive Wholesale House, where you can find all lines of goods necessary for a country store, to wit: Dry goods Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Notions, Groceries, Hardware, Millinery, all in complete lines, bought in large quantities and from the very first hands.

Our stock is now arriving and will be complete about the 1st of September, and will be the largest of any have, the pretensions of others to the contrary notwithstanding. We respectfully invite your personal inspection, or write to us for circulars.

Very truly yours,
WITTKOWSKY & RINTELS.

—:o:—

RETAIL

Now, a few words about that. We now occupy the superb house heretofore so favorably known as the Messrs. Brem, Brown & Co.'s Dry-goods House, to carry on our Retail business, and as "Excelsior" is, and has always been, our motto, we claim also in that line to excel in stock, to excel in lowness of prices, and to excel generally. We will in that line, have a corps of thirty salesmen and Sales-Ladies, all experienced, affable, and obliging.

We will make the Millinery branch a specialty

GREAT DISCOVERY.

BRADLEY'S PATENT ENAMEL PAINT,

Made from Pure White Lead, Linseed Oil & Zinc, & Always Ready for Use.

READ THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS:

From Prof. W. G. Simmons, Wake Forest College, North Carolina.

WAKE FOREST COLLEGE, N. C., Oct. 4, 1873.

Mr. C. P. Knight—Dear Sir: We have for several months been using your Bradley's Patent Enamel Paint on our College Building, and are well pleased with it. Though it was applied by one having no experience in such work, yet we have a good job.—We shall continue to use it—believing that in point of economy durability and facility of application, it is superior to any other pigment offered in the market.

W. G. SIMMONS.

From S. McGill, M. D.

THE PLAINS, FAUQUIER Co., Va., Feb. 6, 1873.

Mr. C. P. Knight.—Sir: The Paint came safe to hand as ordered, 2 kegs, 5 gallons each, and 3 buckets, 1 gallon each. As practice was slack, I did the job myself. Two weeks (not constant) only, completed the house, two coats; the last coat I applied thick and it is now generally conceded, that, for "enamel" like hardness, and body, and harmony of colors, there is not a handsomer job in the place. I saved sixty-five dollars by the operation—which is an item just now with Southern people! It should be generally adopted in this State. Any country lad can apply it. I have never dabbled in such stock as "testimonials," but I feel so forcibly the great adaptability of your "Enamel Paint" to the wants of our people—in excellency of material, in beauty of color, and in the fact of its being "ready mixed," that I give you permission (if it is desirable to you) to make what use you think proper of this letter. Very respectfully and truly,

S. McGILL, M. D.

From the Vestry of Mount Calvary Church

Baltimore, August 13, 1874.

Mr. C. P. Knight—Dear Sir: We take pleasure in testifying to the excellent qualities of the Paint obtained from you, and applied to the exterior of Mount Calvary Church, in this city. It has now been nearly two years since it was put on, and for beauty of color, freshness of gloss and durability, it has fulfilled our largest expectations. Respectfully yours,

BARNARD GARVEY,
S. C. CHEW, M. D.,
JAMES M. ANDERSON,
BENJ. C. BARNOLL.

From Messrs. Englehard & Saunders, Editors and Proprietors "Journal."

WILMINGTON, N. C., Dec. 26, 1873.

We desire to call especial attention to the advertisement of "Bradley's Patent Enamel Paint." We can commend it from a knowledge of its merits. Some of the employees of this office having purchased some of this paint from Mr. C. P. Knight of Baltimore, have used it, and speak in the highest terms of it, after a trial of several months. While it is as durable as ordinary paint, it has a much finer finish, and its cost and convenience will recommend it to all in need of paint.

Always ready for use and easily applied.—Sold by the gallon. One gallon covers twenty square yards, two coats.

Specimens and Price List furnished gratis. Liberal inducements to the trade.

How Susie Went to The Party.

BY MRS. M. F. BUTTS.

"Let me see—Annie James, that's one; Jenny Tyler, that's two; Ellen Brown—"

"Surely you will not pass by Susie Hoyt,' said Mrs. Gray, interrupting her little daughter's calculations.

"Oh, mamma! how can I invite Susan? None of the girls ask her to their parties, and she hasn't a thing fit to wear, I am sure.'

"And yet'-here Mrs. Gray hesitated.

"Yet what, mamma?'

"Do you remember our talk last Sunday afternoon?'

Clara Gray blushed and was silent.

"Think a moment, and you will remember the exact words you said. I wish you would repeat them to me.'

"I believe I said, mamma, that I meant to make the Sunday-school lesson my rule all the week.'

"And that lesson was —'

"'Do unto others as ye would that they should do unto you.'

"Now, suppose you lived all alone with your sick mother; suppose you were too poor to dress like the other girls, and one of your few friends should give a party-what would you want done to you?'

"Of course I should want to be invited, mother; but I don't see what Susie can wear.'

"Perhaps that can be managed. I shouldn't think so much of this invitation if you and Susie were not on such friendly terms; but it seems to me cruel for you to pass her by, under the circumstances; besides she is a dear little girl, and I want you to become more instead of less her friend.'

"Indeed, mamma, I love Susie; but what can one do when nobody else invites her! Only the other day I was walking with her on the street, and Annie James met us and scarcely took any notice of her at all, though, she knows her well enough.'

"In that case, if anybody was to be left off your list, it should be Annie. You can never be one of Christ's children while you think more of pleasing your companions than of pleasing him.'

"I do want to please him,' rplied Clara, earnestly; "but I didn't think of that when I decided to leave Susie out. I will go over and ask her this afternoon; but I expect half the girls will stick up their noses at her.'

"And that will be hard for you to bear?'

"Why, yes, mother.

"Then you will have a chance to suffer for Christ.'

"Oh, mamma! do you really mean that?'

"It will be suffering in a small degree, and it will be for the sake of helping others. Christ plainly teaches that if we do any service to the weak and lowly, and neglected, we do it for him. We have a right to say, then, that you help Christ and suffer for him, in helping and suffering for Susie.'

"But can't we help about her dress?' said Clara, looking up with her eyes full of tears.

"I think so. I have a French nansook, but little worn, that I will make over for her if you will help me.'

"Oh, that will be splendid. We'll begin right off.'

"Then she must have a sash, and ribbons for her hair, and some pretty new boots.'

"That will cost a good deal,' said Clara, looking grave.

"Yes; but can't you think of a way to meet the expense?'

"No; can you?'

"Suppose you take the money the Uncle James gave you for ice cream.'

"O mother!'

"You will have quite enough refreshments without it; and every girl you invite, except Susie, eats ice cream so often that it's no luxury.'

"But everybody has it at a party.'

"Yes; and that is one reason why you will suffer in making this sacrifice If you attempt to do unto others as you want them to do to you, you cannot avoid that which is annoying to pride and troublesome in many ways. It is much easier for the present to flatter the rich and happy and neglect the poor and weak.'

Clara thought about giving up her ice cream for a few minutes; but she was not long in deciding in Susie's favor, for she liked to be generous. She liked Susie, and her mother's wish influenced her strongly. More than all, she earnestly desired to obey Christ and become one of his useful disciples. She had been taught that all growth comes from small beginnings, and goes on very slowly; and she saw plainly that here was a good chance to begin serving Christ by being truly kind to her little neighbor.

"I will give up the ice cream,' she said, presently.

"Very well,' replied Mrs. Gray; "then we will go out this afternoon and buy the ribbons and the boots, and cut the frock this evening. You are so near Susie's size that you will answer for a model.'

Clara ran to her room to get ready for shopping, and I think she was never quite so happy as she was that lovely September afternoon selecting the prettiest ribbons and trying on the daintiest boots for Susie Hoyt.

"Won't she be surprised, mamma? I am so glad you made me think of inviting Susie! How good you are to help me get her ready!'

These were some of the exclamations that fell from Clara's smiling lips as Mrs. Gray and her daughter went from one brilliant store to another to make their purchases. Before the next evening the nansook frock was done. It was made very simply, but looked so delicate and fresh that Clara was sure it would exactly suit Susie, who, she declared, would look like a flower in it.

"Now write her a note,' said Mrs. Gray, "and we will make a parcel of the dress and boots and send it, with the note, by little Tom McNally'

So Clara wrote:

"My Dear Susie: I want you very much to come to my party next Wednesday afternoon at three o'cock. Mamma thinks it will not be convenient for your mamma to buy you any new things, so she begs you to accept the parcel that I send with this note.

"Your loving friend, Clara.'

When the freckled little Irish Tommy tapped at Mrs. Hoyt's door, Susie was washing the tea-dishes, almost covered up in a dark calico apron.

"Run to the door, dear,' said the feeble tones of the sick mother.

"Something for you,' said Tommy, smiling and showing all his white teeth.

"What can it be, mother?' exclaimed Susie, in a wondering voice, as she looked for the scissors to cut the hard knot that wouldn't yield to her, little fingers.

"I am sure I have no idea,' replied Mrs. Hoyt.

At that moment the package fell from the loosened cord, and the white frock, the delicate kid boots, and the fresh blue ribbons were scattered upon the floor. Susie was dumb with amazement.

"Here is a note,' said Mrs. Hoyt, detaching a bit of white paper from the folds of the dress. "Can't you collect your senses enough to read it?'

Susie was not long in making out the contents. She picked up the lovely things, and looked at them, and caressed them, and chatted over them full of joy and gratitude. At last her mother said that she had better finish the work and then she might try them on. So, when the last dish was put in the pantry and the kitchen was quite in order, she put on the frock and the shining blue sash, and buttoned the boots on her feet, that were as pretty as any girl's in the town. The blue ribbons suited exactly her blonde hair and delicate complexion, and very sweet she looked, I assure you.

"What do you suppose made Mrs. Gray so kind to me?' she said, throwing her arms around her mother's neck in her great joy.

"What do you suppose?' replied her mother.

"I think God must have told her how very happy she would make me. I had heard about Clara's party, and I wanted to go over so much!'

That night a very sweet, loving prayer went up to the kind Father who "careth for' us, and who delights to reward all who are truly patient and gentle and faithful. Susie went to the party, and Clara said afterwards that she was the prettiest and dearest girl in the room, and the happiest-except herself.

Farm, Garden & Household.

All dairy cows, when practicable, should have a respito from yielding milk from two and a half to three months previous to dropping their young. Nature demands this time for recuperation and the production of healthy offspring.

Tomatoes for Winter Use.—By the following method we may have tomatoes all the year round, which can scarcely be distinguished from those picked fresh from the vine. Dissolve a teacup of salt in a gallon of water. Pick ripe tomatoes, but not over ripe, leaving a little of the stem on. The tomatoes must be kept well covered with the brine, and they will keep till Spring or longer.

Whitewashing.—We hardly know a more pleasing sight than while whistling along on the various lines of railroads, to see a farm house, with all its out-houses and fences, exhibiting a snowy whiteness in striking contrast to the green fields. It at once impresses us that the occupant has at least an idea of cleanliness and beauty. Apart from all this, it is a preservative of wood, and it adds at least fifty per cent to the looks of the place, and in a sanitary point of view its use cannot be overestimated. Its cheapness places it in the reach of all. Why not use it freely?

Rules for Measurement.—The following rules for measuring corn and liquids will be of use to many of our readers:

1. Shucked corn.—Measure the length, width and depth of the crib in feet; multiply these three dimensions and their product by eight; then cut off two figures to the right; those on the left will be as many barrels, and those on the right so many hundredths of a barrel.

2. Unshucked corn.—Multiply as in rule 1st., in the above example, and the product obtained by 5½; then cut off two figures on the right, those on the left will be so many barrels, and those on the right so many hundredths of a barrel.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

The Cant of Imposters.

It is so obvious that physical and constitutional vigor is the best defense against disease, that even the vendors of drastic purgatives advertise them as tonic stomachics and invigorants, in the hope of enlisting in their defence of the public in the devitalizing and pernicious pellets. It is amusing to note how these impostors hesitate and cant the language in which the medicinal properties of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are described. Although the effect of their rasping evacuants is to destroy the tone of the digestive organs and the bowels, and to rob the system of its vital strength, they are unscrupulously recommended to the weak and prostrate victims of disease as stimulants! It is time this humbug (not a very successful one it is true, thanks to the mature common sense of the American people) was stigmatized as it deserved. Such mischievous falsehoods should be exposed pro bono publico. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, be it distinctly understood, is a stimulant. It has a spirituous basis, and that basis is the vehicle which diffuses its wonderful sanitary principles through every part of the system. The tonic, alterative and regulating ingredients of the Bitters would be comparatively inert if they were not, so to speak, carried to the localities where they are required by the stimulating agent. The cant which protests against the use of a pure alcholic fluid, when employed as a means of giving full effect to medicinal extracts of the highest quality, is the cant of charlatanism. Every intelligent physician so characterizes it, and the sick who are gulped, convulsed and debilitated by the nauseous and digesting nostrums of the parties who put it forth, soon find to their sorrow that it is a delusion and a snare. Hostetter's Bitters, the great sanitary stimulant of the age, is in the truest sense of the words, a wholesome, vitalising, renovating preparation.

Badley's Patent Enamel Paint.

It is but little more than a quarter of a century since the art of mixing paint was confined almost exclusively to a few comparatively speaking. Now, however, through the ingenuity of Hadley, we are not only enabled to apply the paint if we desire, but can now the shades in advance, sample cards being furnished gratis, with the different shades of tints necessary. Those who have used the "Enamel Paint," speak from experience, that it is all that is claimed for it, and evidently supercede the "old style paint." As an evidence of the great worth of the Enamel Paint, we most respectfully request all our readers to carefully read the certificate testimonials of Mr. C. P. Knight, in this paper.

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder-blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for a rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, has cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; the spirits are low; and although he is satisfied exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he dismisses every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the liver to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

Dr. C. M'Lane's Liver Pills, in cases of Ague and Fever, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a fair trial.

Address all orders to

FLEMING BROS., Pittsburgh, Pa.

P. S. Dealers and Physicians ordering from others than Fleming Bros., will do well to write their orders distinctly, and take none but Dr. C. M'Lane's, prepared by Fleming Bros., Pittsburgh, Pa. To those wishing to give them a trial, we will forward per mail, postpaid, on any part of the United States, one box of Pills for twelve three-cent postage stamps, or one vial of Vermifuge for fourteen three-cent stamps. All orders from Canada must be accompanied by twenty cents extra.

Sold by all respectable Druggists and Country Storekeepers generally.

Dr. C. M'Lane's Vermifuge

Should be kept in every nursery. If you would have your children grow up to be healthy, manly, and vigorous Men and Women, give them a few doses of

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,
Staunton, Va.,

Will begin its 25th annual session Sept. 17th, 1874. Rev. W. A. Harris, D. D., President, with an able corps of twenty-three Teachers and Officers. Modern languages taught and spoken by European Teachers. Music by seven Professors and Teachers.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world. Its marked effect is the rapid promotion of the physical health and vigor of our pupils. Those who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, chills and climatic diseases, are entirely restored.

Buildings elegant—fanned by the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery, making it one of the most delightful College homes in the Union.

The last session, one hundred and eleven young ladies attended this school, as boarding pupils from fifteen Southern States.

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONIALS.

From Bishop D. S. Doggett, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, located in Staunton, Virginia, under the Presidency of Rev. W. A. Harris, is, in my judgment, one of the best Institutions, for young ladies, in the South. I have occasion to know and appreciate its value by the advantages enjoyed by one of my daughters, now a pupil there. It possesses all the facilities of a thorough female education. Its personal accommodations are all that can be desired for health and comfort, or taste. No location could be more eligible; as scenery more magnificent; no atmosphere more salubrious, it is now in a state of great prosperity. I do not hesitate to recommend it to the patronage of all who wish their daughters to receive the benefits of a useful and ornamental culture.

D. S. DOGGETT.

From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.

The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the Church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music, advantages are offered of very high order. The most talented Professors are employed, and neither pains nor expense are spared to make this department eminent. The School is very prosperous, and deserves to be so.

From Prof. F. H. Smith, M. A. L. L. D. University of Va.

The Wesleyan Female Institute, at Staunton, deserves the brilliant success it enjoys. It has a good corps of teachers, a beautiful situation, and excellent management. Having had a daughter under Mr. Harris' care, during the present session, my observation leads me to believe this school to be one of the best of Female Seminaries which adorn our State.

FRANCIS H. SMITH.

FLOUR! FLOUR!! FLOUR!!!

Leach Brothers,

No. 3 Exchange Place,

RALEIGH, N. C.

We beg leave to call the attention of the Trade in Central North Carolina to our large and well selected stock of

"FAMILY," "EXTRA" AND "SUPERFINE" FLOURS.

We feel confident we can duplicate any thing in our line in Baltimore or Norfolk, freight and cartage added.

Our Mr. Christopher Hoyt, who resides at the latter place, has for the past eight years been connected with the large and well known grocery House of Messrs. H. K. Thurber & Co., and has consequently been connected with the Flour Exchange in that city, as their buyer of Flour, which gives us every advantage of the largest buyer in New York, as well as Baltimore or Norfolk, enabling us to offer Flour in this market for the first time STRICTLY AT FIRST HANDS, and with only one profit to the retailer.

Our facilities for handling these goods being equal to any house South of New York, and begin them at "Hard Pan" price, for cash, we are determined to handle them at as small a margin as any house in these Northern cities.

Samples sent upon application and prices guaranteed.

We also offer the same inducements in general

RESTORE YOUR SIGHT.

Spectacles Rendered Useless.

Save Your Eyes,

RESTORE YOUR SIGHT,

THROW AWAY YOUR SPECTACLES.

Old Eyes Made New.

All diseases of the Eye successfully treated by

Dr. J. BALL & CO.'S

NEW PATENT IMPROVED IVORY EYE CUPS.

Read for yourself and Restore your Sight.

Spectacles and Surgical Operations rendered useless. The Lacrimal duct flowing of delight is made perpetual by the use of the new PATENT IMPROVED IVORY EYE CUPS.

Many of our most eminent physicians, oculists, students and divines have had their sight permanently Restored for life, and cured of the following diseases:

1. Impaired Vision; 2. Presbyopy, or Paralysis of Vision, commonly called Blurring; 3. Amaurosis, or Weak Eyes; 4. Diplopia, Running or Watery Eyes; 5. Sore Eyes—speedily treated with the Eye Cups—cure guaranteed; 6. Weakness of the Retina, or Optic Nerve; 7. Ophthalmia, or Inflammation of the Eye and its appendages, imparted either from the effects of Inflammation; 8. Photophobia, or Intolerance of Light; 9. Overworked Eyes; 10. Myiodesopsia—moving specks or floating bodies before the eyes; 11. Amaurosis, or Obscurity of Vision; 12. Cataracts; Partial Blindness; the loss of sight.

Any one can use the IVORY EYE CUPS with the aid of doctor or medicine so as to receive immediate beneficial results and never wear spectacles; or, if using now, lay them aside forever. We guarantee a cure in every case where the directions are followed, or will refund the money.

2,500 CERTIFICATES OF CURE

from honest Farmers, Mechanics and Merchants—some of them the most eminent leading professional and business men, and women of education and refinement, in our country—can be found at our office.

Under date of March 20 Hon. Horace Greely, of the New York Tribune, writes: "J. Ball, of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

Prof. W. Merrick, of Lexington, Ky wrote, April 24th, 1869: "Without my spectacles I can read the finest type, after using the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS thirteen days, and this Morning perused the entire contents of a daily newspaper, and all with the unassisted eye.

"Pray am grateful for your noble invention. May Heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using spectacles twenty years; I am seventy years old.

Truly yours, PROF. W. MERRICK."

Rev. Joseph Smith, Malden, Mass., cured of Partial Blindness of 15 years' standing, in one minute, by the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS.

E. T. Ellis, late Mayor of Dayton, Ohio, wrote us, Nov. 13th, 1868: "I have tested the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS, and I am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them. They are the greatest invention of the age."

Wm. Healy, M. D., Salina Ky., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions, my sight is fully restored, after being almost entirely blind for 26 years.

Alex. N. Wyeth, M. D., Alsdorf, Pa., writes: After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by paralysis of the optic nerve, by using the celebrated your PATENT EYE CUPS restored my eyesight permanently in three months."

All persons wishing for full particulars, certificates of cures, prices, &c., will please send their address to us, and we will send our pamphlet on the ILLUSTRATED PHYSIOLOGY AND ANATOMY OF THE EYE, consisting of one hundred pages, free of charge, by return mail. Write to Dr. J. Ball & Co. P. O. Box 957. No 91 Liberty Street, New York City, N. Y.

For the worst cases of MYOPIA or NEAR-SIGHTEDNESS we use NEW PATENT MYOPIC ATTACHMENTS, applied to the IVORY EYE CUPS. Has proved a certain cure for this disease.

Send for pamphlet and certificates—free. Work no more cooney by adjusting huge glasses on your nose and disfiguring your face.

Communicated.

For the Advocate.

Notes From Virginia.

Mr. Editor: Things are moving in Virginia some, but not as fast as they [illegible]. Indeed we are very much afraid they may not move in the same direction and fall into the same kind of ministerial tracks. We are but a mile off here, but ours is a political paradise by comparison with some of our Southern sisters. If there is any light out of the darkness in which the South is now struggling, it is very dimly dim, and shines at a very great distance from us. The cool of nations alone can deliver us—for man has proven all the help and devices of man.

I suppose you see the Methodist Advocate (the organ of the Northern branch of the church) published at Atlanta, Ga. It is edited by E. Q. Fuller, D. D., who seems to be fallen of late—late—and all unclerishable—for the great reconstructor of the South, Bishop Haven, whose organ grinder he seems to aspire to be—or is, by selection. In his last issue I noticed an editorial on "What Shall Be Done for the Individual," and by the side of it a strong commendation of an article from the Methodist, a "Southern Fellow," the most vindictive article that has appeared in that paper for months;—Mr. Fuller says it is "wise and timely." I have not seen a number of this Advocate that has not been indecently filled with [illegible] and misrepresentations of the South. Even "religion" has not been sacred for one individual."

Well, Dr. Lucas spoken to you through the Richmond Advocate. I hope to see his letter in your paper.—If his self just what Nimshi knew he would say. Dr. L. laid down his platform at the General Conference, and he is not the man to be taking out and putting in planks to suit the notions or places where he may be for the time. As I started Bro. Black after him, and as the Dr. has explained what of me had remarked his utterances but a few weeks before, and then remembered the utterance) would have needed no explanation, it is but right for me to say that my object in writing the sentence, upon which Bro. Black commented in his letter, has been obtained. The Dr. has told me, in his letter, not one word I did not know or believe before he wrote. But others did not know all that I did, and there was constantly coming up from different sections the same wonder that seemed to fill Bro. Black's mind. I hope Bro. B. and all concerned are as well satisfied as Nimshi as to the Dr.'s soundness on the subject of fraternity, not union.

Temperance seems to be the absorbing subject just now. All the Advocate family are burdened with the subject. The last Nashville Advocate had nine guns loaded with solid shot, and aimed at either the rule as it stands, or at the one proposed, but all of them intensely in favor of the abolition of the evil, and each of them having the very best plan for the accomplishment of that much desired object. The firing of that big gun—by the "Nestor of Methodism" down in Georgia, seems to have ignited all those of lighter metal all along the line. Well, the big one did but little execution for it seemed to be aimed at both sides, and hit neither. But it made a noise, and created some commotion and stir, and this is about all, I fear, that will result from the heated discussion now going on. In Va. the battle is joined. Dr. Edwards took the lead against the proposed rule.—He was replied to by Bros. Cheatham and Garland, and so I fear we will have it—"charge Chester, charge! on Stanly on!" from now till Conference, to the detriment of the Church and no good to the world. I learn that some who voted for the rule at the General Conference say they did so simply to bring it before the Annual Conferences that they might have a fair chance to oppose it. If this be so, I fear they will air their rhetoric at a fearful cost to the peace and quietude of the church. The whole subject, in any and every form, is a fearful evil in the land. The church cannot tolerate evil in her membership and be a re straining and converting power among men. She must be pure, if she would be powerful for good. This, I doubt not, is what we are all aiming at, but we are surely taking strange roads to reach the same end. I very much fear, from present indications, that more harm than good will be done by the heated contest going on.

The General Conference of 1868 gave an interpretation to the law as it is, or was, which, in my judgment, met all the demands of that time and this, if it was put in force, or could be enforced. It was that the violation of the rule as it then stood, "was to be regarded as an immorality, and was to be treated as any other immorality." I can stand by this, and find grounds enough to meet all the demands upon me. In my humble judgment, we need spirituality more than we need new rules. Yet I shall be content if the new rule should become the law of the church, and as far as its obligations may rest upon me to keep or enforce, I shall do my best in both respects.

"Emotional Religion."

Such is the heading of an article in a recent number of the New York Sun. It begins by saying, that "genuine religion is not so much a matter of feeling as of principle. It begins in right thinking, develops itself in right acting, and ends in a condition of love to God and good will toward men." This is a very good statement of the beginning, progress and maturity of religious growth in an individual; but this clear statement is followed by expressions of doubtful propriety.

The first paragraph ends thus: "The transient excitement produced by singing, praying, and impassioned exhorting, which multitudes esteem the chief element of religious experience, is found, in practice, to be of so little avail in making men honest and good, that it has ceased to command the respect of sensible people, and the real article of which it is a counterfeit comes to be despised along with it."

Was this a sneer at singing and praying generally, or was it only intended to apply to those meetings, examples of which are often met with among the colored people, where religious frenzy is regarded as an evidence of faith? If its aim was against prayer meetings generally, it shows a want of information in regard to the scriptural injunctions, to assemble frequently, to "pray without ceasing," to sing and make melody in our hearts. To condemn a good thing, because some have abused it, is quite as wise as to abandon all kinds of wealth, because some have made it a means of corruption.

The second paragraph begins thus: "Whatever gushing orators and sensational preachers may say to the contrary, it is no more possible, in the ordinary course of things, to pass directly from a state of sinfulness into a truly religious state than it is for a confirmed invalid to be at once restored to health." "Gushing orators" should inform the editor that the work of grace is not in the ordinary course of things, and that the Pentecost and Paul's conversion, together with many other recorded instances, show very sudden and powerful changes of purpose, in which persons entered into a state preparatory to a growth in grace. Nothing is easier—nothing is more common than to see persons suddenly seized with a desire to change their mode of life; following these sudden desires is the sudden change of purpose, and the after development is simply a strict adherance to the purpose, whether that purpose was the result of an hour's or a year's deliberation.

Of the ten commandments the editor says, "They point out sins which are not to be committed, without saying anything of church going, revivals, prayer meetings, or hearing sermons." This expression smells very strong of an inward hatred to experimental religion. Such a man would scorn and sneer at David for saying "I was glad when they said unto me let us go unto the house of God." He would probably crucify Christ for commanding that the gospel should be preached to "every creature." He would stone the prophet for saying, "cry aloud and spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet and show my people their transgressions." He would blaspheme God for promising to hear the cry of the afflicted. The editor says, finally, "It is seen that there is no incompatibility between the most fervid religious experiences and thorough scoundrelism in every day life." That smells strong of skeptical brimstone. We suspect the editor is the victim of some canting hypocrite of the New England puritan ical type. Some modern Judas Iscariot has certainly disturbed the equilibrium of his temper, or else he has found vent for pent up wrath against experimental religion.

Greensboro' District Conference.

The Greensboro' District Conference convened in the Methodist Church in the town of Lexington, N. C., on the 3rd day of September, 1874, and was opened with impressive religious services, conducted by the Presiding Elder, Rev. Dr. N. H. D. Wilson.

T. L. Rawley was elected Secretary, and Rev. R. G. Barrett, Assistant.

The attendance of ministers and delegates during the sessions of the Conference was very good.

Verbal reports upon the various interests of the church, made by the pastors and delegates, show that the spiritual and financial status is generally very good, that there have been several gracious revivals of religion within the District, and quite a number of conversions and accessions to the church.

The Sabbath schools were reported as being in a more prosperous condition than ever before.

The improved mode of conducting them, together with an increased zeal of a devoted ministry, lesson papers, black board exercises, &c., is destined to make them, under the blessing of the Great Head of the Church, a power in the land.

The financial exhibit of the District shows that the various interests of the church are receiving due attention; that pastors will generally receive the full amount of their salaries, and that the various collections will be met.

Several new churches have been recently built and others repaired, and the construction and repairs of parsonages are receiving some attention.

The subject of education, generally, was discussed, and although this District has been called the "Athens" of the N. C. Conference, yet there is found to exist a great deficiency and almost criminal neglect among our people on that question, and the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this District Conference, that as soon as a proper plan can be determined upon, and a suitable person or persons can be secured, separate High Schools for males and females, preparatory to our colleges, be established in this District and recommended to the support of all our people.

Resolved, That our Presiding Officer appoint a committee of five to carry out the objects of this resolution, of which he shall be ex-officio chairman.

Resolutions were presented and adopted, fully endorsing the management of the Presidents, Faculties and boards of Trustees of Trinity, Greensboro' Female and Davenport Female Colleges and their agents, Rev. B. B. Culbreth, Rev. L. L. Hendren and Rev. T. J. Gattis to all our people.

The following resolution was offered and adopted:

WHEREAS, We have learned that the sons of our beloved and lamented Brother, Rev. N. F. Reid, D. D., intend to publish a book entitled, "The Life and Sermons and Speeches of Dr. Reid,"

Resolved, That we highly approve of the design and will hail with much pleasure the appearance of such a volume.

The following report on behalf of the committee on boundaries of circuits was adopted;

WHEREAS, The boundaries of several circuits of the District have been changed from time to time, and whereas our people are unwilling to undertake the getting up of parsonages on the circuits for the accommodation of the families of the preachers while the boundaries of the circuits are thus changing; therefore

Resolved, That this District Conference respectfully requests the Bishop and Presiding Elders, at our next Annual Conference, to arrange the circuits in this District in view of permanency, so that our people may be encouraged to build suitable parsonages at favorable points.

Our church literature was commended to all of our people, and the following resolution was offered and adopted:

Resolved, That we recognize in the Raleigh Christian Advocate a faithful exponent of our faith, and an earnest advocate of our church interests.—That we approve its management, and think that considering the quality and quantity of reading matter, it is furnished cheap enough to be found in every Methodist family.

The following persons were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference:

Rev. T M. Jones, D. D., Dr. A. W. Wollen, J. D. Paylor and T. L. Rawley—and Prof. O. W. Carr and J. M. Ward reserve delegates.

The following resolutions were offered and adopted:

Resolved 1st, That the thanks of this District Conference are most heartily tendered to the citizens of Lexington for the enlarged, liberal and cultured hospitality they have bestowed upon its members, and that we invoke the blessings of the Almighty upon them in all their interests.

2nd. That the thanks of this District Conference be tendered to the Pastor and members of the Presbyterian Church in Lexington for the kind tender of their house of worship for the use of the ministers and members of this Conference during our session.

3rd. That the thanks of this Conference are gratefully tendered to the Rail Roads for passing delegates for half fare.

The sessions of the Conference were cordial and great harmony prevailed, and the preaching was in "power and demonstration of the spirit." The closing sermon, on Sabbath night, preached by our beloved Presiding Elder, made a fine impression, and followed by protracted exercise by the Pastor, has been instrumental in the conversion of souls.

May the Great Head of the Church smile upon and bless the people of Lexington both spiritually and temporally!

P. S.—My absence from home has delayed this synopsis, which I hasten now to send.

Shall the General Rules be Changed?

The answer to this question is with the Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church, South—their General Conference, at its late session, having taken the initiative. We, with modest diffidence and respectful deference to others, must enter our protest against the proposed change, and offer a few reasons for it.

And, first of all, we have always considered these General Rules, as they were drawn up by Mr. Wesley himself, for his Societies, and adopted by the M. E. Church in America at the time of its organization, as containing in them, as they were, and not as they might be made, the fundamental condition of fellowship and membership in an organic association of people calling themselves Wesleyan Methodists. In this relation they have been recognized and regarded, from 1739 until 1874, before any one, by resolution or otherwise in as far as our recollection goes—and we were in the first delegated General Conference, where the right to act under this proviso commenced its date—and have been in this grand council down to our last—ever moved the General Conference to change these General Rules; either by adding any thing to them, or taking any thing from them. The Church South, it will be said, left out the article on buying and selling slaves. Yes, because it was Cæsar's business—and to Cæsar we left it. And, by the by, that single rule was not by Wesley at all, we believe, but by Bishops Coke and Asbury, to conform our moral Discipline to the United States policy—when the African slave trade was made unlawful. Hence, buying and selling, with an intention to enslave, was the crime forbidden. To buy slaves already enslaved by the law of the land, with an intention to enslave them, was a solecism.

But not to buy Africans smuggled in, contrary to the national law, these godly bishops made a term of membership in the American Methodist Church. If any one older than myself can gainsay this, let him come out. Hence, we take our stand on Mr. Wesley's General Rules, as Mr. Wesley laid them down, and as we took them up; and again declare that they are the fundamental law—declaring the condition both of fellowship and membership, in any and in every Wesleyan Methodist association.

Suppose these General Rules should be altered, even substantially—although kept in the Discipline and called the General Rules of the Methodists, they would not be the General Rules of Wesleyan Methodists. There can be no such Church or people upon any plan of association, except that matured by Mr. Wesley himself, and accepted by his followers.

We are sorry that, after so long a time, the first move we ever saw made in this direction—to change these fundamental laws of membership and fellowship in our Church—should have been made in the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South. We regret it, because if the Annual Conferences concur in the unfortunate move, as is provided for by three fourths vote, the example will be set, that whenever, by outside pressure of popular feeling, it may seem necessary to change the General Rules so as to conform them to some measure of moral reform, it will be done. The whole underlying element in this move, is to conform this condition of membership to the temperance idea of the times. No one would ever have thought of conforming our General Rules to this idea on the subject of liquor, but for this temperance enthusiasm—we mean total abstinence enthusiasm. For no one of sane mind will say that total abstinence from any thing that may be temperately used, ever was, or ever can be, a moral obligation per se. Mr. Wesley, like a wise man, made temperance one of his fundamental conditions of Methodist fellowship. But this he did—not upon the basis of total abstinence, but upon the basis of useless use of liquor. We suppose the idea of including all distillations of liquor, and all sale of it, never entered into his mind, for the good reason that what was obliged to be allowed, required both the others.

It is a maxim, very little below an axiom, that whatever is overdone is undone; and this in our opinion, is exactly what you will do, as Annual Conferences, if by the requisite majority, you concur in the action of your General Conference and make this change in our General Rules.

In the first place, you absolutely change the conditional ground of Church-membership of only six hundred thousand members already graduated into full fellowship, upon the moral basis of the General Rules, as they were—every one of whom, if their right of membership should ever be called into question, upon this added condition of membership, would be entitled to the plea, if he should choose to make it, of non-jurisdiction—on the grounds of your having changed the constitutional condition of his membership, and made it what would have prevented his becoming amenable to its bar, if it had been a condition then. If we are not mistaken, this forfeiture of membership, in the M. E. Church, South, would be under the malum prohibitum rule, rather than the malum in se. We insist on it, that the Church must not risk the making of things wrong, by laws of her own, when the proof of their being immoral, per se, is so utterly undiscernable to common consciousness. It is in vain for us Good Templars and others, to set up the plea that, because distilled spirits is, or can be, abused, that therefore no distillation or sale of it should be allowed by members of the M. E. Church, South. Against the daily habitual use of it, as mere dram drinking or when made up into a stimulating beverage, our General Rules have always provided. And far into my day, whenever it was in proof that any member of our Church was an habitual dram-drinker, in the face of this General Rule, he was arrested, and when the issue was made, if he said he had fought for liberty, and intended to have it, we cut him off. This, however, was never done then, only when abuse was evident and the practice entered into exemplary life. This was done then upon the General Rules—as containing the disciplinary law of our religious consociation.

But if this arbitrary change in the General Rules was made, and many members of the Church were to violate this new condition, you could not try them on the disciplinary law of the General Rules, as we did in primitive Methodism. You will have to try them under the rule for the trial of immoral members, as it now is, and will be, at least until 1878. And you cannot touch one of them until it has been determined that the crime complained of is expressly forbidden in the word of God. No other is made cognizable in your Discipline, as it now is.

The caution given us by Christ in his parable of the wheat and the tares, as it relates to Church purgation, means much—enough, at least, to guard us against making any thing sinful, as by the tradition of the elders. And while we deplore the devastation of fortune, fame, and family comforts, to say nothing of the moral desolations caused by intemperance—yet we would deplore the change in our General Rules, now in its travail for birth, through the Annual Conferences, for reasons with us strong enough to make us deplore its conception and pray for its miscarriage.

It is noteworthy in all moves of this sort, the enthusiasm is always when the move is from the strict to the extreme—itself, prima facie evidence of error in conception, and of folly in prosecution. As my good wishes for Methodism are now unquestionable; and as nothing worse will be charged against me, on account of my opinion herein expressed, than noviceism in theology, I declare that not one of all the advocates of this measure can show a single text in all the law of God which expressly forbids distilling as such, or the simply selling of liquor as such, or the temperate use of it at will, so as to justify any connection with it as sufficient to dissolve Church relations. And any move of this sort that will fail to execute, because, as common sense, consciousness of right will deny your right to lay down any conditions of Church rights, the reasons of which were not fairly deducible from the word of God, will always lead to a very hurtful demoralization in reference both to Church Discipline and Church authority. No, my brethren, never encumber our Church laws with impracticable rules—rather far rely on the force of moral suasion alone.

This proposed change in the constitutional terms of membership, if adopted, will never be enforced. Its legitimacy in reference to members now enrolled, I do capitally doubt, only at their own acceptance. It is unlawful, in as far as it may be judged to exceed Scripture authority. We say that this is an assessment in morals too much upon the basis of total abstinence ideas of temperance. Who does not see that the requirements of this pledge as a preliminary condition of members in our Church, would reduce us, at once, in effect, to a total abstinence association? And yet, if this change is made, this pledge is, at least, silently imposed, and silently taken; for, of course, if a candidate for membership should notify you that he excepted from his personal obligation so much of this law as allied it to the total abstinence pledge, you could not admit him, without making yourself simply ridiculous. It is the same in all respects. Both allow its use in cases of necessity. If a man takes the pledge of total abstinence, and goes to drinking, otherwise than medically, which is necessity, you expel him—and if a man joins our Church, knowing of this condition of membership (and know ye, if it is passed, it must be a sort of an only condition, or else a farce) and is found drinking, no matter how temperately, if it is not of necessity—as medicine—you must turn him out; for mind you, much of all moral conservatism of this sort is upon the principle of honor—and an honorable consistency must be preserved.

I beseech you, brethren never to rush out upon any tide of popular feeling, and make laws which cannot be enforced advantageously. In reference to some things we can get along very well without a specific law; but the moment we attempt to meet it by a stringent specific law—a sort of law always obnoxious to common sense—we place ourselves on the ridiculous roll—by making a fuss over a grievous sin which we voraciously outlaw and then endure; because we find out the common sense of the country and of the Church looks upon the measure as extra judicial. This will be the fate of this change, if it finds favor enough to get into our Discipline.

It is useless to deny it; if it becomes a law at all, it must be an ex post facto law, in reference to our present membership, if they are made amenable to it—or else we must occupy the anomalous position of a Church with a membership divided in its responsibility to law. In 1832 this thing was attempted by the General Conference in Philadelphia, with this difference; that it was sought then by the enactment of an ecclesiastical statute—for at that time Mr. Wesley's General Rules with us, was like the Ark of the Covenant among the Jews—too sacred to be touched by intermeddling officious hands. The enthusiasm then was just as it was in Louisville—overflowing all the limits of wisezeal. With all the signs of an overwhelming majority, crying "Vote! Vote!" When Bishop Soule, with his sense of constitutional laps, took the same ground we take now—that such a change in the conditions of Church membership, could not be levied on members already graduated into membership under the terms of membership as then required. And if they made a new levy of this kind, it could not act retrospectively, and a membership divided in relation to the legal right to membership, would be inevitable, if claimed on this ground. So overwhelming in its reasoning were his cautions against all ex post facto laws that the bill hardly got a minority vote.

And more, in so far as the Church must have to do with the liquor question, let the General Rules alone. For in so far as the non-use of spirituous liquors, except in cases of necessity, is concerned, true Methodism has always been a grand temperance compact—as strong as this change can make it. And as to anything cognizable in distilling and in dealing in spirits, the less you have to do with abstract, per se, question, that better can you manage the moral. If I had to live my life over again, and be a pastor all the time, I would rather rely on our General Rules as they are, ten to one, than they will be if this change is made.

There is nothing necessary to put a distiller out of our Church, if he is refractory, but to try him under the first article in our General Rules, as they are—considering them as containing the fundamental conditions of fellowship in our Church; which is to be secured first "By doing no harm." Let the charge be, 'doing harm' and the specification, 'ministering to intemperance, for filthy lucre's sake, and where the case is notorious, as a distillery would be, you will never fail to get a verdict of guilty—I never did. You cannot be flung in this issue. Everybody knows that running a distillery, as a business, is doing harm.

I offer no apology for trying to get my views before my brethren—who are soon to vote on this question—nor for advising them to give a strong negative vote. I am as true a Methodist as ever lived.

What Men Need Wives For.

What does a man need a wife for? It is not merely to sweep the house, and make the beds, and darn the socks, and cook the meals, chiefly, that a man wants a wife. If this is all, when a young man calls to see a young lady, send him into the pantry to taste the bread and cake she has made; send him to inspect the needle-work and bed-making; or put a broom into her hands and send him to witness its use. Such things are important, and the wise man will look after them. But what the true man most wants of a wife is her companionship, sympathy and love. The way of life has many dreary places in it, and man needs a companion to go with him. A man is sometimes overtaken with misfortunes; he meets with failure and defeat; trials and temptations beset him, and he needs one to stand by and sympathize. He has some stern battles to fight with poverty, with enemies, and with sin, and he needs a woman that, while he puts his arms around her and feels that he has something to fight for, will help him fight; that will put her lips to his ear and whisper words of counsel, and her hands to his heart and impart new inspirations. All through life—through sunshine, conflict and victory, through adverse and favorite winds—man needs a woman's love. The heart yearns for it. A sister's or a mother's love will hardly supply the need. Yet many seek for nothing further than success in house work. Justly enough, half of these get nothing more. The other half, surprised above measure, have gotten more than they sought. Their wives surprise them by bringing a nobler idea of marriage, and disclosing a treasury of courage, sympathy, and love.—Exchange.

THE PASTOR'S WIFE.—Let your pastor's wife alone. Do not make her the subject of criticism. Find no fault if she does not work in the Sunday-school, or does not spend all her afternoons in visiting the families of the parish. Do not forget that she has household cares that are as important to her as yours are to you: that the interests of her family demand her presence at home, and that if these home-interests prevent her from doing work as a Sunday-school teacher, it is very unjust as well as unkind to sit in judgment against her. As to her visiting, she is not your pastor, but your pastor's help and companion. His interests, and the family interests, and the wife's personal interests are to govern the use of time, and not the exorbitant demands of the parish. Her duties are responsible and arduous. Visit her to cheer and comfort her, not to criticise her. And when she visits you treat her with such confidence and kindness as will secure for yourselves a place in her heart of hearts, and will bring down blessings upon your own souls.—Methodist Recorder.

RICH WITH A CLEAR CONSCIENCE.—Many a man is rich without money. Thousands of men with nothing in their pockets, and thousands with a good, sound constitution, a good heart and good limbs, a pretty good head piece, are rich. Good bones are better than gold, tough muscles better than silver, and nerves that flash fire and carry energy to every function are better than houses and lands. It is better than landed estates to have had the right kind of a father and mother. Good breeds and bad breeds exist among men as really as among herds and horses. Education may do much to check evil tendencies, or to develop good ones, but it is good to inherit the right proportion of faculties to start with. That man is rich who has a flavor of wit in his composition. The hardest thing to get along with in this life is a man's own self. A cross, selfish fellow, a timid, care-burdened man—these are all deformed on the inside. Their feet may not limp, but their thoughts do. A man of fortune, on the brink of the grave, would gladly part with every dollar to obtain a longer lease of life.

Rev. W. W. Eddy, of the Presbyterian Mission in Syria, has returned to this country with his family, to spend a year in recruiting his health, after an absence of ten years.

SCIENCE.

SEVEN comets were discovered in 1873. The first was observed by M. Stephan, at Marseilles, on the third of April; the second, by M. Tempel, at Milan, on the 3d of July, the third, by M. Borelli, at Marseilles, on the 20th of August; the fourth, by M. Paul Henry, at the observatory of Paris, on the 23d of August; the fifth, observed by M. Stephan, at Marseilles, on the 3d of September, the sixth, also by him, on the 20th of September; and the seventh, discovered by M. Coggia, at Marseilles, on the 10th of November—the beautiful comet which has just left our heavens.

PROFESSOR ESMARCH, of Kiel, has invented a new device for preventing hemorrhage in amputations. His mode of operating consists in wrapping closely around the limb elastic bands made of silk and India rubber, from below upward, a few inches above the place where amputation or excision is to be practised. There an India-rubber cord is tightly drawn around. The compression obtained by the bands empties the blood-vessels on which they are brought to bear, and the circular ligature prevents the blood which has been driven back from resuming its downward course. The bands are then removed, the ligature is left in its place, and the parts on which the surgeon is to use his instruments are as bloodless as if belonging to a dead body.

IN reference to opium treatment the Druggist of London says that a young lady who had been long accustomed to the use of opium, applied to an eminent physician to make hypodermic injections of morphia. He commenced by making the injections as desired, of morphia and water; by degrees the quantity of morphia was lessened without her knowledge, until within a few days nothing but pure water was injected—after each of which injections she would lapse into a quiet sleep, in the same manner as she had been accustomed to do under the actual use of morphia. This treatment was continued for several months, during which time tonics had been used to strengthen the system and bring about a healthy condition after being so long a time under the influence of opium. When he considered it safe to do so, he told her plainly that she had not taken a particle of morphia for months, and was entirely free from its influence. Her surprise and joy were great, and she is now entirely free from any desire for opium.

THE London Athenæum says that recent researches of Dr. Wetzsein, late Prussian Consul at Damascus, have brought to light the existence of an immense central ready, or valley, crossing the entire peninsula of Arabia from the mountains bordering on the Red Sea, which at times, during the rainy season, assumes the character of a large river, discharging its waters into the lower Euphrates, and which almost incontestably represents the Pison of Scripture; the position of the gold country of Havilah being determined by the connection of its name with those of Sheba and Ophir and the other descendants of Joktan, whose "dwelling was from Mesha, as thou goest unto Sephar, a mount of the east" (Gen. x. 30),—this latter being apparently connected with the Saphar of the Greeks and Romans.

THE ARTS.

A STATUE of Lord Palmerston will soon be unveiled in Paliament Square, London.

FRANCE is about to suffer an invasion of English architects. It is stated that a delegation of fifty members of the London Society of Architects is to cross the Channel on visit of inspection.

MR. LAUNT THOMPSON has recently been at work upon a medallion head of our Lord. It is in high relief, and is intended for insertion in a tablet, to be erected in a church in Westchester County, New York, in memory of the late Mrs. Gouverneur Wilkins. It is said to be a very beautiful work.

UNFERMENTED WINE.—Dr. Stayman, in the Western Planter, says: "To make unfermented wine, press your grapes and let the must stand about six hours to settle some. Then draw off the clearest and put into a boiler; heat it to the boiling point, and skim it. Then put it up into wine bottles, hot as you put up fruit, and seal air-tight, while hot, and keep it in a cellar. To keep the bottles from breaking, place a wet cloth several folds thick on the table, and set the bottles on it while filling them with hot wine."

Intemperance begets idleness, wastes substance, and promotes decay. It fills our prisons with convicts, homes with wretchedness, and the grave with victims.

We request all our preachers to look after renewals. Quite a number of subscriptions expire about this time, and unless they are promptly renewed, we shall be under the necessity of stopping the paper. We shall regret to lose a single name from our books, but we cannot afford to continue the paper upon an uncertainty. If all will renew and send up the money at Conference, the paper will be continued without extra charge.

Rev. C. W. Miller, one of the editors of the Central Methodist, has prepared an elaborate reply to Dr. Bledsoe's erroneous views on the subject of infant baptism, which is soon to be published in pamphlet form. We trust it will have a wide circulation among our people throughout the connection. Dr. Miller is one of the soundest men in our church, and he will show that Dr. Bledsoe is not sustained by pedobaptists in his views, but that he has totally misapprehended the teaching of the Bible and the Methodist Church on the subject.

We have received from Dr. Haygood a highly interesting article on the subject of missions which will appear in our next. The Doctor is full of missionary zeal and he has promised to keep our readers posted "from the mission field." The church is fortunate in having Drs. Haygood and McFerrin to represent her missionary work. They are the right men in the right place.

We publish in this issue several articles on the proposed change of one of our rules. Some are for and some are against. We have other articles on the same subject which came too late to appear this week. The discussion is taking a wide range. We have no disposition to cut off a full and fair discussion of the question, but we must ask brethren who write to be brief.

Rev. W. M. Robey, in a private note of September 28th, says: "We are in the midst of a deep religious interest in the college. Many of the pupils are penitents, and several have professed conversion. Our chapel prayer-meetings are most precious. It is indeed a privilege to witness the work of grace in these young hearts."

We record with feelings of sadness the death of Thomas B. Harris, of Chatham county. He died suddenly of apoplexy at his residence near Pittsboro the 30th ult. in the 65th year of his age. He was a prominent member of the M. E. Church South, and in his death the church has lost one of its truest and most faithful members. May the Father of mercies comfort the bereaved companion and children.

The revival which we noted in our last issue, as being in progress at Sidney, near this city, under the charge of Rev. J. E. Thompson, closed last week after a refreshing and profitable season. Twenty four were converted at the meeting and several penitents were left at the altar. Much good was accomplished there.

We are pained to learn from Rev. W. P. Williams that our excellent brother, Rev. Henry Asbury, of Lincoln, was badly burned from an explosion of kerosene oil on the 1st instant. He has been a faithful local preacher in our church for upwards of 40 years. There is but little hope of his recovery.

St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, New York City, Rev. James A. M. Chapman, D.D., is said to be the wealthiest Methodist Episcopal church in the United States. Its first regular pastor was Nathan Bangs, D. D. The present membership of the Church is five hundred and twenty-two. The collections for missions in the Church average from six thousand five hundred to eleven thousand five hundred dollars per year.

THE NEW RULE.—Denver, Illinois, and Missouri Conferences have voted almost unanimously against concurrence. Kentucky gives a strong vote for ratification.

Rev. B. H. McOwn, of Ky., who left the M. E. Church, South, in 1874 and joined the Presbyterians, has come back in a beautiful spirit to his old ecclesiastical home. We welcome him.

Bishop Pierce and Dr. McFerrin are traveling and preaching, like the first evangelists. They are crowding appointments on the Pacific shore.

In the railroad disaster at Waxahatchie, Ala., our church sustained an irreparable loss in the death of Judge William McKendree Byrd.

— The last number of the Texas Advocate gives accounts of revivals on six circuits of that State which resulted in 408 conversions.

Christ's Invitation.

Our Saviour's treatment to sinners is characterized by tenderness—love. How earnest his expressions—desires for their salvation! No broken-hearted father yearns so strongly for the return of his long lost son. No mother's heart bleeds so profusely over her wayward boy. The favorite attitude of Christ is one of invitation. "Come, for all things are now ready." "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." "Come follow me." And in an agony of grief He cries out: "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." His servants follow His example. Peter stands amid the multitudes crying, "come." Paul cries to all—the noble the great the small—to every tongue and condition, "come." But our Saviour surpasses Peter and Paul and the rest of the Apostles in the breadth of his invitation. His voice goes forth to all the world in its majestic fullness and sweetness to every one. "The spirit and the bride say come, and let him that heareth say come, and whosoever will let him come." The ministers of Christ catch up this cry—the invitation is heard from the Seaboard to the mountains. The circuit preacher, the station preacher and the Presiding Elder, are all crying "come." Thousands have come—and still they are coming. From every portion of our Conference, and the entire connection, we are greeted with good news from the church. Thus far it has been a remarkable year in the display of God's converting and saving power. But still there are others to come.—Sinner, will you hear this urgent call of your God and Saviour? Just now He is near you. Everywhere his voice is being heard. In the wilderness, almost without inhabitants; in the revival columns of religious press—in the multitude of returning souls that obey the sacred summons—all around you this gracious word is sounding—you can—you do hear it—the call is within you: "Come! come! come!" Will you obey the invitation? It is your Saviour calling you from your sins; calling you from endless and unspeakable night—a death that never dies, a fire that never shall be quenched. If you refuse to listen, you will grow deaf to the heavenly music. Perhaps you have refused to hear—to accept the blessed invitations of Christ, until his gospel, his ambassadors, his warning have lost their power—their charm. Some did this when he was upon earth. How sadly he exclaims: "Well did Esaias say, they have made their ears heavy that they cannot hear."

Dear reader, be not of this class. Despise not this divine entreaty.—Misinterpret it not. Say not it means laxity, indifference, everlasting long-suffering and opportunities of repentance. It declares the very opposite. "Come or the door will be shut—shut forever." Will you hear?—Will you listen? Will you return while God is near? Look to the Cross—the Saviour is uplifted high—he dies—he cries "it is finished"—love's redeeming work is done, come and welcome! Sinner, come to Jesus!

Communing with God.

The true Christian understands what is meant by communing with God. It implies power, peace of mind and heart—a sense of security and success in the noblest and truest sense. It has ever been the life of the Christian—a necessity to his spiritual growth and development. It was never more needful than now. Nervous, feverish activity rules in all spheres of life. "The iron wheels of the car which bears the modern idol of material progress whirl fast, and crush remorselessly all who cannot keep up the pace."

We believe there are few Christian duties more neglected than that of meditation and communion with God. We are in a hurry—busy thinking, discussing, defending, enquiring, teaching, and working so that we take no time and no leisure of heart for quiet contemplation, without which the exercise of the intellect and heart upon Christ's truth will not feed—and thus the soul is dwarfed—starved. These reflections we commend especially to the young converts who have thrown off their allegiance to the world, and united with the Church of Christ.

COURSE OF STUDY.—The whole of the subjects taught at Trinity are embraced in eleven schools, viz: Latin, Greek, Mathematics, English Literature, Natural Science, Mental and Moral Philosophy, Modern Languages, Theology, Engineering and Architecture, Analytical Chemistry, and Law. Students, or parents may select any school or schools, and hence any study may be prosecuted exclusively, by those who desire to do so.—These eleven schools embrace a range of study sufficiently ample for those times and this country. By reference to the Catalogue it will be seen that the amount of instruction and study in each school is up to the best standards.—Trinity Gazette.

"The New Rule."

BRO. BOBBITT: I desire to announce my position in reference to the "New Rule."

I am in favor of it. I voted for it it in the General Conference, and shall vote for it in the Annual Conference. I may perhaps, between this and Conference, give the reasons for the faith that is in me on this subject.

L. S. BURKHEAD.

Selby N. C. Sept. 24th 1874.

The New Temperance Law to be Adopted.

MR. EDITOR: It is well known to your readers, that our late General Conference passed a new law on the Temperance question.

The first law proposed for adoption by the General Conference read thus:

"Drunkenness or drinking spirituous liquors unless in cases of necessity, or making buying or selling them to be so used."

The law that was finally adopted read thus:

"Making, buying, selling, or using, as a beverage, intoxicating liquors."

When this law is concurred in by three fourths of the voters of all the Annual Conferences, then it becomes the permanent law of the church. The N. C. Conference will be required to vote on this question at the next session of our Conference to be held in Raleigh. I have been reliably informed, that the General Conference was unanimous in condemning the Drinking System including whatever is concerned in the production, circulation and consumption of intoxicating drinks, used as a beverage.—Some difference of opinion existed as to the best means of suppressing this great evil. The sentiments of "L" set forth in an article recently published in your paper would have been universally scouted by that venerable body.

"L" seems to be one born out of due time. He sets forth sentiments, which were born in the dark ages—which have been whipped and scourged by the higher sentiments of christian civilization, until they have skulked away from the homes of refinement and intellectual culture, and wandering over the earth as homeless and friendless criminals, have found no refuge to shelter their thunder scared heads, except in Hardshell communities and whiskey rings. "L" concludes that, "it is plain that we cannot adopt the new rule without overreaching our authority." In other words, he means to say, that the Methodist church has no right to make such a rule, as is now proposed for the concurrence of the Annual Conferences. The collective wisdom of our late General Conference saw that it was plain, that we could adopt such a rule without overreaching our authority, else it would not have been sent out for concurrence. But then the brain of L may be larger than that of the General Conference, although that splendid assemblage of talented laymen and learned divines was very illustrious for intellectual penetration and familiarity with constitutional law. However this may be, one thing is certain, that is, the Methodist church has always believed that she had a right to legislate on the Temperance question. And this ecclesiastical right has been exercised in passing a law forbidding drunkenness and drinking intoxicating liquors except in cases of necessity. If the church has the right to legislate at all on the Temperance question, she has it in full force, and can repeal an old law and substitute a new one. The real question then in controversy is not one of church legislation—this has been settled, but it is this: Which law, the old one now in the Discipline, or the new one sent from the late General Conference for our concurrence, will be the more effective in suppressing the evils aimed at by the passage of the law. We must have one or the other of these laws. Which is the wiser, the better, the more efficient instrumentality to root out the destructive evils of intemperance? It is a question of effectiveness between two laws. All questions back of this are irrelevant. What then is the difference between the two laws? The old law reads:—"Drunkenness, or drinking spirituous liquors unless in case of necessity."

The new one thus:—"Making, buying, selling, or using as a beverage, intoxicating liquors."

The old law lays its prohibiting authority on the consumers of intoxicating liquors only—here it stops. The new law lays a direct prohibition on the business of the distillers, and the retail and wholesale dealers in intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, and besides all this, does exactly what the old law did in forbidding the use, as a beverage of intoxicating liquors. Now the difference between the said laws is clear.

To my mind, the new law is incomparably superior. Its superiority appears in two respects. First, in its explicit terms. It points out definitely the four classes of evils aimed at by the enactment of the law, namely, the production of intoxicating liquor by the art of distilling, or otherwise. If then a member of the church is running a distillery, the specific law of the Discipline lays its hand upon him immediately. So if a member is engaged in the business of buying and selling in a retail or wholesale way. There is no room left for debate or cavil, or dodging. It is a plain case of "thus saith the Discipline. The young preacher need not wait to learn from the P. Elder, whether the law of the Discipline is violated by a member, who distils his fruit, or sells a barrel of liquor, that lies hid in the cellar of a dry goods store. The law is easily comprehended by the great mass of the lay membership. It needs no Doctor of Divinity to expound the meaning of its terms. All laws ought to be very plain, explicit, and definite in their terms. The new law is such.'

The second element of superiority in the new law is its comprehensiveness. It reaches the whole system of intemperance—cuts the deadly upas-tree of intemperance up by the roots. It strikes with equal force the sin of manufacturing and selling, as well as that of moderate and immoderate drinking. It makes a clean sweep of the whole iniquitous business, and throws the whole army of the Methodist Church squarely across the bloody track of the giant destroyer. It advances the whole line of Southern Methodism against King Alcohol. But the old law does not do this. There is not a word in it from the beginning to the end, against the manufacture and sale of liquor. It is, therefore, sadly defective. It is but a partial remedy for the evil it seeks to remove. The plaster of the old law does not cover the whole sore of intemperance. It leaves the perennial fountains of distilling and circulating liquors untouched. It is the futile attempt of trying to dry up a poisonous stream, while the fountains feeding it, are kept open, pouring its gushing waters down into their wonted channel. That the old rule fails to meet the case of distillers and grog sellers, is clear from the expressed opinions of the wise men of our church. In the late General Conference, while this question was being debated, Dr. Hamilton said that the rule as it stood simply referred to the drinking of drams not the sale or manufacture of liquor. W. Price thought the General Rules ought not to contain the prohibition of drunkenness and drinking spirituous liquors without including also the manufacture and sale. Dr. Register said what the church needed was a plainly pronounced utterance against the whole traffic. He was in favor of special legislation upon the subject, though it struck 50,000 members from our roll. He trusted that the grand old Methodist church would be misunderstood on this point no longer. When the vote was taken, it stood 135 in favor of the new law—38 only against it. This vote of our wisest and best men speaks volumes. I am glad to learn through Dr. Burkhead, that the N. C. delegates voted solidly for the new rule.

H. T. HUNSON.

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: I herewith give you a running sketch of the proceedings of the Wilmington District Conference.

The Conference convened at 9½ o'clock, Sept. 24th, 1874, at Antioch, Bladen circuit, the place where the first District Conference of this District was held eight years ago.

In the absence of the Presiding Elder, Rev. W. S. Black, (who was necessarily detained at home for nearly a day in consequence of sore affliction in his family, caused by an accidental fall of Sister Black, by which one of her arms was dislocated), on motion of Jno. E. Leggett, Rev. Jas. B. Alford was elected president, pro tem.

Religious services having been conducted by the president, the undersigned was elected Secretary on motion of Wm. M. Parker, and Rev. Miles P. Owen assistant.

The Conference then proceeded to business, soon after which our much-missed Presiding Elder arrived and took the presidential chair.

Having decided to have the regular committees, and fixing the hour of the Conference and times of meeting and adjourning, the names of the committeemen were announced and the Conference then adjourned to meet at 3 o'clock, P. M.

At 11 o'clock, A. M., the introductory sermon was preached by the Rev. I. W. Avent, from the text, "And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Peter, 5th and 4th.

From this the duties, obligations, and responsibilities of the ministry were urged. The sermon was simple and practical, at times eloquent and impressive. The ministry and all felt the force of the arguments advanced and were edified and encouraged.

At the evening session the work of examining the Pastors of the circuits and stations, concerning their various interests, was commenced. The subjects considered were thoroughly canvassed, and through interrogations by the president and others, facts were elicited by which the true status of each circuit, station and mission was approximated, if not reached.

Some reports were favorable, others were not much so. But in general, I may say without exaggeration, that the various interests of the District are becoming more hopeful.

The sessions of Friday and Saturday were, in the main, taken up in hearing reports from the charges, and in reading and discussing the reports and resolutions offered by the various committees.

Resolutions urging increased efforts to secure patronage to our own institutions of learning, and recommending and urging the support of the Nashville Christian Advocate, the Raleigh Christian Advocate, and the literature of our Publishing House, were adopted.

Also resolutions of thanks to the people of Antioch, who so cordially received and entertained the members and visitors of the Conference during its session, and to the various Steamboat Companies that passed delegates over their lines at half fare, were passed.

The following are the lay delegates elect to the approaching Annual Conference, viz: Wm. J. Parker, K. K. Council, John E. Legget and Wm. R. Dozier.

The following are the Alternates, viz: M. Campbell, S. P. Tharp, W. S. G. Andrews and C. H. Blocker.

Saturday night, Sept. 26th, the business having been finished, the Conference adjourned sine die.

The next session will be held at Magnolia. The attendance of both ministerial and lay members was good. There were more laymen present than were ever known to be present on any former Conference occasion. All seemed to feel an interest in the workings of the Conference.—Every one, as much as possible, was made to feel that he had something to do. A good feeling and harmony pervaded the entire body from the beginning to the end, and I believe all were edified and blessed. And I may here say what others have said with me, (and I trust without the least pretention to egotism) that this has been the most harmonious, pleasant, and profitable District Conference I have ever attended. I am more impressed with the importance and utility of District Conferences than ever.

The congregation was good at the commencement, and increased until the services Sunday at 11 o'clock, when it was estimated that there were at least one thousand persons present—the house holding only about one half. The people were attentive and seemed to appreciate the deliberations of the Conference and the divine services that were conducted every day and night during the session except Saturday night.

The Presiding Elder, Rev. W. S. Black, preached the sermon at 11 o'clock in his usual earnest, winning and eloquent style, from the 1st-3rd verses of the 14th Chap. of John.

Faith in God as a condition of comfort to the troubled heart, was a prominent feature of the discourse, while in the conclusion the Christian's house—his inheritance beyond the skies—was depicted and presented in its attractiveness.

Many hearts were made glad and the tears of joy were seen to flow freely. Many came around the Sacramental board, and with grateful hearts commemorated the sufferings and death of a crucified, but triumphantly risen and ascended Lord. The communion services over, the large audience dispersed and went home, many of them never to meet in District Conference again, and perhaps no more until they shall grasp hands on the shining shore, or at the judgment bar of heaven to separate forever. At night the usual religious services were held. One little girl was seen to kneel at the altar for prayer. May God bless the little tender heart! May she learn to love Jesus, be a faithful Christian, and at last, with the shining angels, bask forever in the light of Paradise.

On Monday the ministers and delegates with many visiting ones, took their departure from Old Antioch to their various homes and fields of labor, to enter, with renewed strength, upon the work God has called them to do.

The weather was delightful during the entire session—the moon shining brightly at night. But God favored us no longer with beautiful weather. On Monday the equinoctial storm came upon us as we journeyed homeward. As the evening passed off the wind blew more furiously and the rain fell more thickly. Umbrella's, shawls, overcoats, buggy-aprons &c. were in great demand. Our party reached the landing just in time to wait five long hours for the boat from the time it ought to have come by schedule time.

We were waiting by the river,
We were watching by the shore:
Only waiting for the boatman,
Who should come to take us home.

At last the good news was heard to shriek out on the dark night air, "the boat is coming! the boat is coming!" All ready, and we soon traversed the dark, muddy, slippery way between us and the river, and were comfortably quartered in the cabins of the boat. We floated out upon the bosom of the river, but the wind ceased not to howl in furious blasts around us. The rain fell almost in torrents. The waves were heard to lash the shore and trees to crash upon the ground before the overpowering blast. The danger became more imminent and we "tied up" in a cave behind a hill, or embankment that was barren to await a calm. We were thankful that the Lord let the boat pass our landing and take us in. And as we sat in our comfortable cabin, we could not refrain a thought of the poor sailor tossed upon the waves of the ocean lashing itself into fury before the stormy blast, nor withhold the prayer

"God grant he make that part when life is o'er
Where storms are hushed and billows rise no more."

But soon there was a partial calm and the stars looked laughingly upon us. We loosed the cable and after a pleasant social chat, and a refreshing nap, we landed at the wharf of our own fair city.

I hold in grateful remembrance the kind people of Antioch, both Methodist, and Presbyterians, I assume the liberty to express the thanks of the Conference with my own, to them, for the cordial reception and kind entertainment, we received while with them. Especially to our friend and brother, W. J. Parker, and family for the very active part taken in entertaining the Conference, and providing such ample and comfortable means of conveyance from and to the boat landing. Our dear brother (I ought to say father) the pastor, shares a part in this. I surely sympathized with him Monday evening when he braved the storm. I fear for his health, but trust the Lord may spare and strengthen him long to labor in his vineyard. May the benedictions of heaven rest upon pastor and people, and at last may Jesus, the Captain of Salvation, lead them with songs of deliverance into the [illegible] kingdom.

Revival Intelligence.

Rev. R. O. Burton, writes Sept. 28th:

"The revival continues on this circuit, Roanoke, with no apparent abatement of interest. More than a hundred have recently professed religion. It is a work of rare power and extent, and promises great good to the church."

Rev. J. N. Andrews, writes Sept. 30th:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: I closed my meeting at Falling Creek last Sabbath. The church was greatly revived, and fifty seven joined the church. I was assisted by Bro. Sutton, local preacher, from Clinton circuit; Bro. Garriss, from Wayne, and Bro. Finlayson, of the Lenoir circuit. To God be all the glory!

From Rev. J. F. Smoot, we have the following:

BRO. BOBBITT: Our meeting at Smithfield resulted in the conversion of 19 souls and the accession of 21. At Elizabeth we had an excellent little meeting. The church was much quickened. Five professed faith in Christ and four were added. Our brother, T. B. Reeks, was with us most of the time, preached and labored most efficiently. We are now conducting a series of meetings at this place. One soul converted last night. May the Lord bless us more abundantly!

Rev. V. A. Sharpe, writes:

Our camp-meeting at Stanley Creek was a success, in the best sense of that word. Souls—some 15 I think were converted, and 18 were added to the church. The preaching was of a character, not only to do good now, but to be remembered for good for days to come, if I mistake not.

One thousand and five dollars were subscribed to build a seminary of learning in this immediate vicinity. So that, as there is no lack of material, or mental resources in this section, the people are determined in training, to be abreast of the times.

Stanley Creek, is about twenty miles west of Charlotte, on the C. C. Railway.

Rev. J. W. Lewis, says:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: We held a meeting at Plain Field embracing the 5th Sabbath in August, which continued four days; had large congregations all the time; five souls professed conversion and christians were made to rejoice. Also at Franklinsville embracing the 2nd Sabbath in September, the meeting hold three days, the church was greatly revived nine souls professed to be converted, and also at Ebenezer the meeting continued three days and the church was greatly edified and built up. We have several protracted or extra meetings appointed, and I hope to be able to make a good report.

Rev. T. B. Reeks, writes, Sept. 28th:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: Let me say to our friends that we have been holding a several days meeting at Beula where we enjoyed quite a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The church was greatly revived, and nine persons professed to be happily converted to God—all young men or boys. We also had a very interesting meeting at Holland's, two conversions; many hearts were made glad, and the church considerably aroused. We also had a very good meeting at Cary—the church was very much encouraged, and some interest at Asbury, several received impressions which led them to their conversion; 3 interesting young persons also connected themselves with the church at that place. You will perceive that in our meetings the number of conversions was comparatively small, though our revivals were powerful. This grows out of the fact that there is in this country so much division of sentiment and so much of the doctrine of fatalism and other isms; but the good Lord has been with us, and we think great and lasting good has been accomplished in his holy name. To him be all the glory!

Rev. John Tillott, sends us good news from his circuit:

BRO. BOBBITT: We have had several good refreshing edifying meetings on the Yanceyville circuit. At two, Camp Spring and Prospect, some very precious conversions; at the former place some twenty odd professed and fourteen joined; at the latter, some thirty odd professed and twenty eight joined our church. I have baptised forty adults, eleven of them by immersion. We trust that good has been done through the aid and blessing of the Holy Spirit.

I was greatly assisted and comforted at Camp Spring by the efficient and zealous cooperation of Rev. W. C. Norman.

The English papers record the death of the Rev. James Shore, of the Free Church of England, who was killed in precisely the same manner as the late Bishop of Winchester. Mr Shore was "the occasion, but not the cause" of the organization of the Free Church of England. He was, when connected with the Established Church, prosecuted by the Bishop of Exeter for preaching in a chapel which had not been licensed, and the founding of the new Church grew out of that event.

Close Communion.

The Baptist Union has an argument in favor of "open communion," written by an "eminent Baptist minister," from which we quote:

When we are singing the sweet words of Cowper, Watts, Wesley, and Newton, and sending up our heart's devotion upon the wings of those beautiful hymns which they composed for the Church, we cannot entertain a doubt as to the genuineness of their love for Christ, or the purity of that spiritual atmosphere which they breathed. No one could make us believe that these devout souls entertained less regard for the authority of our divine Master than we do ourselves.

That they were in an error in respect to the matter of baptism, I have not the shadow of a doubt; but that they were sincere and honest in their intentions and in their desires to do God's will, there is just as little reason to question. The worst that can be said of them is, that they were not in a situation to enable them to see the subject of baptism just in our light.

The inconsistency of the close communionist is seen in the fact that he insists that such men shall, nevertheless, be treated just as if they had knowingly and willfully defied the law of God and the authority of Christ. He assumes that there is no difference between willful rebellion against a known law and an involuntary mistake in the interpretation of a statute—a principle which no government would tolerate, and which can never be justified by any appeal to law and justice.

Pacific Christian Advocate.]

Some persons need to be converted over again once or twice a year. They are so impulsive, yield so readily to the influence of circumstances surrounding them, and have so little of real religious stamina in their make-up, that as soon as they are in range of their besetting, or "easily circumstanced," sin, they yield to the temptation and are overwhelmed in doubt and distress. Then, when the revival season returns, they as readily yield to the heavenly influence of that occasion and are soon happy again in the Lord. If they should happen to be called away from earth in one of their joyful seasons, their friends would no doubt rejoice that they had gone straight up to heaven.

But is there not a much better way to live? Is it not far better to be governed by religious principle, than by impulse, or the influence of one's surroundings? What every Christian needs, under all circumstances, is to be faithful to his God. Stand fast on what is right. Do nothing that is wrong. Pray to God to give you help. Trust in his promise to hear prayer. "Be steadfast and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

Literature.

Messrs. D. Appleton & Co. have in press a "History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.' by John W Draper, M. D., LL D., which will make the second contribution to the 'International Scientific Series.'

A Work of some importance on the Indian Archipelago, by Louis de Backer, has just been published at Paris, under the title of "L'Archipel Indien; Origines, Langues, Morale, Droit Public et Prive des Populations."

A LITTLE volume called "Tales in Political Economy," by Mrs. Fawcett, is about to be published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. The book is intended to explain in an easy manner some of the more important principles of economic science.

THE announcement is made in London of the publication, at an early day, of a "Treatise on the Gradual Psalms with Commentary, based on Hebrew, Chaldee, and Christian Sources," by the Rev. H. T. Armfied, F. S. A., Vice Principal of the Salisbury Theological College.

A NEW work is soon to be published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., for Mr. Francis Galton, entitled "English Men of Science." It will give very complete statistics of the "Nature and Nurture," "Race and Birthplace," "Occupation of Parents," and "Hereditary Pedigrees" of English scientific men.

A BOOK which will doubtless prove of great value to business men, is to be published, in October, by Hurd & Houghton. It is "The United States Official Postal Guide," and will contain all necessary information as to the post-offices in the United States; money-order offices, rates of postage, domestic and foreign, etc.

Religious Brevities.

— A Northern Methodist preacher, named B. B. Redwine, of the Virginia Conference, calls the Colored M. E. Church of America the "Kitchen Church."

— Some good Christians have a great deal of trouble in this world. The reason of it is that God is preparing them for very great happiness in heaven.

The Southern Home says: It seems to be definitely settled that there will be no convention in this State, as public opinion is about equally divided for and against, and it would be highly injudicious to risk an election under such circumstances. But the Legislature having a two-thirds majority can amend the Constitution in all needed features.

INTELLIGENT VOTING.—In Missouri, after 1876, every voter must be able to read and write. The date for Florida is 1880. South Carolina contemplates similar action.

Index to New Advertisements.

D. S. Waitt, has just received a large stock of Fall goods, consisting in ready made clothing, boots and shoes, and an excellent assortment of ladies dress goods. He has been in business only about one year, and few men have had more encouragement from the people or better success in building up a trade. Read his advertisement.

LEACH BROTHERS.—This well established and popular house advertises a full line of family groceries. We can speak from experience when we say that they keep first class goods and sell on reasonable terms. One of the firm resides in New York and all their goods are carefully selected by him.

J. P. Gulley is out in to day's issue with an attractive advertisment of his Fall and Winter stock of Goods. He has bought largely and is selling cheap. Give him a call if you want dry goods ready made clothing, latest style hats, boots and shoes.

Alcott &Co., the excelsior Grocery and commission House, offer great inducements to the public. They are fully prepared to furnish all goods usually found in a first class family grocery.

Norris & Myatt, have in store a large supply of well selected groceries, [illegible] ties, twine, saddles, bridles, boots and shoes, &c., which they sell at bottom figures. They are always polite and attentive to customers.

J. M. Rosenbaum, successor to A. Kline, is ready for customers at the old stand, corner of Fayettville and Hargett Streets. His fall stock is complete, consisting of ready made clothing, staple dry goods, boots & shoes. He is sole agent for the N. C. State Penitentiary hand made shoes. Also dealer in choice crockery and glass ware—a separate department.

State And Local.

— We are indebted to the secretary of the Fair of the Carolinas for an invitation to attend the annual exposition which takes place on 3rd November, and will continue five days.

— We make our acknowledgment to Wm. Alderman, Esq., secretary of the Cumberland County Agricultural Society for a complimentary ticket to the twelfth annual fair of that society which is to be held in Fayetteville, commencing November 10th, and to continue four days.

— Work has commenced on the Spartanburg and Henderson Railroad.

— The widow of the late Governor Caldwell is going to break up house-keeping in Morganton and reside with her children.

— The EXPOSITOR learns that W. R. Trout, formerly a Hotel keeper in Asheville, was found lying dead in the road on Nantahala Mountain, a few days ago. On examination, his neck was found to be broken, and his horse was found loose within a few steps of the dead body. It is supposed that he fell off his horse and was killed by accident.

— As the line of the Carolina Central Railway progresses westward a turn of the tide in the line of travel is noticed. For instance, the merchants of Monroe, who, in going North for their supply of goods, have heretofore gone by the way of Charlotte, now come in this direction, two or three having passed through this city a few days since.—WILMINGTON STAR.

— Salisbury WATCHMAN: The newly discovered Gold Mine of Messrs. Boak & Crowell has proved to be very rich. Thus far they have only been able to prospect and test its value; but they are making arrangements to put up new engines and introduce improved machinery for getting out the precious metal. From all accounts it is the richest mine discovered in this section for a long time, and there have been many valuable ones found.

General News.

A terrible flood has occurred in the river Segre, in Spain. In the town of Tereja fully two hundred houses were Swept away, and many persons were drowned.

Mount Etna still continues in a state of eruption.

The Orleans PICAYUNE tells of an old man, Francis Lacroix, a millionaire, who refused to pay the exhortionate taxes laid by the Kellogg robbers and was sold out by the sheriff, leaving him a pauper one day after being a millionaire.

A WARNING TO EDITORS.—We see that that prince of swindlers, Robert J. Mulligan, has at last been arrested. Through a friend in New York, we set the police on his tracks four month ago. He has swindled a large number of editors and got his bogus advertisement printed for nothing. He has robbed the people of thousands of dollars.—SOUTHERN HOME.

Attorney General Williams is now said to be virtually commander-in-chief of the armies and navies of U. S.

The Headquarters of the Armies of the U. S. will be removed to St. Louis, Mo. in October.

Prof. Wyman, the well known anatomist and physiologist, died suddenly at Bethlehem, N. H.

Died in Fayetteville N. C. on the 5th, inst. Mrs. [Martha Flack in the 90th year of her age.

She was the oldest person in Fayetteville, and the oldest in the Methodist Church. Few persons are permitted to live to see four generations grow up around them, or to enjoy as she did the ministrations, and reverent love of great great grand-children. About sixty five years ago she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church and during that long period, was a faithful consistent member.

While in health, she was an active worker in the Sabbath school and a regular and devout attendant upon the ordinary means of grace.

For many years before her death she discontinued attendance upon the church, because of her extreme feebleness and inability to hear the word.

But though she could not hear the gospel preached, her Bible was filled with unmistakable evidences, in the form of book marks and pencil marks, that she searched and studied the sword of his grace, which is able to build her up, and gave her an inheritance among them that are sanctified."

Extreme age confined her to the narrow limits of her room for years, and there she patiently waited for the hour of release. When the hour came, she expressed herself being ready, and waiting to go. After a few days illness, this aged, faithful disciple entirely fell asleep in Jesus.

PASTOR.

Died, in Franklinton N. C. on the 9th of September of paralysis, Mrs. F. H. Winston, mother of A. H. Winston, Esq., of this city.

GREAT DISCOVERY.

BRADLEY'S PATENT ENAMEL PAINT.

Made from Pure White Lead, Linseed Oil & Zinc, & Always Ready for Use.

READ THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS:

From Prof. W. G. Simmons, Wake Forest College, North Carolina.

WAKE FOREST COLLEGE, N. C., Oct. 4, 1873

Mr. C. P. Knight—Dear Sir: We have for several months been using your Bradley's Patent Enamel Paint on our College Building, and are well pleased with it. Though it was applied by one having no experience in such work, yet we have a good job.—We shall continue to use it—believing that in point of economy, durability and facility of application, it is superior to any other pigment offered in the market. W. G. SIMMONS.

—o—

From S. McGill, M. D.

THE PLAINS, FAQUIER CO., VA., Feb. 6, 1873.

Mr. C. P. Knight,—Sir: The Paint came safe to hand as ordered, 2 kegs, 5 gallons each, and 5 buckets, 1 gallon each. As practice was slack, I did the job myself. Two weeks (not constant) work, completed the house, two coats; the last coat I applied thick, and it is now generally conceded, that, for "enamel," like hardness, and body, and harmony of colors, there is not a handsomer job in the place. I saved sixty-five dollars by the operation—which is an item just now with 'Southern people.' It should be generally adopted in this State. Any country lad can apply it. I have never dabbled in such stock as "enamels," but I feel so forcibly the great adaptability of your "Enamel Paint" to the wants of our people—in excellency of material, in beauty of color, and in the fact of its being "ready mixed," that I give you permission (if it is desirable to you) to make what use you think proper of this letter. Very respectfully and truly,

S. McGILL, M. D.

CARY COTTON GIN.

The Latest, Best and Cheapest.

I offer the public the latest improved Cotton Gin, as well as the cheapest. The following certificates from well known gentlemen, will be more satisfactory than any thing I can say:

CARY, N. C., Nov., 12th, 1873.

This is to certify that I am using one of the Cary Gins made by W. M. Sorrell, of Cary, N. C., and that I am well pleased with it and would cheerfully recommend it to any one wanting a good Gin.

A. B. YATES.

CARY, N. C., May 22nd, 1874.

I take pleasure in saying that the fifty Saw Cotton Gin I purchased from Mr. W. M. Sorrell, known as the Cary Gin, does far better work than any Gin I have heretofore used, though costing from 50 to 100 per cent. less money. I think any person in want of a Gin will save money by purchasing the Cary G

Youth's Department.

The Life-Clock.

FROM THE GERMAN.

There is a little mystic clock,
No human eye has seen,
That ticks off time and death with one
From every living mortal's breast.

And when the soul is wrapped in sleep,
And breathes not a sound,
It ticks on, and flicks the living night,
And never runneth down.

O, wondrous is that work of art
Which keeps the passing hours,
But art never fixed, nor mind conceived,
The life-clock's magic power.

Nor set in gold, nor decked with gems,
By wealth and pride possessed;
But rich or poor, or high or low,
Each bears it in his breast.

When life's deep stream 'mid beds and flowers,
All still and soft it glides,
Like the waveless sleep, with a gentle beat
It warns of passing tides.

When threatning darkness gathers o'er,
And hope's bright visions flee,
Like these does sorrow's cup or the mild of our
It beateth heavily.

When passion nerves the warrior's arm,
For deeds of hate and wrong,
Though heeded not the fearful sound,
The knell is deep and strong.

When eyes to eyes are gazing soft,
And tender words are spoken,
Then fast and wild it rattles on,
As if with love 'twere broken.

Such is the clock that measures life,
Of flesh and spirit blended;
And thus 'twill run within the breast
Till that strange work is ended.

The Spider and Grasshopper.

One summer afternoon I set out on a walk of a couple of miles to visit a man who was old, sick and soon to die. The day was warm and the road hilly. Becoming warm and tired, I sat down on a large stone beside the road. Very soon I became interested in watching what well-might prove a tragic scene in the insect world. A grasshopper had evidently been caught in spider's web in the grass near my feet. The spider was close by, but seemed to be standing still, while the grasshopper was slowly whirling round and round. I could not understand what was going on, so determined to wait and see what would become of it. By and by I saw the legs of the unfortunate grasshopper were drawing up closer and closer to his body. He would seem to struggle a while and then to straighten them out, but for some strange reason did not succeed. He kept on turning round in a mysterious way.

After watching sharply for some time, I saw that little threads were wound about him. It was now clear that the spider was turning him round and winding a thread about him, so as to hold him till he could kill and eat him. The threads became more and more visible. Tighter and stronger grew the cord every time the grasshopper went round. After awhile he looked as if he had been put into a closely-fitting sack. It was of no use now for him to try and get away, poor fellow. He seemed to be in despair, for he hardly tried to escape. The spider now drew back to rest, and was, no doubt, very happy, thinking what a rich feast he would have for supper.

"You wicked spider," I said, "you will go hungry yet."

I took out my penknife and went to work to cut open very carefully the sack, so as not to hurt Grassey. Soon he was free, but did not move. What, dead, poor thing! I tried to rouse him, as you sometimes do your sleepy brother in the morning. At last his legs began to move a little, and, after he got them all arranged, with one hop away he went in happy freedom and safety. Narrow escape, that! I was happy too, and got up and walked on, and what do you suppose I thought?

I thought that it was just like this that a great many young folks are destroyed. The spider of sin winds about them a great many little threads. At first they are so small that they can hardly be seen—thoughts and words and habits that are just a little bad. There are more and more of these till they are many—are like strong cords—and it is hard to break away from them. One gets all tied up in the wrong and sin sometimes, so that he hardly tries or cares to get away, and cannot alone if he does try. Look out for those first little threads that evil ones tie round you.

And here is another thought I had as I finished my walk, and that I have had many times since that day. Jesus does for us just what I did for that grasshopper. If he could have talked, he would have asked me to save him. Now Jesus looks on, and when he sees us fall into temptation and evil, he pities us and wants to save us. He only wants that we may ask him. He knows all our trouble, and is close by. Just as soon as we see we are in danger, and the cords are getting too strong for us to break, if we will look up we shall see him watching us with loving eyes; and if we cry to him for help he will at once break the bands asunder and save us. Ask him, and see if he will not—the kind and blessed Jesus.—Rev. A. B. Dascomb in Congregationalist.

Farm, Garden & Household.

TEA FOR CHOLERA INFANTUM.—Some years ago, MRS. Q., wife of a Professor in one of our best colleges, had an infant apparently at the point of death with cholera infantum. Several excellent physicians had given it over, when the mother determined to try tea prepared in the usual manner with cream and loaf sugar as she would drink it herself, and by a judicious administration of this remedy, the life of the child was saved and he is now a fine, healthy boy. I know another similar instance. It is very important to have the tea prepared well so that it will be palatable. Few women know how to make a good cup of tea.—SARA, in Household.

HOW TO PREVENT CHOLERA.—S., in Country Gentleman, states his belief in prevention rather than cure. He says:

"Some four or five years ago, the disease was very violent around here. Within a circuit of seven or eight miles from their immediate center, over 2000 fowls died of it. I do not know of a hen-roost that escaped. My tenant, living 200 yards off, lost over 100, and every one of my neighbors suffered. As soon as the disease appeared in the vicinity, I had my hen-house white-washed; I sprinkled it every ten days with strong solution of carbolic acid, so as to keep the smell always here; I fed the chickens plenty of good yellow corn, and there was not a sick fowl in more than a hundred during the eighteen months that the disease prevailed."

Asparagus Beds.

A correspondent of the Gardener's Monthly says this about the cutting away of asparagus stalks after the beds are done producing: "The earliest, best, and largest asparagus in this neighbor hood is in the garden of a slovenly cultivator, who cuts all his spears on reed stems down immediately after the asparagus season is over, and repeats this process once or twice during the summer thus never having any seed; in fact, at this moment his beds are as smooth as the back of your hand. And this is not only their usual appearance, but this has been his habit for five or ten years Now, if my neighbor's course is correct, all other cultivators of asparagus are entirely wrong." It is assuredly worthy of testing a few years in succession. Perhaps another colossal variety may be discovered.

The Way to Make Cottage Cheese.

A cottage spinster, "Roselle," in communicating her practice of making cottage cheese says: "I take some sweet milk and stand it on the top of the stove in a new tin pail or pan shaking it occasionally that the forming curd may not settle to the bottom. I turn the edge gently that the curd may form evenly, taking care not to break it, and not let it cook too fast. If the heat is about right it will be done in half an hour. Then I drain off the whey slowly, pressing down on the curd until only whey enough remains in it that the cheese will not be too dry, just moist enough to mix well. Then I salt to taste, add a good lump of butter and work well with my hand, then pack it down in a crock, leaving all the moisture in it.—This is better than to press it into dry balls. Set it away in the coolest corner of the cellar or spring house. Take it out into a deep, white dish and very carefully dip out and lay over the top of it a few spoonfuls of thick cream, sweet or sour, but the sour is preferable. Lay a clean, bright spoon beside the dish, and your wholesome pome is ready for criticism, cold, white and pretty and one of the nicest dishes known for tea."

THE MEDICAL USE OF SALT.—The Medical World says that in many cases of a disordered stomach a tablespoonful of salt is a certain cure. In a violent internal pain, termed colic, a teaspoonful of salt dissolved in a pint of water, taken as soon as possible, with a short nap immediately after, is one of the most effectual and speedy remedies known. The same will relieve a person who seems almost dead from a heavy fall. In an apoplectic fit no time should be lost in pouring down salt water, if sufficient sensibility remains to allow swallowing; if not, the head must be sponged with cold water until the senses return, when salt will completely restore the patient from the lethargy. In a fit the feet should be placed in warm water, with, mustard added, and the legs briskly rubbed, all the bandages removed from the neck, and a cool aperient procured, if possible. In cases of severe bleeding at the lungs, when other remedies failed, Dr. Bush found two teaspoonsful of salt stayed the blood.

CANCER.

It is well known that the whole medical faculty of all sects and of medicine have pronounced Cancers incurable. What sublime effrontery in any person to stand up boldly in the face of all this authority, and claim to be able to cure Cancer. To pull forth such a thing by the roots of the medical profession, in the city of Philadelphia, with its world renowned scientific professors and medical colleges, unless it be substantiated in the most unquestionable manner, a height of impudence rarely attained by mortal man. Dr. Thorne boldly claims that he can cure, has cured, does cure, and will cure Cancer, as well as diseases of a chronic and scrofulous nature; and, further, that in cases EVEN CASES TAKEN BY HIM He does this by a system which no other physician in the world practises. His method of treatment invigorates the body, stirs up the dormant energies of nature, purifies and cleanses the system, and imparts tone and health to all the organs of the body. His method is the most potent ever discovered, and that it is what is claimed to be will be established to the entire satisfaction of any one who will investigate. SPECIAL NOTICES.

The Source of Many Ills.

If all the ailments, bodily and mental, which torment the human family could be traced to their primary sources, it would probably be found that three-fourths of them originated in the failure of the stomach and the digestive organs by which the food is converted into nutriment and applied to the purposes of life, to perform the tasks allotted to them by nature, vigorously and regularly. This being the case the vast importance of a medicine which compels these organs to do their whole duty thoroughly and efficiently, becomes at once apparent. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters may be truly characterized as a preparation of this kind, indeed as the only one which can be implicitly relied on as combining the properties of a stomachic, an alterative and an aperient in such proportions as to produce simultaneously the desired effect upon the disordered stomach, liver and intestines. This conclusion is warranted by the celerity and certainty with which the Bitters afford relief in chronic cases of dyspepsia, inability of the liver and constipation. The false idea that these complaints and others that grow out of them, could be cured by fierce cathartics, has at last, it is hoped, been thoroughly exploded. The sick, during the last hundred years have swallowed thousands of tons of energy, scammony, gamboge, croton oil, jalap, &c., and tens of thousands of graves have been prematurely filled thereby. But ever since the principle of renovation, as embodied in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, was arrayed against the principle of prostration, as represented by mineral salivants and furious purgatives the latter has steadily and surely fallen into deserved contempt. The outcry against stimulation by which concoctors of depleting drenches hoped to give eclat to their disgusting and dangerous compounds has only served to increase the demand for the wholesome stimulant, tonic and alterative which for twenty-five years triumphed over all opposition and is now the most popular medicine in the Western hemisphere Oct 7 1-m

Bradley's Patent Enamel Paint.

It is but little more than a quarter of a century since the art of mixing paint was confined almost exclusively to a few comparatively speaking. Now, however, through the ingenuity of BRADLEY, we are not only enabled to apply the paint if need-be, but can see the results in advance, example exists having furnished paints, with the different shades or tints, mentioned. Those who have used the "Enamel Paint," speak from experience, that it is all that is claimed for it, and evidently supercede the "cold style paint." As an evidence of the great worth of the Enamel Paint, we must respectfully request all our readers to carefully read the excellent testimonials of Mr. C. P. Knight, in this paper.

For the Advocate.

From the Mission Field.

From time to time, Mr. Editor, there comes to my table a package of foreign missionary journals from England and Scotland, several, from India one, and from China one. They are filled with facts and sentiments that should interest and profit our people. As very few copies of these journals come to this country I propose, if you think well of it, to furnish you with occasional articles composed of excerpts and notes, which may be to "the use of living."

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

The May-June number of the Chinese Recorder and Missionary Journal, for which thanks are due to our brother Young J. Allen—among a number of instructive articles contains an excellent paper on "Medical Missions." The writer, the Rev. William Scarborough, gives as an account of the history of Medical Missions in China, beginning as far back as 1805, when "Dr. Alexander Pearson introduced the practice of vaccination among the natives of Canton and Macao." This is followed by an interesting sketch of the Medical Missions connected with different English and American Boards. One suggestive paragraph I copy:

"We come now to the history of another important year in the history of medical missions. In the year 1861, Dr. Lockhart, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society, proceeded to Peking, where he established a hospital and commenced a mission station. In this hospital he remained till 1864, when Dr. Dudgeon arrived to take charge. Perhaps of all the reports issued by medical missionaries, those of Dr. Dudgeon are the most interesting; containing as they do so much general information which the lay reader can relish and enjoy.—This hospital derives especial significance from the fact of its being in the immediate vicinity of the throne, and from the number of highest officials, high mandarins, eunuchs of the palace and princes of the blood.' Mongolian princes and princesses that have taken advantage of the doctor's services. I should not be at all surprised if some day or other, he is called into medicate for the 'Son of Heaven' himself.

Doubtless the Emperor himself will one day learn the superiority of medicine at physician over the charmers and jugglers that have helped to kill his ancestors. Would that we had the full history of these medical missions,—the glimpses given by this article show us some of the noblest lives that have been offered up for humanity and religion.

Mr. Scarborough points out and describes the "good that these medical missions have undeniably done." I condense as follows:

1. They develop a friendly liberality on the part of foreigners resident in China. The instances cited show that large sums have been contributed by this class to maintain the hospital work. 2. They do immense good to the bodies of men. "The hated foreigner, at the sacrifice of his own comfort and wealth, and at the peril of his own life, stoops over the fallen, wounded native, and while the native priests and levites and Pharisees go carelessly by, he dresses the fetid ugly wound,—too filthy for a native doctor to touch,—pours in the soothing oil and cleansing wine, takes him to his own hospital and cares for him himself; nor sends him away till there is nothing more that he can do for him. This is a sight for the lovers of humanity to glory over." 3. They do great good to the native medical faculty; and there can be no two opinions of the need of their services in this direction. "A native doctor lives in blissful ignorance of any such thing as anatomy. His doctrine of the pulse is absurd.—His science is closely allied to sorcery and magic. In difficult cases he is of no use whatever." 4. They are useful in revealing to foreigners many things in connection with the Chinese which would otherwise remain in mystery, and which missionaries need to know. 5. They are very useful in opening a new mission.

Mr. Scarborough next considers the good medical missions are supposed to do and concerning which there is more or less of uncertainty, and concludes by pointing out the qualifications needful in successfully prosecuting the work of a medical missionary.

May not our own Board consider the value of such an agency as the "Medical Mission" in connection with its own work in China? Could we not find the men? And are there not among us friends of humanity as well as Christianity, who would contribute to the maintainence of such a work in China?

A FIRM OF FAITH IS CHRISTIANITY.

Now take a statement with a comment from the Lucknow Witness for July 15, received this day:

"The receipts of money for the past year reported at the recent religious anniversaries in London give testimony in a way that none can mistake to the earnestness and zeal of the Christian Churches in England. For foreign missions the sum of £875,849 was collected; for home missions £311,589; for religious, educational and other similar agencies, £221,205—a grand total of £1,629,607—(something over $8,000,000.)

This was a gain of a full $1,000,000 over the previous year.

Well does the Witness say: "This does not look as though infidelity and rationalism with its myriad names and blatant boasting was gaining the ascendancy so very fast after all. We presume the entire sum contributed by Atheism, Deism, and 'Theism' so-called, for the propagation of their views could be reckoned up with a very few figures."

Where, Mr. Editor, do we propose to place ourselves—with those Christians who pay to advance christianity because they believe in it, or with atheists, deists and such like, who pay nothing because they believe nothing? What are we to say of those professing christians of our land who pay nothing to "propagate their views?" What sort of "views" has he who will pay nothing to propagate them? In what sense does he believe in christianity who does not seek to propagate it—pay as well as pray to propagate it? What of the tens of thousands among us who pay nothing for this cause? Are they not Christians? Yes—but they are not instructed in their duty. Whose fault is it? Chiefly their teachers. What is the remedy? First, let their teachers learn; then let them teach.

NEW MISSIONARY CENTERS.

The Witness for July 24, contains an interesting communication from "A Native Christian" upon the evangelistic labors of Messrs. Taylor and Thoburn, so unlike in their methods and yet so very successful. These gentlemen are meeting such opposition and persecution as the early itinerants in England and America received from starchy churchmen and unwashed ruffians. We have seen much recently of the revival movements in Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras.—The significance of these movements, chiefly among the European and Eurasion (these are a mixed race—Hindoo English) classes, will be seen when we consider a recent statement of the Friend of India, from official sources as we are informed, of the population of these cities. "According to the Friend the resident population of the three great cities in British India two and a half years ago stood thus: Calcutta, 922,429; Bombay, 644,405; Madras, 397,552."

I have a feeling, Mr. Editor, that is almost a persuasion that God is doing such a work in these cities as he did in the Syrian Antioch when he prepared it to be the first great missionary centre of the Church in apostolic times. The whole church should pray the Divine blessing and guidance upon these evangelists in these great cities of Hindostan. When a living, witnessing church is firmly established in Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras what centres of light and power these cities must become to all India!

CIVILIZED INFIDELITY.

Ridicule, insult, the stupidity of superstition, the inveteracy of caste prejudices, the debasing influences of idolatry and the unbelief of the church at home do not measure the sum of the antagonisms that must be met and vanquished by missionaries among the heathen. Take, for instance, the foes described in the following statement in the Chronicle, organ of the London Missionary Society, by the Rev. George Hall, of Madras:

"The objections brought fifteen or twenty years ago, are never heard now from educated young men. They have moved on into far more difficult and dangerous lines of thought. The present unbelief, originated by those who are called philosophers in Europe, seems coming in like a flood on India. Our young men now carefully study the works of Darwin, Huxley, Herbert, Spencer, Newman, Stuart Mill and Colenso, and from such sources draw their objections to Christianity. * * To my certain knowledge numbers of Hindoos are regular subscribers for Bradlaugh's National Reform, and there are weekly meetings where this publication is regularly read and discussed."

No doubt these smart young Hindoos will send for Mr. Tyndall's recent confession of his atheism and will subscribe for the "Popular Science Monthly" as soon as they learn of its spirit and tendency.

In view of these things what an engine of power the "Mission Press" will be in heathen lands. What a work of absolutely inconceivable blessing our own Allen with his translations and his Chinese Christian Magazine is now doing and will yet more efficiently do! Let the Church not only bid him God-speed, but sustain him.

But chiefly let the Church pray for revival power—at home and abroad.—Our modern infidels and atheists must be answered as Hume, Bolingbroke, Voltaire and the rest were answered in their time—by the power of God revealed in the hearts of men.

WHAT AN OLD MISSIONARY SAYS.

Here we may read with profit what a veteran missionary, the Rev. Dr. Joseph Mullens, says. He was a long time a missionary among the Hindoos but is now, as we learn, connected with the London Missionary Society's work in Madagascor. I quote from an address delivered at a recent Missionary Conference in that island—so thoroughly redeemed from utter heathenism by the gospel of Christ.

Dr. Mullens says: "Thirty years have passed since I first landed in Calcutta and came into personal contact with the Hindoos. I am the oldest missionary among you. I have seen missionary work all over India and China. I have talked of it and discussed it with more than a thousand missionaries. I believe in it profoundly; I know nothing so powerful in the world for the world's renovation as the Gospel of Christ faithfully preached, and there is no work so worth doing with one's whole heart as the preaching of that gospel, out of love to the Savior and the souls for which he died."

"LOOK TO YOUR MARCHING ORDERS."

I conclude with a clinching paragraph from the Foreign Missionary Record—organ of the Church of Scotland. It occurs in an address delivered by the Rev. W. Macjerlone at a missionary meeting at Darjeeling. Are there any among us who have doubts, or unbelief, or quibbles, or opposition, instead of prayers and contributions, for our foreign missionary work? Let them read and consider:

"The question of the expediency or the inexpedicency of missions is not one the discussion of which is permitted to Christians. It is only possible in the case of those who are really unbelievers in Christ. And why? Because the very idea of a Christian is that of one who, believing in Christ as the Son of God and the Saviour of the world, gives himself up to him, and resolves in everything unconditionally and unreservedly, and against all odds—if need be against the whole world—to follow Christ wholly, and in everything to keep his commandments. 'He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me.' 'If a man love me he will keep my words.' 'He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings.' These are the first principles of Christian allegiance. Christian service knows nothing of the modern commercial principle of 'Limited Liability.' As many as are Christ's when they gave themselves to him, humbly resolved in everything henceforth to live—not unto themselves, but unto him who loved them and gave himself for them, and to bring every thought and every act unto the subjection of the will of Christ. The command of Christ to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, is one whose observance is as much incumbent upon us as the commemoration of the Lord's Supper, or as the fulfillment of any other of the Lord's commands."

A restive, ritualistic, dilletante "Clergyman" once undertook to get approval from the Duke of Wellington of his unmissionary quibbles and doubts—the "obstacles" in the way of converting the Hindoos being so great! The old Duke's answer may be considered by certain unbelievors of our own time and fold:

"Look to your marching orders, Sir. 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature!"

It is not then a question of opinion, but law; of inclination, but obligation. It is not a question between us and our General Conference, our Board of Missions, our Bishops and Pastors—but between us and Christ Jesus, the Lord. Will we obey our King?

Would that I could now give you the names of the holy men and women—and there are scores of them—who are mentioned in the notices of "Departures" during the month of August.—O, that we counted ourselves worthy to enroll some names among those successors of the apostles!

A. G. H.

For the Advocate.

The New Temperance Law the same as Mr. Wesley's Rule on that Subject.

Mr. Editor: I see that Bro. Barrett has announced against the new law.—"After prayerful consideration," he has found out that the new law is not in accord with Mr. Wesley's old rule in regard to drunkenness and drinking of spirituous liquors. I have no doubt but that Bro. Barrett did the praying part well enough, but as to the consideration, I doubt whether that was very thorough or accurate. Now if my good brother had taken pains to have searched into the history of this subject, he would have found that Mr. Wesley's old rule is much nearer the new law than the present rule in the Discipline, which erroneously assumes to be the same as Mr. Wesley made it originally. In the year of 1743, Mr. Wesley published his general rules, among which I find the following on Temperance. It reads:

"Drunkenness; buying or selling spirituous liquors, or drinking them unless in cases of extreme necessity."

This rule, it will be seen, is substantially the same as the new law proposed for our adoption, except the term "making." And doubtless Mr. Wesley aimed to include the sin of distilling, for it is constructively included. This rule forbids buying, selling and drinking. Now, if a man could not buy, nor sell, nor drink moderately or immoderately, of course he would not waste his time and means in distilling that which he could not in any possible way dispose of.—So it is perfectly manifest that Mr. Wesley's old rule is substantially the same as our new law, and in its practical working was just as efficient.—Now, Brother, you can't claim Mr. Wesley on your side. He never stood there. He had too much piety and wisdom to make a rule reaching only a part of a great evil. We claim the eminent authority of the great Founder of Methodism on our side of the new law, or rather we are on the side of Mr. Wesley, for the adoption of the new law is but reinstating the old rule of Mr. Wesley on the liquor question.

2. We claim also the pioneer fathers of American Methodism on the side of the new law. Jesse Lee, in his history, says that the societies formed in the United States, beginning in 1766, adopted the same rules which "Mr. Wesley had previously drawn up in England." Mr. Lee then quotes the rules—the one on Temperance reading thus:—"Drunkenness; buying or selling spirituous liquors, or drinking them unless in cases of necessity."

In the Annual Conference of 1783, Mr. Lee states: The following was one of the questions: "Shall our friends be permitted to make spirituous liquors, sell or drink drams? Answer. By no means. We think it wrong in its nature and consequences; and desire all our preachers to teach the people by precept and example to put away this evil." It is clear then, that the pioneer fathers favored every element in our new law on Temperance. But in after years the General Conference thought proper to change Mr. Wesley's rule by dropping out the words "Buying and Selling," and thus leave a gate open for distillers and venders of intoxicating liquors to come into the church. Under the rule thus changed, members of the church were allowed to distill and sell liquors. In proof of this, turn to Bishop McTyeire's Manual, page 97, where it is stated that—"In 1820 this law was enacted: "No preacher among us shall distill or retail spirituous liquors, without forfeiting his official standing." Not his church membership.—Again, "In 1836: No elder, deacon, or preacher among us shall distill or vend spirituous liquors without forfeiting his official standing."

Here is a law discriminating in favor of the laity, as to the privilege of making and selling spiritnous liquors. Now what does all this mean?

1. It is clearly implied, that lay members could make and sell liquor, and that without violating the Discipline either in the general rule or the specific one, forbidding only drunkenness or useless dram-drinking.

2. That the preacher by giving up his ministerial credentials could go on as a lay member in distilling and selling liquors.

3. That it was sinful for preachers as such, to make and sell liquors, but a harmless business when carried on by laymen. All this plainly shows that distilling only stript a preacher of his ministerial robes, but left him to remain a private member of the church, in which capacity he could run as many whiskey distilleries as he pleased, and that without calling in question the soundness of his church membership. The use, which I desire to make of these facts, is to show that the expounders of our church law, and the administrators of the Discipline did not believe that the general law—the doing of no harm—carried any prohibition idea against the making and selling of ardent spirits. If this general law was sufficient, why did the General Conference make a special one forbidding preachers to distill and sell? If the general law prohibited laymen, it follows as a matter of course, that it prohibited preachers, unless the absurd position is taken that it requires a stronger and plainer law to keep ministers from doing harm than laymen. The fact is the doctrine that the general law covers the whole evil of intemperance is comparatively recent. It is considered by legal gentlemen as a monstrous stretching of a vague generality to meet specific cases of wickedness.

Now it is a remarkable fact, that the Discipline does not either by words or implication, or a fair construction any where forbid the making or selling of intoxicating liquors. The present law on Temperance in the Discipline expressly and designedly omits to mention the making and selling of liquors. The words—buying and selling—were in the original law sent over here by Mr. Wesley.—They were retained for a long time by our pioneer fathers. How did they get out of the rule? Were they not taken out by a deliberate design? Most assuredly. And yet our expounders of the present day attempt to make us believe that the intent of the former law-makers was to prohibit the making and selling of liquors—that they intended to do a certain thing, and erased the very words in the rule which expressed that latent intention. Now, if the general rules had made no mention at all of intemperance, then the ground that the rule of doing no harm is sufficient to sweep the whole system out of the church, would appear more plausible. It could be applied then by the common consent of the church to any form of intemperance—and so to all of its phases of making, buying, selling and drinking; but when a general rule against an evil goes on to explain and define itself, as this does, by giving the particular things prohibited under the general statement, then the legal presumption is, that all things forbidden in the general rule are mentioned in the particulars stated, that the general rule means just so much, no more nor less, as appears by name in the specific law. This statement is in exact accordance with the legal maxims of the civil courts. The rule of interpreting a law is this: "Expressio unius exclusio alterius." The expression of one thing implies the exclusion of another. That is, a general law expressing itself in specified particulars takes in no more than the particular things mentioned. Now, our general rule says: "By doing no harm" &c. Then it goes on to specify what it means as to the Temperance question; and says: "Drunkenness, or drinking spiritous liquors, unless in cases of necessity." Now, here the general rule defines itself to mean drinking only—if it had meant distilling and selling, it would have mentioned them right here in this explanatory clause. "The expression of one thing implies the exclusion of the other."

We conclude then, that as a fair construction of the general rule, does not give us any authority to exclude distillers or venders from the church, nor the plain letter of the specific law as it now stands in the Discipline; we are by legal necessity shut up either to fellowship with such mischevious men or to adopt the new law. There is no possibility of escaping this conclusion. If there is any rule in the Discipline to exclude distillers and sellers of liquor, it must be by implication of the general rule of doing no harm, or in the special law on Temperance, but we have proved that it is in neither; therefore there is none.

The present agitation on the question has developed the weakness of the Discipline on the Temperance law.—The authority of the Church will be wofully weakened, if the new law is defeated now. Intelligent laymen will test the supposed law if arraigned on the charge of making and selling liquors. They can employ shrewd lawyers to make up the case, who can show to any well-informed committee that whatever may be the immorality of selling and making liquors, one thing is certain, that there is no implied or expressed law in the Discipline against them. They can point to the debates of the General and Annual Conferences, and the many able articles published in our newspapers, as proofs that the larger portion of ministers do not believe that the present law of the Discipline is sufficient to exclude distillers and venders from the Church. Every case of Discipline will engender neighborhood strife. There will be discordant irregularity among the preachers in administering the Discipline. Some trying to turn out distillers on the law of inference—others refusing to make any attempt, upon the ground that there is no law for it. The Church occupies a critical position before the eyes of the world. The great ground swell of public sentiment is in sympathy with the new law. The vast majority of the laity and ministry favor it, but one-fourth of the voters may defeat, then the Methodist Church rolls back a hundred years in her influence in arresting the great curse of intemperance.

REPORT ON FAMILY RELIGION.

TO THE PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE WILMINGTON DISTRICT CONFERENCE:

Your committee appointed on Family Religion has had the subject under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report.

The subject of Family Religion is not only one of great importance, but of the greatest importance. It is the foundation upon which our religious system is erected. The foundation from which the stream should flow and spread into a mighty current. If the foundation be firm, then the structure is secure. If the fountain be full and inexhaustible, then the stream will flow with a steady current. It is then of paramount importance that the nursery from which the church is to gather its members, and the vineyard of the Lord its laborers, be well cared for, and cultivated with untiring energy and perseverance. To accomplish this very important work, much, very much, depends on the head of every christian family, and involves a fearful weight of responsibility. The individual character of father and mother is apt to be indelibly impressed upon their children, and to fix their destiny for weal or woe. With this view of the subject, there is no duty that calls for more uniform and energetic effort than that of religiously training our families. A question of great interest naturally presents itself. How can this be most successfully accomplished? In reply to this interogatory, we unhesitatingly say by erecting the family Altar upon which to offer the morning and evening sacrifice. Not for the evening alone, but for the morning and evening. Let it be the undeviating rule of life to keep the holy fires burning and the prayers of the pious ascending as sweet incense before the Lord, our God. Those who regularly and punctually discharge this duty, will make impressions upon youthful minds, that will grow with their growth and strengthen with their strength until they should be developed in the mature fruits of holy living. How lovely to see the father surrounded by his sons and daughters, while he devoutly reads to them the words of the living God, and then bowing reverently in their midst, bears then upon his fervent prayers to the throne of the great Father whose ears are ever open to the supplication of his obedient children.

Again how sublime and enrapturing the sight, to behold an angelic mother teaching her little ones to lift their hearts to Jesus, for those are they of whom he said, "of such is the kingdom of heaven." Angels bend low to catch the broken accents of infant tongues, as they bow at the mother's knee and repeat the simple artless prayer suited to their age. Such example and teaching will not, cannot, fail to produce material for building up the great spiritual temple of our God on earth. As is exemplified in your own case, Mr. President, for you can testify to the influence of a pious mother and the power of converting grace at the Family Altar. It is with pain that we record the fact that two little interest is manifested in family religion. When will the heads of families, that are members of the church realize their responsibility? When will the church be aroused to greater efforts to establish firmly this great principle that underlies the great fabric of our religious system? May God hasten the day when all the families of the church should unite together in sending up their systematic and spiritual supplications around family altars firmly established throughout our land.

We respectfully recommend the adoption of the following.

Whereas from the best information we are able to gather there exists a very great neglect of family worship and the proper training of children in the family circle. Therefore

Resolved: That our ministers, travelling and local, be requested to urge the important duty in their public ministrations and in their private intercourse with our people.

All of which is respectfully submitted

MILES P. OWEN, CHAIRMAN.

The Proposed Change in The General Rules.

The discussion in the Advocate upon this subject seems to widen. Opinions pro and con come from almost all parts of the Church, South. It may not be amiss to indicate through our central organ how some of us in North Carolina regard the question. A free and full interchange of views before the Annual Conferences meet, turning the minds of our ministers and members to the subject in time for them to weigh it well beforehand, may procure the most wise action when the vote of the Conferences shall be taken.

I was one of the members of the late General Conference who felt willing that the rule upon the subject of intoxicating liquors should remain as it is, until I learned from the statements made upon the floor of the Conference that the construction given to the law of our Church upon this subject was not uniform, and therefore some parts of the Church were at least tolerating what others were deciding to be violations of law, and enforcing the penalties against. This seemed to me to result mainly from the fact that our General Rules cover one part of the subject while they are silent upon the other. If no mention had been made in these Rules of questions touching intoxicating liquors, an application of general law against drinking, making, buying, and selling, is clearly legitimate and consistent. But as one is formally treated—"drinking unless in cases of necessity"—showing that the Church has had its mind officially directed to this evil; and upon the other there is a total silence—i. e., "making, buying, and selling"—it is not so clear that this silence is not a bar to the application of a general law to prohibit what has been, after considering the whole matter, as it is fair to presume was done, left out of the Discipline of the Church. At least, this reasoning has such plausibility to men not entirely familiar with the decision of our best authorities, and some of the honored names of our Church, as to account for the dissent that is often made, and the embarrassment with which many of the preachers and Churches meet when they attempt to enforce the rules of the Church. I asked myself the question in the General Conference, "Can this ambiguity be removed, and something gained in securing uniformity in the administration of discipline, by the change proposed?' My mind answered in the affirmative. I put the same question to the Conferences. If they agree with me in this fact, then there is certainly enough in it to make the change desirable, provided no harm grows out of the change. Let us inquire whether this is likely to be the case. The proposed rule consists of two parts. 1. Drinking as a "beverage." The old rule prohibits drinking "unless in cases of necessity.' I am frank to say that I can see neither loss nor gain in this part of the proposed change. I shall pass by all play upon words, and exhaustive definitions of "beverage," and hold my readers to the fair construction of the language used, and to the practical action of the Church under the rule as it is and the rule proposed. Suppose a member be charged with violating the present rule. Would not the question be, after the fact of drinking was admitted or proved, was it a "case of necessity"? Now suppose farther, that the accused show that he drank according to the advice of a physician, as medicine, or under a carefully-formed opinion of his own, that his health required it, and the preacher and Church are satisfied that this defense is true, would he be censured under the present rule? Certainly not. But if it appear that he drank because the taste of it is pleasant, the drink is palatable, would it not be held that this is not a case of necessity? If persisted in and defended, will not such a case subject the accused to discipline? Try the same facts under the proposed rule. The charge is made of drinking liquor "as a beverage.' The accused shows that he drinks under the advice of a physician, or an intelligent opinion of his own that he needs this medicine, and the preacher and Church are satisfied that his defense is true, will they censure the accused because the rule says, "as a beverage"? I think not. Why? Because the first idea conveyed by this term of the new rule derived from the part of the definition that is applicable to the matter we have in hand is, a drink that is pleasant to the taste, palatable—or, in ordinary parlance, "that we love." I ask my readers if this is not the fair natural, common sense, interpretation? It will also bear a reasonable amount of learned criticism, but will not, perhaps, bear the learning that forces it to carry all the definitions given to the word by the books. Some of these definitions have no reference to our subject. I believe that precisely the same defense would be sustained or overruled by the Church, by a wise administration, under both rules. If this be so we will be left, so far as drinking goes, under the proposed rule just where we now are. I can see no new tests of membership—no Church with new restrictions more exacting than the Scriptures, turning Christ out of his own Church—no rule bearing upon the consciences of Christian people for the first time, so that by multitudes they are constrained to leave the Church of their fathers! Let us be calm. We lose nothing by this part of the change. 2. The second part of the proposed new rule is "the making, buying, or selling," intoxicating liquors. This is an addition to the rule as it now stands. It proposes to put an express prohibition in the Discipline, in this most solemn and binding form, against the manufacture of, and traffic in, intoxicating liquors. To my mind this is the feature in the proposed change that makes the action of the General Conference such a proper one, and calls most earnestly upon the Annual Conferences to concur in the recommendation. I am surprised that so much force has been thrown against the other point in the case and so little against this. This contains the real difference between the two rules. And I am glad to find that most of those who oppose the change are careful to put themselves on record against the liquor traffic, as being allowable in members of the Church. It has been decided by the highest authority in the Church that it is "doing harm," it is sinful, to manufacture, buy, sell, intoxicating liquors, as this is now usually done in the business of the country. Now, if this be true, as it doubtless is, and yet in many parts of the Church the correctness of this ruling is questioned, because there is neither express warrant for it in the Scripture nor the Discipline of the Church, is it not desirable that the law should be free from all ambiguity? Shall we not say to our people in words, and in the most solemn "form of words,' that it is sinful to engage in this work of desolation either as the maker or distributor of the poison? Why darken the meaning that we hold to be correct, and weaken the power of the Church in "extirpating the evil' by refusing to say, in plain language what the Church does mean? Does the proposed rule mean more than is claimed as the proper construction of the present law by those who oppose the change? Was it intended by the General Conference to mean more? I do not so understand it. It was intended to clear away all ambiguity and doubt as to the voice of our Church, and place it clearly in the language of the book, as well as in its spirit, before our members, and before all men, as squarely opposed to "making, buying, or selling, intoxicating liquors" to be used as a "beverage." Nothing more stringent than this was intended by those who propose the change. And it is not fair to put into this discussion, for the purpose of defending it, the extremely improbable case of a member of the Church making, buying, or selling, for mechanical, medicinal, or sacramental, purposes. No wise administrator of law, expounding it with the intent and meaning of the law-makers before him, will interfere in a bona fide case of this kind. If a man were put on trial, and this fact were shown, it would be held that such a case does not come under the rule, and the practical result would be just as under the present law.

There is no ground for fear that the practice of our people, or the administration of law, either as to drinking or the traffic, will be too stringent. The fear is, that after the new rule is adopted, our practice will be too lax for the purity of the Church and the public good. But when the law is made clear, the responsibility will rest upon the preacher and Church where the offender lives—the eyes of all being open to the fact of a practical conflict with the discipline of the Church in its most authoritative form.

To my mind the gist of the whole question is, 1. Will the Church speak out boldly, and with "no uncertain sound," against drinking intoxicating liquor for the love of it? 2. With the same clearness against "making, buying, and selling, it, that men may drink it for the love of it? Shall we not only cry against "drunkenness and drinking," unless in "cases of necessity," but also against the device and power that seduces, then stimulates, then assails the appetites of even members of the Church of Christ, and thus destroys them in this world and in the world to come, Let us make the law clear and put it in the book. Then all can read it and know it. The simple-minded and inexperienced member of the Church will learn it in his first lessons from our Discipline without waiting for some violation to deduce our law from a popular discussion of the question. The plain preacher, with his Bible, Hymn-book, and Discipline in hand; and the young preacher upon his first circuit, possibly in charge of the circuit, will not be required to dig up some episcopal decision before he can know the mind of the Church upon the subject. More than this: Every distiller in our Church who reads his Discipline will be reminded that when, for gain, he converts human food into poison for body and soul, the Church is no party to the crime, but solemnly protests against it. The "wholesale dealer" will read, as he rolls his stream of fire from the capacious warehouse to the boat or railroad that it may speed on in its burning track of desolation, that he is not less guilty than the "retailer," whose tippling sparks are quenched in the appetites of impoverished customers as his victims stagger from the door of the village or cross road grog shop, Brethren, do n't let us be led off from the real issue by any "form of words." The substance is what the Church needs. The new rule contains both. The old has only a part. Let us concur in the new and better one.

When only $2 is sent us we can only extend the subscription to that amount. When $1.25 is sent us we shall be governed by the same rule.—We trust all will send the postage with their subscription so as to avoid all trouble and misunderstanding in the case. The following is the new postal law enacted by Congress:

SEC. 5. That on and after the first day of January, 1875, all newspapers and periodical publications mailed from a known office of publication or news agency, and addressed to regular subscribers or news agents, postage shall be charged at the following rates: On newspapers and periodical publications, issued weekly, and oftener, two (2) cents a pound or fraction thereof; less frequently, three (3) cents a pound, or fraction thereof, etc.

SEC. 6. That on and after the first day of January, 1875, upon the receipt of such newspapers and periodical publications at the office of mailing, they shall be weighed in bulk, and postage paid thereon by a special adhesive stamp, to be devised and furnished by the Postmaster General, etc., etc.

We are pained to learn of the recent severe affliction which our esteemed brother, Rev. Dr. Kennedy, Editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, has been called upon to bear in the death of his devoted wife, Mrs. Mary L. Kennedy. This is indeed a sad bereavement, the saddest which a man can experience, and we feel assured that our readers will join us in the expression of our sympathy for our afflicted brother.

Sister Kennedy was born 24th May 1837, was married to Dr. Kennedy in 1860, and died on the 29th of September last, in great peace. Her health had for some years been impaired and since her removal with her husband to Macon, Ga., she had led a quiet, retired life, winning the love and esteem of all with whom she came in contact, by her lovely and gentle spirit and consistent piety. Her remains were brought to Rockingham N. C., her native home, for interment. May Heaven grant its consolations to her bereaved husband and pour its balm upon his wounded heart.

We are now sending out bills, and we earnestly request all who receive them to respond promptly. Let no one stop his paper. Deny yourself in some other way. Nothing pays better in the family than a good religious paper. Enclose $2 in a letter to pay your subscription, and 20 cents to pay postage.

The Duty of Benevolence.

The Scriptures plainly teach us that giving is an important part of practical Christianity. Whether rich or poor, if we profess to be the disciples of Jesus we are bound to cultivate a spirit of liberality and contribute of our own means for the support of religion, and the relief of the needy.—All who understand, in any measure, the genius of our holy Christianity, and whose hearts are imbued with its divine influences, must know and feel that as they have become heirs to a heritage of giving, they are called upon to show themselves gratified debtors by the constant and cheerful exercise of benevolence.

In the first age of the Church this was evidently a marked development and a striking proof of discipleship.—At once those whom Christ called, seemed to lose their selfishness, and, from love to him, their chief joy was experienced in giving away everything, yea, even life itself, that thereby they might serve and advance his cause. All the weight of obligation which rested upon them, now rests upon us. And if we properly consider the claims of divine love, and if we have any becoming appreciation of our duty as Christians—we shall often be prompted to ask: "What can I render unto the Lord for all his benefits?—what sacrifices can I make costly enough to express my sense of them?" We have given him ourselves, and have solemnly proposed and promised to glorify him "in our bodies and spirits which are his;" but, if we may, we would honor him with our substance and with the first fruits of all our increase. When our hearts are full of love to Christ, we are promoted to such a consecration, and feel that duty calls us to make just this manifestation of our devotion. It is not that we feel especially the force of his commands—it is not that we hear him with authority saying to us, "abound" in the grace of "liberality" and "be ready to distribute, willing to communicate." No; our beneficence springs from love, not from law; our gratitude anticipates the command, and were it possible for these precepts to be repealed, the love we bear him would still be a law, under the delightful sway of which we should daily be led to make to his cause our cheerful and liberal offerings. In the measure that Christians feel the love of God in their hearts will they be constrained to make this acceptable expression of their love to him.

Let us remember that the commandment is in full force, now when the power of the "higher law" is not felt, for the will of God in regard to the consecration of our substance to him is most earnest and express. And though this may be called one of the "least of his commands," it is certainly one of the hardest to keep—and though one of the lowest proofs of our devotion to him, yet he is pleased to accept this form of service, and not only so, but he condescends to make known the fact that for those who render it in the right measure and spirit, he bears a peculiar regard.

Fairs and their Uses

The State Fair, which the managers of the State Agricultural Society have so sedulously endeavored to make a success, is in progress this week and from all indications will reflect credit upon the Society and our State.—When properly and decently conducted (as we feel assured ours will be,) Fairs are of great advantage to the State, in promoting emulation and improvement in its various industries. New ideas are obtained by the people in regard to methods of conducting agricultural pursuits, improving stock, advancing art and science and making them serve good and useful purposes. The social advantages, too, derived from bringing the people of different sections together, forming new acquaintances and friendships, and renewing old ones, are not to be lost sight of in estimating the good uses of an Agricultural Fair. Such gatherings allay prejudices and bind sections and people together, enlarge and liberalize thought and feeling, just as the annual gathering of the Jews at Jerusalem, though primarily for a religious purpose, brought the tribes of that great nation together and kept alive the national feeling and characteristics. We trust our Fair will be pleasant and profitable to our people and increase their interest in our good old State.

Rev. J. S. Ervin writes us from Morganton, 8th October, that Bishop Doggett is spending some time in the Western portion of the State, and preaching with great power. He preached twice last Sabbath, and is to hold forth the word of life again next Sabbath. He is on his way to Asheville to preside at the Holston Conference which convenes on 14th inst.

A Model Speech

We attended a meeting not long since in the "turpentine country" of North Carolina, where the subject of "the support of the ministry" came up for discussion. After considerable debate on "plans &c.," a grave looking brother, about six feet three inches high, built in a fine, straight, muscular mould, arose and spoke. His voice had a slightly nasal sound which it is impossible to imitate on paper, but it was full and sonorous, and he delivered his speech in substance as follows:—"Brethren, we live in a turpentine country, and we get some money nearly all the year round; now, in a cotton country or a provision country they only get their money in the fall of the year and the winter, but we have our first 'dipping,' which comes along in April or May, according to the seasons, and if any of us have any 'virgin boxes' we get the 'virgin dips' a little earlier. Now we ought to pay the preacher a portion of his claim out of the 'virgin dips,' and then out of the next dipping of old dips, and when the 'second dipping comes we ought to pay again out of that, and when the 'third dipping' comes pay again out of that, and so when the 'scrape' begins to come we shall have our assessments so nearly paid up that we can pay it easily out of the 'scrape,' and come out square and fair at the end of the year. Now, if we postpone paying at the first, second and third dippings, perhaps when the 'scrape' comes off there will not be enough to pay the claim, and then we shall be defaulters. No, brethren, we must not trust to the 'scrape;' it may fail us and then the preacher would suffer; but at every dipping from the 'virgin' to the 'scrape' let us give the preacher his share and he will be provided with money and we shall have done our duty. No, brethren, let us not trust to the 'scrape!'"

It is needless to say that the brother's speech met the applause of the Church. It showed that he was wise in council, and they will no doubt follow his advice when another season rolls round. Do not the principles involved in the speech meet the case of every appointment in the country? Where is it that the members of the Church pay their dues out of the "virgin," the very "first fruits' of the year? We fear the places are few, and that there is a general disposition to delay, to postpone, to find some other way of appropriating the first, the second and the third dippings—some way whose merits, if they were thoroughly analyzed, would not bear comparison with the merit of meeting fully the obligation due to the Lord and the Church. They enlarge upon the subject, it commends itself to the good sense of every one who looks at it and then at his duty. Alas, when we look at the proceedings of the various District Conferences, and when we hear from other sources what has been collected for the Church this year, we fear that many of the members and even some of the stewards are waiting for the "scrape"—the last and poorest of the crops to pay off the Lord's claims with, and if the "scrape" should fail, then what will they do? How will they look, how will they feel, when at the Conference in Raleigh it shall be announced that "Turpentine Circuit" has failed to pay the just claim of the preacher in charge?

O. L. E. STYLES.

MR. EDITOR: The object for which I sent the communication on the character of the reported speeches of some of the distinguished visitors from the South, to Round Lake and Sea Cliff, has been accomplished. The public and emphatic denial by Dr. Lee of the things reported to have been said by Bishop Doggett and himself, has put them right before the public, and thereby saved the Church from much trouble. The Doctor's pen is a little too caustic in a sentence or two, but in the main I am delighted with the spirit of his reply.

These are eventful days in Church and State, and it will not do for brethren, it matters not how elevated their position, when grossly misrepresented on vital questions, to rely upon "conscious innocence and integrity." The times demand more, and Dr. Lee has acted wisely in putting himself right before the reading public. I had not seen the denial by the editors of the Richmond Christian Advocate when I wrote my former letter. But I am sure that neither Bishop Doggett nor Dr. Lee has been damaged by the Doctor's communication. There must have been a vast difference between the reported speeches of some of these honored brethren, and their real ones.—The reporters did make some sound not only like a calf, but like a lost one seeking its "mother." My confidence in, and respect for these two learned and honored members of the M. E. Church, South, is greater than ever before. But I have no apologies to offer for writing upon the subject.

Our District Conference has just closed. It was a grand success. There was a larger attendance of laymen than they have ever had in this District. The love feast, Sunday morning, was a precious season. The general interests of the Church were carefully considered. There are many things to deplore, but improvement was reported in nearly every charge, and quite a number of the laymen present promised to go home and erect the family altar. There is life in this grand old Cape Fear country, and by the blessing of God, and earnest efforts upon the part of preachers and people, we expect to witness better times. There have been three elegant new churches completed this year—one at Scottsville, Topsail circuit; one near Swansboro, Onslow circuit; and one at Pardie's, Elizabeth circuit. These are handsome buildings, and would do credit to any of our small towns. Some of the preachers are feeble, but all are working up to their full strength, and many of them with great success.—There have been a number of gracious revivals in the bounds of the District. They are now sowing; the reaping time will come. May they bring many sheaves with them.

Doub's Chapel S. S Picnic

Doub's Chapel is well known for its antiquity as Methodist ground. There was the child-hood home of Rev. Peter Doub, and the life-time homes of Revs. Joseph and Michael Doub, the latter still living and not a decade younger than our Senior "Knight of the Cross," Dr. L. Pierce.

The Picnic was held on Saturday Sept. 26th, in the beautiful oak grove near the Chapel. The weather was pleasant. The crowd began to gather early in the morning. At 10. A. M. the school met in the church, formed in procession and marched to the platform prepared for them. All seated, they sang "Sabbath morn is Breaking," then followed an opening prayer, after which the audience was entertained with singing and "music sweet, music soft." Mr. O. W. F. Doub presided at the melodeon, assisted by his wife and Miss. Virginia Anderson. Rev. Z. Rush, P. C. delivered an address, which was listened to with attention. The audience was again favored with music till they were invited to a sumptuous dinner which had been prepared, brought in baskets and spread on tables for all present to partake. Dinner over and fragments taken up, a short time was given for "lying loose around." About 2. P. M. the audience was again called to order, entertained with music and addressed by Rev. Greider of the Moravian Church. One of the speakers of the day said the Moravians and we (Methodists) are friends. If he had said "we have fallen in love," many would have owned up to the passion. Dear Uncle Mike Doub made the concluding remarks, in which he thanked God that he had lived to see that day. On the whole it was a day free from care and temptation.

"A day of gladness, peace and rest,
A day of joy to every breast."

Good order and good feeling prevailed, and all went to their homes, evidently pleased with themselves and with one another. If any received a larger share of the blessing than your correspondent, let them prove it by sending you a brighter cluster of oak grove leaves.

M. R. PEACOCK

A LAYMAN, calling himself "a veteran layman," writing for the New York Christian Advocate, and making suggestions to young ministers gives some excellent advice. Take the following as a specimen:

When visiting a brother minister, and sitting with him in the pulpit, I do not think it seemly for you to be looking round upon the congregation; it is better to be reading a hymn, or engaged in silent prayer; neither to me is it becoming, under like circumstances, to converse in a whisper with your friend; if it be not proper for members to talk in church, neither is it for ministers. To hear the sermon, the best way is to go down into the altar so as to face the speaker.

Were I a clergyman I do not think I would sing a song, though it be "The Star Spangled Banner," at a great political assemblage, even if the meeting was held in honor of the election of a Presidential candidate. Neither would I, on the eve of such an election, on a Saturday night, make a speech consisting principally of anecdotes that excited "roars of laughter' to a crowded audience—it seems to me but a poor preparation for the Sabbath. These instances have really occurred, and I thus publicly—though my views may be of little consequence—express my disapprobation of them. Such examples by ministers of the gospel, whose sole duty should be to win souls to Christ, ought not to be imitated.

Rev. Mr. Coxe in an address before the national congregational council recently held at New Haven, said, Methodism was a difficult thing to define in a word but it meant the adaptation of all good things to the service and praise of God. He was happy to tell them that our doctrines were faithfully preached and our discipline administered. Our system works well; we think it has about reached Christian, if not sinless, perfection. Our missions girdle the globe, and our increment astounds all familiar with statistics.

HIS NOSS.—Here is an elderly successful business man, who draws near the cross. "Any thing but that!" he exclaims, as the Angel of the Covenant points to the cross which is to dash out his success, wreck his ships, break down his largest debtors. "Any thing but that!" Yet nothing but that could effect the purpose. Alas! even a child might be taken away, and that could not bow your heart and wean your ambition as the outgo of your fortune, either by your voluntary gifts or by the disastrous compulsions of an all-wise Providence.

The Indiana Conference raised during the past year $8,781 for missions.

Revival Intelligence.

Rev. N. G. Whittington writes, 28 Sept:

BRO. BOBBITT: God is still blessing the good people of Alexander circuit. I held a protracted meeting at Hopewell, where God manifested himself to the Church as he does not to the world. The Church was wonderfully revived. Three were converted to God and one backslider reclaimed.—One joined the Church.

Rev L. Shell writes, 3rd October:

I have been much delighted to see in your paper the many reports of revivals through our Conference bounds, and I am happy to say that the good Lord has visited us in great mercy on the Mocksville circuit. We have had a gracious season at 6 of my appointments and have enjoyed great refreshings of the Holy Spirit. The Church has been greatly refreshed. 70 or 80 persons have professed to find pardon and salvation in Christ, and many left anxiously seeking. About 70 have joined the Church and others will. To God be all the glory, and let all the people praise him!

Rev. J. N. Somers writes:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: Please say through your most excellent paper that we are enjoying a gracious revival on the Statesville circuit. We held a protracted meeting at New Salem, embracing the first Sunday in September, which resulted in over twenty conversions and a number of accessions to the Church. Bro. Scroggs, from the Stokes circuit was with me part of the time and did us good service. Bro. Buie preached us one good sermon. We protracted our fourth quarterly meeting. It was held at Trinity Church, embracing the second Sunday in September. Bro. Woods, our beloved Presiding Elder, was with us till Monday, preaching with his usual zeal. Bro. Scroggs was with us part of the time. Bro. H. D. Lequeux rendered us good service. This meeting will be long remembered by the friends at Trinity. It resulted in ten conversions and eight joined the Church. To God be all the glory!

Brother D Matt Thompson, of Rock Spring Seminary, writes Oct. 3rd:

DEAR BRO: Our school is progressing finely. We have eighty students, and they are still coming in. Rock Spring Seminary is an established fact. We expect to reach a hundred students this winter. The new parsonage on the Rock Spring circuit is about completed, and our preacher, the Rev. J W. Puett has moved into it. Quite a sad affair occurred in our midst during the past week. On last Thursday morning, while in one room of the house alone, the clothing of Rev. Henry Asbury, a local minister of Rock Spring circuit, caught fire. He ran out of the house, and was observed by some members of the family, some distance off, only after his clothing was all ablaze. By the time assistance reached him his clothing was entirely burnt off of him. He was burnt so severely that he died at six o'clock on the evening of the same day. He was buried to-day—funeral services by Rev J. W. Puett. Bro. Asbury will be greatly missed within the bounds of the Rock Spring circuit. He left assurance that all was well.

Rev. R. S. Webb writes:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: We rejoice to hear such cheering news, through the Advocate, from so many of our circuits and stations.

We are glad to be able to say to the lovers of Zion, that, "The Lord has been doing great things for us" on Alamance circuit, "whereof we are glad." We commenced a meeting at Macedonia the third Sunday in August, which lasted over a week. The small membership was greatly revived, about thirty professed conversion, and twelve were added to the church. Our meeting at Clover Garden embraced the first and second Sundays in August inclusive, and closed on the next Tuesday. It was a meeting of unusual interest and power, christians were greatly revived, backsliders reclaimed, and about forty professed conversion, eighteen were added to the church. In connection with our fourth Quarterly Meeting at Phillip's Chapel, was held a camp meeting, which was a great success. It was a feast to the soul to be there, especially toward the latter part of it. Between forty and fifty professed conversion, and thirty were received into the church. Many backsliders were reclaimed. The tent holders broke up camp on Saturday, having spent a week, feeling that they had been richly paid for the sacrifices they had made for the cause of God. The meeting continued through the Sabbath. J. P. Moore our Presiding Elder, J. B. Martin, T. J. Gattis, and J. T. Harris, of our Conference were with us during our camp-meeting, and rendered good service. Bro. Ball of the Methodist Protestant Church, was with me a part of the time at the camp-meeting and also at Clover Garden, rendering valuable assistance. He has been greatly blessed in his labors on his circuit. Bro. Wm. H. Thompson a local preacher of our circuit was with me at all of these meetings. He is one of the most useful local preachers I have ever been associated with, is "abundant in labors," and fights, "not as one that beateth the air," for he uses the "Sword of the Spirit" skilfully.

Among the converts at these meetings were some very old men, and several heads of families with their children. Others will join us yet, while a goodly number will join other communions.

The laymen of our own church and other churches did a good part.

The brethren from Cedar Grove, with Bro. Wilson Atwater, and Isaac Mann, rendered good service at Clover Garden. Romance of Cross is moving toward the front. To God be all the glory.

Rev. J. Sanford writes us 7th. October:

I am having very gracious times on Lilesville Circuit, which perhaps I will report when I get through the campaign.

Rev. L. H. Gibbons sends us good news from his circuit. He says:

We have been blessed with some gracious outpourings of the Spirit on the Carthage circuit. Within two months past about eighty persons have professed conversion at our meetings. Upwards of fifty have joined the Church, and there are others to join.

Rev. V. A. Sharpe writes:

We had a most excellent C. M. at Shiloh on Dallas ct.—23 conversions, and 22 accessions to the church. There is wonderful improvement in every respect, in this circuit in the last three years. I shall not be surprised if Dallas develops into a first class circuit within the next ten years.

Rev. E. W. Thompson, in charge of Fayetteville Station, writes Oct. 7th:

During a meeting which we have recently held in this charge 28 persons joined on profession, and 4 by letter. There will be other accessions soon.

Rev. John T. Brogden in charge of Swift Creek Mission sends the following account of the work of grace in his charge:

BRO. BOBBITT: For the last two months I have been engaged in protracted meetings at several appointments on Swift Creek Mission. We have been blessed with interesting meetings. The Lord has been with us. The membership at these appointments have been refreshed and confirmed in the faith of the Gospel. Upwards of 30 precious souls have been quickened into life by the Spirit's power, and added to the church. Subscriptions are out to raise means to erect churches of our own at two of these appointments. Bro. E. Hoover an L. D. of the Washington Station was with me one Sunday at one of these meetings and preached with telling effect. Bro. W. Ecklin a zealous exhorter of the Mission was with me through the meeting and rendered good service. It closed with 16 accessions to the church. Bros. R. Moore and S. Ormond, two veteran fathers in the Local ranks, were with me at an other appointment and labored most acceptably; two added to the church. Bro. W. Wine an L. D. of the Newbern circuit rendered good service at another appointment, Bro. D. Culbreth come over and preached two earnest gospel sermons for us and administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper—eight accessions. Several other meetings have been held at which members have been received. Help us praise the Lord for what he has already done, and to pray him for greater success in building up the church and in winning precious souls to Christ.

Rev. E. J. Holden, from Nashville circuit sends us good news from his charge. He writes 7th October:

BRO. BOBBITT: We have had several good meetings since my last to you. We held a meeting at Morne's Church, resulting in the conversion of 19 souls, fourteen at Sharon and twelve at Nashville. My circuit is in a fine condition; all seem to be trying to work for the cause of our Master. We have been preaching nearly all the time, and now have but a few weeks to get ready for Conference. The ADVOCATE meets with a hearty reception all around. May God still bless your efforts!

Watch the Books

How large a proportion of mothers and guardians exercise anything which can be called watchful care as to what books and papers the children shall read? And yet the booksellers' shelves groan under the weight of the most dissipating, weakening, and insidious books that can possibly be imagined; and newspapers which ought never to enter any decent house lie on the table of many a family sitting-room. Any one who will take the trouble to examine the records of any large circulating library will be astonished at the immense demand which there is for these average novels. And, in our parlors and chambers to-day, myriads of little girls are curled up in corners, poring over such reading—stories of complicated modern society, the very worst kind of reading for a child; stories "whose exciting pages delight in painting the love of the sexes for each other, and its sensual phases." And the mothers do not know what they are reading: and the children answer, when asked what they read: "Oh, any thing that comes along!"—Anna C. Brackett.

BISHOP PAINE writes us that he agrees with us "that the Conferences should this year elect to orders under the old rule." We hope all those who were admitted on trial last year will pass a good examination on the course of study for two years, and be ordained deacons; and that those who were ordained deacons last year will in like manner pass a good examination on the two-years' course, and be ordained elders.—Nashville Advocate.

The faculty of Emory College and the citizens of Oxford, Ga., have agreed to educate two Mexican young men for mission work in the M. E. Church South in Mexico, free of expense for tuition or board.

Rev. Dr. Talmage's Church received into its membership ninety two new members recently in one day. It is said that more than four hundred persons have joined this Church since the Church has entered the tabernacle.

In the Fiji Island, where forty years ago the people were so debased as to drink blood from human skulls, strangle widows and children, bury alive the helpless and the aged, etc., 10,000 people now sit under the Methodist ministry alone, 25,000 attend the class-meetings, and 53,000 children are in the Sabbath-schools.

The Russian Government has refused to allow the American Bible Society to circulate the Scriptures in Armenian and Ararat dialect among its Georgian subjects and other Armenian Christians in the Southern provinces. Meanwhile the sacred volume is eagerly bought by these Russian Armenians from traders, who smuggle the books across the border.

The lecture by Miss Lillian J. Edgarton, the lady orator of Boston, at Tucker Hall last Thursday evening, was highly appreciated by the refined and complimentary audience present. Her theme was "Fashion and Gossip—their Abuse and Remedy." She is a woman of intellect and philosophizes well. Her manners are easy and pleasing, her voice rich, melodious and cultivated, and her lecture instructive and entertaining, and despite the prejudices which we, in common with the Southern people, have against lady speakers, we were highly edified by listening to her for an hour and a half. The inclemency of the weather prevented her lecturing on Friday evening, as had been arranged for her to do.

MR. T. N. RAMSAY, under whose auspices she came to Raleigh, deserves much credit for his self-sacrificing efforts to furnish our citizens with profitable entertainment. To him alone, Raleigh has been indebted for the appearance of several distinguished lecturers and readers within the last two years, and he should receive more encouragement than has been extended to him heretofore.

Literary Notices.

MESSRS. A. K. BUTTS & Co. will publish Professor Tyndall's Belfast Address in book form.

AN edition of the old service-book of the Celtic Church, preserved at Drummond Castle, is to be published, by subscription, by the Pitsligo Press, Buntisland.

A STORY by Mrs. E. Prentiss, author of "Stepping Heavenward," entitled "Urbane and his Friends in Council," will soon be published by A. D. Randolph & Co.

A LIFE of Thomas Fuller, the Church historian, compiled from authentic sources by J. E. Bailey, with numerous illustrations, will shortly appear in two volumes octavo, published by B. M. Pickering, London.

MESSRS. SAMPSON, Low & Co., London have in the press a "Romance of Acadia, Two Centuries ago," from a sketch by the late Charles Knight. This is a tale founded on the early history of Nova Scotia, begun by Charles Knight, and finished by his daughter and granddaughter. It will fill three volumes.

THE London correspondent of the SCOTSMAN states that more than 3,000 documents, partly in manuscript, partly in the print of the period, describing the rise and development of the various religions sects in Europe, were collected by Prof. Schneider, of Berlin, in the course of nearly fifty years' book hunting, and are now awaiting a purchaser in the shop of some one of the European seats of learning. Great efforts are making in Berlin, Munich, and other university towns of Germany, to keep the collection in Germany.

OUR LIVING AND OUR DEAD.—This excellent magazine for October is on our table. It is published for a noble purpose, and is conducted with ability. Mr. T. B. Kingsbury has been engaged on the editorial staff. Published at Raleigh, N. C., S. D. Pool, Editor and Proprietor, $3 a year in advance.

We have received a copy of the reply of Dr. Mason, late Rector of the Episcopal Church in Raleigh, to the sermon of Dr. Pritchard on Baptism. The press of work has prevented us from reading it as yet, but we learn that it is able and well written, exhaustive of the subject, and a triumphant reply to Dr. Pritchard's ingenious but erroneous arguments. We will at some future time give a more extensive notice of the book.

Tribute of Respect.

WHEREAS, At a called meeting of Eno Lodge No 210 A. F. and A. M. held Sept. 25th 1874, the undersigned were appointed to draft resolutions of respect to the memory of C. H. Lyon a member and Junior Warden of this Lodge, who departed this life Sept. 24th 1874.

WHEREAS, It has pleased our heavenly Father to remove our esteemed Brother from the labors and sorrows of the present life, Therefore,

Resolved 1st. That we bow with submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well and cherish in our hearts the hope of meeting our Brother in the perfect light of the Grand Lodge above.

Resolved 2d. That as a mason, a member of the M. E. Church South, as a citizen, friend and neighbor, husband and father, he acted well his part, and leaves behind him the savor of a good name.

Resolved 3rd. That we tender our warmest sympathies to the bereaved widow and child and relatives of the deceased, and pray God to guide and guard them through the ills of life.

Resolved 4th, That the Brethren be requested to wear the usual badge of mourning for 30 days.

Resolved 5th. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased and to the Raleigh Christian Advocate and Durham Tobacco Plant for Publication

IMPORTANT

ANNOUNCEMENT.

INSTALLMENT PLAN.

In 1871 I invented and secured a letters patent for an Improvement in Wash-Boilers;

a simple arrangement by which steam was applied to the washing of clothing. I have heretofore sold this under the name of

Steam-Washer,

OR

WOMAN'S FRIEND,

for such it is in fact. I have advertised it in nearly every Religious Newspaper in the United States and Canada, also in the leading secular papers, using double column and double page advertisements. The readers of this paper may remember seeing my Card in the various papers of the country during the past year. Extracts from letters received from my customers will indicate how it has been received by the people throughout the country.

300,000

have been sold already. It is sufficient for my purpose to say that I am satisfied that nothing heretofore advertised ever rendered so general satisfaction. Yet this, my first invention, was not quite perfect. And for the last two years I have applied myself to the study of constructing and perfecting a

New Steam-Washer

And, as the result of my efforts, I feel every assurance that I have been entirely successful. My STEAM WASHER is absolutely faultless; so much so that I never knew a single person, who has seen it work, fail to be delighted with it. It has rendered, thus far,

Perfect and Universal Satisfaction, and such must be the result, for it works like a WONDER—never failing to do all claimed for it.

In conclusion, let me say, that should any one say that he has seen a STEAM WASHER, ask him if he has seen the new

STEAM-WASHER,

now being advertised so extensively in whole page advertisements. If he answers in the negative, request him to suspend judgment until a sample can be procured and fully tested. I will send one as

A SAMLPE FOR $5.00

—just half the retail price—and I fully warrant it. After a person buys a sample, he can get them of me at cost.

$80 00 Profit can be Made on a Single Dozen, and I have known Agents to take orders for

A DOZEN IN AN HOUR

There is no way to make money faster. Send for a sample, and secure your territory. Make money while you can.

READER:

Please calculate the cost of my two page advertisement in the

"CHRISTIAN UNION."

It consists of 1,480 lines. At regular rates amounted to $1,750

EACH INSERTION!

I repeated this "Card" six times, and it has paid me

500 Per Cent.

During the last eighteen months I have inserted my advertisement, occupying one or two pages, in all of which paid well for the outlay; but the Christian Union ("the largest circulation of any religious paper in the world") pays me better than any. I mention this fact, for all can see how extensive I advertise my invention; and taking into consideration the fact that I sell it

HUNDREDS OF FIRST-CLASS PAPERS,

Entirely on its Merits,

all must concede that it sells well, for no article will sell well enough to pay for so expensive advertising

Without Real Merits.

It I can get a sample introduced into a neighborhood, it often sells

AN HUNDRED MORE.

Such a splendid chance to make money selling this invention may never occur again. See new terms

Will Cleanse Your Clothes Without Rubbing.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRENTED.

It Saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Wash Day.

It will do the Washing of the Family while you are Eating Breakfast and Doing up Dishes.

STEAM has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Paper-makers have for many years used steam in cleansing and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making by its agency the finest paper from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER, or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted no method had been discovered of applying steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleansing is going on. A Lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, than it will washed by a machine or by hand-labor, or a washboard.
5. Lace curtains and all fine fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For flannels, this Washer is most desirable as it will not full them as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing board.

It is truly a Labor and Clothes Saving Invention.

Read the following Circular and Testimonials:

I respectfully ask you to read this circular carefully, and candidly consider what I now propose to you a matter of business. Before making known to you my confidential terms, permit me to state that the matter of washing clothes is one of no small consideration; it is something that every person every family and every individual. It is but recently since Hand Washing was in common use. Latterly, however, the inventive genius of the country has been directed to the invention and construction of the various devices or machinery by which much of the labor, drudgery loss of time and wear of material might be obviated. Numerous as well as intricate WASHING MACHINES have been constructed—many of which are decided improvements over the old method of washing—and these machines have been very saleable withal. People will continue to have Washing Machines; but, let me ask you, if the STEAM WASHER can be constructed for a few dollars (much less than any ordinary Washing Machines), and enable all to wash by STEAM, without labor, loss of time, without wearing of clothes, etc., is it not reasonable to suppose that it will supersede, in a great measure, all Washing Machines now in common use? The sale of this WASHER is unparalleled, and must be so. There is nothing like it in use. It is new, and every family needs it, and will have it. I wish to secure a few good men to sell rights for me, and in order to secure as many as I need immediately, I offer extra inducements. My price for territory is $9.—60 for 1 000 inhabitants; but if you will buy a single county, and agree to sell rights for me, I will allow you to deduct 66⅔ per cent. as your commission; consequently your country would cost but $75 instead of $225 should it contain but 25 000 inhabitants; more or less, in the same proportion. And to those buying rights, I will sell Washers as nearly cost; and to those not buying rights, I will furnish Washers at $60 per dozen; and, bear in mind, I will sell to no one except a single dozen until he first buys the right to a county. Any timber can make the Washers as well as they can be made here, and save the cost of transportation. Remember, that by purchasing the right of a single county you shall have the privilege of selling any county or State for me; and upon application I will forward the deed to you by Express for any territory which you have sold for me; providing that the same territory is not already disposed of when I receive your order. I make all the deeds, so that there can be no confusion or mistakes. The amount you have to pay me is simply $3 per 1 000 inhabitants in any county or State. I shall make these very liberal offers for a short time only; after which I shall sell at my regular price—$9 per 1.000.

Many of my patrons have requested me to suggest to them the best method of selling the Woman's Friend, in order to make the most money in the shortest time practicable. In reply, I would say that there are many methods which might be suggested, all of which could work well, but the most prominent of which I will suggest. In the first place, send for a sample and carefully test it. You will bear by a single trial how to work it to the best advantage. All you have to do now is to exhibit it to others. I will suggest that you make an arrangement to wash at a certain place, at an appointed hour, manage to have as many present as possible. You will be astonished at the intense excitement it will produce after the water and steam have rushed through the tubes and foamed over the clothing, rushing back through the clothing to the lower bottom to be suddenly re-urged again in the same manner—say for thirty minutes—you take out the clothing, rinse and wring out, and find the clothing perfectly clean. You will find all parties very delighted with it.

You can take orders from place to place, to be filled afterward at $10 each. A single trial in this manner will satisfy you that the Woman's Friend is a success, and will sell. Still another way which is sure to succeed nine times to four—for you have secured a sample and know just what it will do, you can approach almost any one who has any inclination at all to engage in any business of this kind, and readily negotiate with him to take a Washer or even sell a county if it will perform all claimed for it. You will succeed ninety-nine times in a hundred to make the Washer perform to his satisfaction. You should in that case lose no time in ordering a deed for your county, to be sent by express, C. O. D., if not convenient to advance the money. You should, meantime, continue to take orders, and by the time your deed would come to hand, you might have a gross sold. You should likewise arrange with a tinner to make the Washer. The price will vary according to style and finish. I have known some agents to sell as high as twenty Washers in a day. After you have fair deposit more or less in your county, you can take another county and rest assured that whenever you can get a single Washer in the neighborhood, it will sell many more. Consequently, after you have sold a few hundred in a county you can sell the right of your county for much more than at the start. You can calculate what your gains will be by buying a single county, but this is not a tenth part of what you ought to make, for while you are traveling you will meet with many men who want to make money, to whom you can sell rights. There is no business you can engage in which offers such splendid inducements. Besides it is a safe business—no loss, and pleasant because it renders perfect satisfaction. I can not see how I can propose better terms. Should I allow my patrons to make their own terms, I scarcely believe they could make better terms for themselves, and make more money.

On receipt of Five Dollars, I will ship you a complete Washer, as a sample, a copy of the Chromo, Patent No. 42,516, together with a Certificate of Agency with full instructions how to conduct the business. And upon the receipt of the Washer you may have time to test it, and if you find it not as represented, I will refund your money. The Washers retail at $10 After I send you a sample I will hold your county a reasonable time for you to decide whether you will buy purchase or not. And if you conclude to take a county, I will let you have it on the installment plan, by which you are enable to make the money to pay for the right, out of the purchase. Thus you start in a paying business without capital or risk. I will publish blank deeds, also blanks for taking orders, and do all I can to enable you to succeed in the business. Let me hear from you soon, or your choice of territory may be taken by some one else.

ADDRESS

J. C. TILTON.

DIRECTIONS.

1. Soak the clothes over night in warm suds in the usual manner. Rinse, and put them through the wringer.

2. Put in the bottom of the WASHER a quarter bar of soap, or enough to make good suds, silted up thin, then fasten down the false bottom—see that the center valve is in the proper position; put in water enough to cover the cap over the valve, say about an inch; lay the clothes down smoothly, with the coarser parts well soaped in the WASHER—not rolled up, but spread out so that the water can circulate freely—and carefully pack the clothes down; see that the fire is hot, sufficient to generate steam; when the water boils it will begin to flow up the tubes on the outside, at the ends of the WASHER, and through the holes into the WASHER again; after a steady circulation has been going on in this manner for about thirty to forty minutes, the washing will be complete. Rinse well, and wring out—same as in the usual way. Colored clothes must not be mixed with white—use soft water for boiling ALWAYS. If hard, use soda, lye or make it soft in any other way.

If it is desired to bleach with the WASHER, this may be done by adding a tablespoonful of borax or common to a WASHER full of clothing.

ST. MARY's, Anglaize Co., O.

Dear Sir: Having used your Steam Washer for over four months, we are prepared to recommend it to the public as far the cheapest and easiest method of washing that we have ever met with. We have tested it thoroughly, washing very dirty clothing in it and know it will do all that you claim for it. We have never had to rub a single article on the washboard that has been washed in the Steam Washer since we have had it; hence, there is a great expense saved in the wearing of clothing. We could not do without it. REAL. JACKSON and WIFE.

COMFORT, Kendall Co., Texas, Feb. 10 1872

J. C. TILTON, Esq—Dear Sir: The sample Washer which I ordered arrived in due time. All who have seen it in operation are well pleased with it—it will do all that you claim for it. You will please send, C. O. D., deeds for additional counties ordered and obliged, very respectfully. JOSEPH B. HAYDEN.

MEAD, J. C. TILTON—Dear Sir: The Washer came duly to hand; accept my thanks for your promptitude. I am glad to acknowledge it all you commend. Several have come to see it used. All acknowledge it a perfect success. I wish to order a deed to Sampson Co, N.C. Please send C. O. D. Direct to

Dear Sir: The Washer came duly to hand. Accept my thanks for your promptitude. I am glad to acknowledge it all you recommend. I have spoken of it to numbers, who desire me to order one for them. Several have come to see it tried. All acknowledge it a perfect success. I write to order a deed for Henderson Co., Ky. I would send the money now, but fear that some one else has the right by this time.—(Send C. O. D.)

Rev. B. T. TAYLOR.

XENIA, Green Co., O, Feb. 6, 1874.

MR. J. C. TILTON:—Have received and used your Steam Washer. I am glad to acknowledge it does more than I expected of it. It bleaches as well as cleans my clothes without any wear and tear of them. I use it very much.

MRS. K. A. COLLINS.

WINSLOW, Me., July 15, 1873.

MR. J. C. TILTON:—Dear Sir: The Steam washer came duly to hand, and after ten months trial I am glad to be able to say it is all you recommend it to be. It saves time, labor and clothes, and the washing is ever so much that all dread of wash days is with the time past.

Wishing you success with your valuable Steam Washer, I am, yours truly, C. L. BARRETT.

IMLAY CITY, Mich, Dec 18, 1874.

J. C. TILTON, Pittsburgh, Pa.—Dear Sir: I have just read a part of your six column advertisement in the Chicago Standard. This led me to write this note. About three years ago a brother in the ministry made me acquainted with your Steam Washer. I sent for one immediately and my wife has used it ever since—when her delicate health would permit. She has always esteemed it a friend," and having used it one day she esteems it so much a "friend" as ever. Three years' services ought to be sufficient to establish its reputation in a family. It has done so in my family. It has been toward to neighbors and was always well liked.

My work as a minister gives me no time to engage in selling it—or any other secular business. But success to the "Womans Friend." Truly,

Rev. J. E. BITTING, Imlay City, Mich.

P. S.—I write this simply in recommendation of the Steam Washer. J. E. B.

The above are a few extracts from letters received.

I can publish hundreds of letters from parties who have used the Steam Washer, and speak in its praise. I have thus far declined doing so. I know full well how Certificates are looked upon. I have sold the Steam Washer upon its own merits. Thousands have used it, and it has given universal satisfaction throughout the country. I ask none to rely on what I say, or the commendations of others, but let the Washer stand on its merits. I would not ask or advise any one to engage in the business of selling Washers or rights, unless he had thoroughly tested its work; and to enable all to do so, I send a sample Washer, upon the receipt of $5 (half the retail price), and guarantee that if found not as represented I will refund the money. So there is little risk to begin with. I shall advertise it liberally hereafter. I refer you to the American Agriculturist, May 1873 and the New York Weekly Tribune. I shall continue to advertise liberally in other first-class agricultural papers, as well as the leading religious papers throughout the country. I also refer you to my two-page advertisement in the Christian Union, costing nearly $2 000 each insertion. Of course my former patrons who have bought territory—as well as those who may hereafter engage in this business—will be benefited proportionately. I am confident that the Steam Washer will be used in every family.

GREENE'S

OXYGENATED BITTERS.

The stomach is one of the most delicate organs of the human system; and the indigestible food crowded into it by the requirements of modern society, keep it in which is followed by a resort to [illegible] and alteratives for relief. It unfortunately [illegible] however, that many of the medicines used [illegible] upon contain alcohol, which, poured into [illegible] each meal produces irritation, creates inflammation, and does more injury than good.

A STATE OF CHRONIC DISORDER,

OXYGENATED BITTERS CONTAIN NO ALCOHOL,

but are purely medicinal preparation which, in cases of DYSPEPSIA, HEARTBURN, INDIGESTION, and other like disorders, at once restores the stomach to its NATURAL CONDITION OF HEALTH.

The OXYGENATED BITTERS have been the most popular remedy for the above complaints for the last THIRTY YEARS, and still maintain their UNRIVALLED POPULARITY.

BRADLEY'S PATENT ENAMEL PAINT.

Made from Pure White Lead, Linseed Oil & Zinc, & Always Ready for Use.

—o—

READ THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS:

From Prof. W. G. Simmons, Wake Forest College, North Carolina.

WAKE FOREST COLLEGE, N. C., Oct. 4, 1873

Mr. C. P. Knight—Dear Sir: We have for several months been using your Bradley's Patent Enamel Paint on our College Building, and are well pleased with it. Though it was applied by one having no experience in such work, yet we have a good job.—We shall continue to use it—believing that in point of economy, durability and facility of application, it is superior to any other pigment offered in the market.

W. G. SIMMONS

—o—

From S. McGill, M. D.

THE PLAINS, FAQUIER CO., Va., Feb. 6, 1873.

Mr. C. P Knight,—Sir: The Paint came safe to hand as ordered, 2 kegs, 5 gallons each, and 2 buckets, 1 gallon each. As practice was sheck, I did the job myself. Two weeks (not constantly work, exercised the house, ten coats; the last coat I applied, thick and [illegible] now generally conceded, that, for "general" like hardness, and body, and harmony of color, there is not a handsomer job in the place. I saved sixty-five dollars by the operation—which is no item now with Southern people. It should be generally adopted in this State. Any country lad can apply it. I have never dabbled in such stock as "Prepared," but I feel so forcibly the great adaptability of your "Enamel Paint" to the wants of our people—its excellency of material, in beauty of color, and in the fact of its being "ready mixed," that I give you permission (if it is desirable to you) to make what use you think proper of this letter. Very respectfully and truly, S. McGILL, M. D

From the Vestry of Mount Calvary Church

Baltimore, August 18, 1874.

MR. C. P. KNIGHT—Dear Sir: We take pleasure in testifying to the excellent qualities of the Paint obtained from you, and applied to the exterior of Mount Calvary Church, in this city. It has now been nearly two years since it was put on, and for beauty of color, freshness of gloss and durability, it has fulfilled our largest expectations. Respectfully yours,

BARNARD CARTER,
S. C. CUSH, M. D.,
JAMES M. ANDERSON,
BENJ. C. BARROLL.

From Messrs. Englehard & Saunders, Editors and Proprietors "Journal."

WILMINGTON, N. C., Dec. 23, 1873.

We desire to call especial attention to the advertisement of "Bradley's Patent Enamel Paint." We can commend it from a knowledge of its merits. Some of the employees of this office having purchased some of this paint from Mr. C. P. Knight of Baltimore, have used it, and speak in the highest terms of it, after a trial of several months. While it is as durable as ordinary paint, it has a much finer finish, and its cost and convenience will recommend it to all in need of paint.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

The Source of Many Ills.

If all the ailments, bodily and mental, which torment the human family could be traced to their primary sources, it would probably be found that three-fourths of them originated in the failure of the stomach and the other organ by which the food is converted into nutriment and applied to the purposes of life, to perform the tasks allotted to them by nature, vigorously and regularly. This being the case the vast importance of a medicine which compels these organs to do their whole duty thoroughly and efficiently, becomes at once apparent. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters may be truly characterized as a preparation of the kind, inasmuch as the only one which can be implicitly relied on as combining the properties of a stimulant, an alterative and an aperient in such proportions as to produce simultaneously the desired effect upon the disordered stomach, liver and intestines. The conclusion is warranted by the celerity and certainty with which the Bitters afford relief in extreme cases of dyspepsia, torpidity of the liver and constipation. The false idea that these complaints and others that grow out of them, could be cured by mere cathartics, has at last, it is hoped, been thoroughly exploded. Headache, during the last hundred years have sustained thousands of tons of mercury, scammony, gamboge, croton oil, jalap, aloe., and other disagreeable drugs have been promiscuously hailed thereby, and ever since the principle of renovation, as embodied in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, was attacked against, the principle of prostration, as represented by mineral calomels and farinaceous purgatives the latter has steadily and surely fallen into deserved contempt. The misery against assimilation by which conscious of opposing principles hoped to give vent in their disgusting and dangerous contempts has only served to increase the demand for the wholesome stimulant, tonic and alterative which for twenty-five years triumphed over all opposition and is now the most popular medicine in the Western hemisphere.

Bradley's Patent Enamel Paint.

It is but little more than a quarter of a century since the art of mixing paint was confined almost exclusively to a few comparatively speaking. Now, however, through the ingenuity of BRADLEY, we are not only enabled to apply the paint it well ought to, but can see the shades in advance, sample cards being furnished gratis, with the different series of tints, numbered, from which we select the "Enamel Paint," speak from experience, that it is all that is claimed for it, and evidently supercede the "old style paint." As an explosive of the great worth of the Enamel Paint, we must respectfully request all our readers to carefully read the excellent testimonials of Mr. C. P. Knight, in this paper.

DR. C. M'LANE'S
CELEBRATED
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder-blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for a rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, has cold creeps and or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can seldom summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the liver to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. M'LANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them A FAIR TRIAL.

Address all orders to
FLEMING BROS., PITTSBURGH, PA.

P. S. Dealers and Physicians ordering from other than Fleming Bros., will do well to write their orders distinctly, and take none but Dr. C. M'Lane's, Sr. Sorely Fleming Bros., Pittsburgh, Pa. To those ordering, we give them a trial, we will forward per mail, post paid, to any part of the United States, one box of Pills, on receipt of three cent postage stamps, or one vial of Vermifuge for fourteen three-cent stamps. All orders from Canada must be accompanied by twenty cents extra.

Sold by all respectable Druggists and Country Storekeepers generally.

CARY COTTON GIN.
The Latest, Best and Cheapest.

I offer the public the latest improved Cotton Gin, as well as the cheapest. The following certificates from well known gentlemen, will be more satisfactory than any thing I can say:

NEAR CARY, N. C., 2 or 3 mi., 14th, 1873.

This is to certify that I am using one of the Cary Gins sold to me by W. M. Sorrell, of Cary, N. C., and that I am well pleased with it and would cheerfully recommend it to any one wanting a good Gin.

A. B. YATES.

CARY, N. C., May 22nd, 1874.

I take pleasure in saying that the fifty Saws Cotton Gin I purchased from Mr. W. M. Sorrell, known as the Cary Gin, does far better work than any Gin I have heretofore used, though costing from 50 to 100 per cent. less money. I think any person in want of a Gin will save money by purchasing the Cary Gin, its performance has been entirely satisfactory to me, I can cheerfully recommend it to others.

A. F. PAGE

We certify that the Cary Gin has given entire satisfaction to our neighbors, who have tried it, and we think it an excellent gin.

RESTORE YOUR SIGHT.
Spectacles Rendered Useless.
Save Your Eyes.
RESTORE YOUR SIGHT,
THROW AWAY YOUR SPECTACLES.
Old Eyes Made New.

All diseases of the Eye successfully treated by

Dr. J. BALL & CO.'S
NEW PATENT IMPROVED IVORY EYE CUPS.

Read for yourself and Restore your Sight. Spectacles and surgical operations rendered useless. The inestimable Blessing of sight is made perpetual by the use of the new PATENT IMPROVED IVORY EYE CUPS.

Many of our most eminent physicians, oculists, students and divines have had their sight permanently Restored for life, as I can testify to the following diseases:

1. Impaired Vision; 2. Presbyopia, or Far-sight dness, or Diseases of Vision, commonly called Blurring; 3. Asthenopia, or Weak Eyes; 4 Epiphora, Running or Watery Eyes; 5 Sore Eyes—specially treated with the Eye Cups—cure guaranteed; 6. Weakness of the Retina, or Optic Nerve; 7. Ophthalmia, or Inflammation of the Eye and its appendages, or imperfect vision from the effects of Inflammation; 8. Photophobia, or Intolerance of Light; 9. Overworked Eyes; 10. Dyscopia—moving specks or floating bodies before the eyes; 11. Amaurosis, or Obscurity of Vision; 12. Cataracts; Partial Blindness; the loss of Sight.

Any one can use the Ivory Eye Cups without the aid of a doctor or medicine so as to receive immediate beneficial results and never wear spectacles; or, if using now, to lay them aside forever. We guarantee a cure in every case where the directions are followed, or will refund the money.

2,500 CERTIFICATES OF CURE

from honest Farmers, Mechanics and Merchants—some of them the most eminent leading professional and business men, and women of education and refinement, in our country—can be found at our office.

Under date of March 22 Hon. Horace Greely, of the New York Tribune, writes: "J. Ball, of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

Prof W. Merrick, of Lexington, Ky., wrote, April 24th, 1869: "Without my spectacles I can you this note, after using the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS thirteen days, and this Morning perused the entire contents of a daily newspaper, and all with the unassisted eye. Truly am I grateful for your noble invention. May Heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using spectacles evenly years; I am seventy years old.

Truly yours, PROF. W. MERRICK.

Rev. Joseph Stoltz, Malden, Mass., cured of Partial Blindness of 18 years' standing, in one minute, by the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS.

E. C. Mills, late Mayor of Dayton, Ohio, wrote us, Nov. 15th, 1869: "I have tested the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS, and I am satisfied that they are good. I am pleased with them. They are the greatest invention of the age.

Wm. Beatly, M. D., Sulvia Ky., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions, my sight is fully restored, after being almost entirely blind for 26 years.

Alex. R. Wyeth, M. D., Atchison, Pa., writes: After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by paralysis of the optic nerve by the aforesaid treatment your PATENT EYE CUPS restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes."

All persons wishing for full particulars, certificates of cures, prices, &c., will please send their address to us, and we will send our pamphlet on the ILLUSTRATED PHYSIOLOGY AND ANATOMY OF THE EYESIGHT, of one hundred pages, free of charge, by return mail. Write to Dr. J. Ball & Co. P. O. Box 957. No 91 Liberty Street, New York City, N. Y.

Special Notice.

Our agents and patrons will bear in mind the announcement in our last, that after the first of January, postage on all papers must be paid at this office before mailed to subscribers.—All new subscriptions and renewals must in future be accompanied with 20 cents to pay the postage. $2 subscription and 20 cents postage.

We are pleased to learn that our preachers generally are being well taken care of. Some of our circuits and stations have shown commendable zeal in raising the full assessment of their pastors. This is as it should be on every charge. Take care of your preacher and he will be better prepared to successfully serve the church.

A Worthy Example.—An intelligent and pious layman sends us six dollars to pay the annual subscription of three persons who are too poor to pay for it themselves. Are there not many in our church who will aid in supplying destitute families with a copy of the paper?

The Tryon Street Record speaks thus kindly of the Raleigh Christian Advocate: "We are proud of the Raleigh Christian Advocate. It is the only religious paper published by our church within the bounds of our Conference, and should be patronized by all our people. It is bold in utterance, dignified in discussion and mild in temper. Just what all religious journals should be."

The Advocate is daily adding to its list of working friends. The words of encouragement from brethren in every District in the Conference, stimulate us in our delicate, responsible, and arduous work. We are striving to do the work of the Master, and we are happy to know that we have the prayers, sympathy and co-operation of our brethren both among the ministry and laity. May the great head of the church direct our mind and heart in the way of usefulness!

W. J. Yates, editor of the Charlotte Democrat says: For some weeks past a revival of religion has been progressing in the Methodist and Baptist Churches of this city. Several persons have been added to the membership of both Churches. The Rev. Mr. Carraway, the Pastor of the Methodist Church here, has made many friends during the past Conference year, and is deservedly popular with all classes of our citizens. Everybody seems to like Mr. Carraway.

We are much gratified at the promptness with which our patrons are renewing their subscription to the Advocate. Many write us that the paper is a necessity in their families; they cannot afford to do without it. We are also adding many new names to our list. Our circulation is larger than ever before, and the prospects of the paper are brightening every day. We are maturing arrangements for an enlargement and some improvements in other respects. Let all the friends of the paper aid in making it all that the church demands and the Conference desires that it should be.

The New Rule:—The Tennessee Conference votes yeas 45; nays 107. South-West Missouri Conference—yeas, 23; nays 46. Louisville Conference yeas 65, nays 49. Thus far only two of the Conferences held, of which we have an account, have voted for the proposed new rule. The rest have given large majorities against it. The question is being ably discussed through the columns of this paper, and we suppose that the brethren will all come to Conference with their minds made up as to how they will vote.

Vanderbilt University.—At the late meeting of the Board of Trust of the Vanderbilt University the following were elected to fill vacancies in the institution:

The vacancy in the Board, occasioned by the death of the Rev. Dr. A. L. P. Green, was filled by the election of the Rev. Dr. R. A. Young. Also, the vacancy occasioned by the transfer of the Rev. W. C. Hearn from Arkansas to Colorado, was filled by the election of the Rev. Dr. A. R. Winfield. Dempsey Weaver, Esq., was elected Treasurer, an office previously held by Dr. Green. Two additional officers of instruction were elected at this meeting. Milton W. Humphreys, Ph. D., was elected Prof. of Greek Language and Literature. B. W. Arnold, A. M., was elected Adjunct Professor of Latin Language and Literature.

Importance of Right Thought.

Nothing is truer than the scriptural assertion that "as a man thinketh so is he."

The character of a man's thoughts determines his moral character. If they be pure, he will be pure—if they be vicious, he will be vicious in his conduct and life—if they be loose, unfixed and wandering, he will be fickle, unstable and unhappy. All acts of sane persons are predetermined by thought and receive their coloring from it, and a man's career, be it good or bad, is but the sum of his thoughts worked out to their legitimate results. Theft lurks in the tiny thought that envies a neighbor's goods; and between the malicious suggestion that the mind receives from spite and hatred of our fellow and the gallows, there are regular links, many perhaps, but all connected.

It is not evil acts alone that are sinful in the sight of God. The thoughts that precede them, and even when they are not put in act but remain lurking in the mind—are to the pure eye of God obnoxious and unclean. It is only he who "thinketh no evil" who can dwell in the perfect favor of Him whose knowledge extends further than to the outward conduct of his creatures, and searches the inmost secrets of their hearts. Prone as we are to sin, we can not only refrain from committing overt acts of violence to God's moral law, but can suppress and drive away from our minds those thoughts which are impure and sinful. They will arise by force of the promptings of our nature, but can be instantly suppressed if we be on the alert and unwilling to indulge their stay for even a moment. With something of the strength of will which Christ used when he said: "Get the behind me, Satan," we can put his suggestions to flight and drive them to their hiding place, abashed and crestfallen. But once indulging their stay, and regarding them with the least degree of allowance, they will grow in strength and assurance, and remain to defile and ruin our purity and peace of mind.

Idle thought which is not positively stamped with evil, is also hurtful to the moral nature of man, as it certainly is to his mental. By a continued indulgence in idle, unfixed thought the transition to positively evil thought is natural and easy, and one becomes thereby incapacitated for sober, sound and profitable thought. Reverie, says a philosopher of no mean distinction, will lead to puerility and if long protracted, to insanity even. The laws of the mind are so nicely regulated that, if they are violated, the consequences are ruinous and irreparable.

The Sin of Idleness.

Idleness is the bane of all earthly hopes—the poison that cankers and destroys all that is good and noble and great in man. If it did nothing more than prevent progress—if it simply pinned man to the position he was in at his birth, it would be a great evil that every consideration of self-interest would prompt one to avoid. But it stops not at that. Man is so constituted that there must be progress or there must be deterioration. There is no resting place—no nodal point at which there is no motion;—there must be improvement, or there must of necessity be debasement of his nature and faculties. There is no level plain on which man may pursue his life-journey. It is a mountain steep which he must ascend or descend. The prizes glitter at the top, and the dispenser of them beckons man on to strive to gain them, but in clear and no uncertain and unmistakeable tones he says: "Come higher, or go lower!" Man is filled with propensions and desires which are always active and impel him to something. If they do not point to something high, they drag him to something low: he must look up or he must go down: he is compelled by the moving, active throng of the world, busy with its teeming life and its hurrying to and fro, either to march forward or to retreat in his cowardice, and covered with shame and disgrace. This fact of man's nature has shown itself in all periods. Society or government has never been at a standstill on the graduated scale of its destiny. No Joshua has ever stopped the sun of civilization in its course where it remained shedding its rays upon the world from its solstice; but it has either mounted the sky in its fiery chariot and scattered its radiance as it rose higher and brighter to its zenith, or it has gone down the declining West and waned as it dipped its light in the mould of decay.

So it is with man, who must grow better or become worse, and if his body and brain be idle, his evil passions will bear supreme rule, and his descent in the scale of respectability and worth is sure as it is grievous and startling.

We were favored with a visit, the past week, from Revs. W. C. Gannon, E. A. Yates, J. E. Thompson, B. B. Culbreth, W. H. Bobbitt and J. P. Moore.

The annual session of the Holston Conference convened in Asheville, N. C., on the 14th inst, Bishop Doggett presiding.

The Advocate should be placed in every Methodist family in our bounds. Let every subscriber send us one new name between this and Conference.

Bishop Merrill refused to ordain Mrs. Van Cott, at the late session of the California Conference. She had been recommended by the quarterly conference of one of the San Francisco Churches.

The State Fair.

The expectations of the officers and friends of the N. C. Agricultural Society were fully met last week.—The exhibition of articles in all the departments was very fine, while the array of improved stock was much better than is usually seen at Fairs in North Carolina. The attendance was very great and gratifying, the crowd on the grounds on Thursday being estimated at from 10 000 to 12,000 persons. A large crowd attended every day until Saturday, when the exhibition closed. The weather was very propitious, and everything contributed to make the occasion a success, and one to be remembered with pleasure by all who were present. The grounds were well guarded by an efficient police-force, as also by Mr. A. W. Graham, the Chief-Marshal and his assistants. We learn that the Fair was a success pecuniarily. The music was furnished by the Newberne, Salisbury and Raleigh Bands, and was the best we have ever been furnished with at a State Fair.

We cannot speak too highly in praise of the officers who managed, and the people who, interested in the good of the State, visited our Fair. We bespeak for it a still greater prosperity in the future. There were some objectionable features, such as the betting on horse-racing and the appearance on the grounds of two or three lottery stands, the latter of which we had understood, should not be countenanced.

We of course cannot enumerate the various articles that were exhibited and attracted attention. Our notice was particularly attracted to a few which we will mention:

In Floral Hall we noticed a silk basket, quilt, a rich and beautiful specimen of handiwork by Miss Nannie Jones, of this county, to whom several premiums were awarded on this and other articles.

Mr. A. D. Alston had on exhibition at the Fair last week a beautiful specimen of cotton, two or three bolls of which were left in our office. We fail to remember the name by which the variety is known. The boll is very large and the staple excellent.

J. A. Leach, of Thomasville, had on exhibition last week the best specimen of North Carolina hand made shoes. Our merchants would do well to order their shoes from Mr. Leach instead of sending their money and patronage to the North.

L. C. Hanes, of Lexington, N. C., is agent for the famous Buckeye Mower and Reaper, manufactured at Canton, Ohio. It is one of the best and most useful inventions of the age, and the machine on exhibition last week attracted much attention.

Mr. J. D. Farrar exhibited a washing-machine—his own invention, useful and deserving to be known and used in all laundries.

Death of Rev. Dr. Thomas Eddy. This distinguished divine of the Methodist Episcopal Church died at his residence in the city of New York on Wednesday, the 7th of October. He had been in declining health for several months, and it is believed by those who knew him best that his death was caused by overwork. He was a great and good man.

The funeral services took place on Friday, Oct. 9, from St. Paul's M. E. Church, New York city, and was largely attended by many of the prominent clergymen of other denominations. Bishops Simpson and Janes, and Drs. Curry and Chapman conducted the services. The remains were interred in the Marble Cemetery on Second street.

From the Charlotte Observer we learn that a painful accident occurred in that city on the 14th. Mr. Moses Allison, a carpenter was instantly killed by the falling of a scaffold. He was a worthy and highly respected citizen of Charlotte, and leaves a stricken family to mourn his sudden and unexpected death. Mrs. Allison, the wife of the unfortunate husband is a consistent member of Tryon Street M. E. Church, South, in Charlotte.

Conference is Coming.

We have arrived at a point where someting must be done. It is utterly out of the question to build up Trinity College or anything else without the money. We have gone forward with the work upon the condition that our friends would come to time. Some have paid us, but a great many have not. Will those who have not paid do so immediately? The walls of the new building are nearly done, and the roof must be put on before another winter, or the building will be greatly damaged. There are thousands of our people who have made no pledge at all. I hope to hear from them, as it is impossible for me to see all in person. Now is the time to make a good investment, the results of which eternity alone can reveal. We have waited very patiently, because of the stringency in money matters; but the times are getting better now, and let all try to do something.

B. B. Culbreth, Agt.

Rev. C. E. Grinnell, formerly of the Unitarian Church, in Lowell, Mass, has abandoned the ministry and entered upon the study of the law. It is a singular fact that the church from which he has retired has extended an invitation to William Everett, who has abandoned the law for the ministry.

A Letter Read Before the Wilmington District Conference, at its Late Session.

Rev. C. M. Anderson,—Dear Brother: As other duties will prevent my attending the District Conference as a delegate, I hope you will permit me through you to address the Brethren of our church a brief note on the importance of supporting the ministry more liberally than we have been doing of late, or are now doing. I am prompted to this by no puffed up vanity, but solely in the hope that a word in season may accomplish some good and add a little to our starving church. I purpose suggesting nothing as to the plan of raising money for the support of the ministry; for that is fixed by our excellent Book of Discipline. I propose simply, in a very brief way, to urge upon our Brethren the importance of giving more earnest attention to this subject of such vital importance.

It is a serious fact in the history of our church, that of late, we are giving to our ministers of the Gospel of the ever blessed Redeemer a bare and scanty subsistence. God has commissioned them to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature" and said to them "he that believeth and is baptised shall be saved, he that believeth not shall be damned." God has ordained that the world is to be reclaimed by the preaching of the Gospel. Those preachers are men, possessing flesh and blood and require food and raiment like ourselves. If they give themselves up to the work, as I maintain they ought to do exclusively, they have no time to provide themselves with this food and raiment outside of our assistance. They must necessarily depend upon us for these things or the work is retarded. They have families also to be provided for; for our Brethren must not forget the fact that we, as Methodists, condemn the Roman Catholic doctrine of celibacy. These families must also be provided for by us. Our Bishop must be in a situation to receive and entertain his cabinet, and other official members of the church, at least, whenever it be comes necessary for the interests of the church that these officials shall have personal interviews with these higher functionaries, to say nothing of the good that may result from the interviews of these higher functionaries with even the humble members of the church. The Presiding Elder must be prepared to receive frequently the official members of his charge, in order to hold personal interviews with them, so as to understand and be able to make provision for the necessities of the work. Our Travelling Preachers must be able to receive and entertain his subordinates, and how, are these things to be provided for unless we wake up to a sense of our duty and the heavy responsibility that rests upon us? Are we prepared to give way to the idea, I liked to have said the popular idea with us here in the South, that Preachers and their families ought not to live as well as other good and respectable industrious people? Surely we are not, in this enlightened age of Gospel privileges. Most of our Preachers, all of our Bishops and Presiding Elders, are men of talents, capable of making a good livelihood for themselves and their families, even here in the South, in any of the ordinary avocations of life. Ought they and their families to be half fed and clothed because they have in their hands the Holy commission of Jesus Christ "to preach the Gospel"? Ought a lady well educated, (and who does not desire to see the wife of his Preacher well educated) and well raised, surrounded by the modesty of her Father with at least the ordinary necessaries of life, to be kept half clothed and scantily fed with her little ones because forsooth she has chosen to marry a Methodist Preacher, Really, my Brethren, I sometimes think that it must take a brave woman to be willing to marry a Preacher of any denomination of christians in this Southern country of ours, which we all love so well and devotedly, in these modern times in which we live. Let us, dear Brethren, determine to arouse from our lethargy and fall more in love with our Saviour and his Preachers who ought as near as possible to assimilate his blessed character, and come to the conclusion that they are men, who are called of God to the great work of preaching the Gospel, and that it is our duty to assist them in devoting themselves soul and body to the glorious work, and not do as in the past, stay their hands and hold them back. I would not puff them up with the idea that we desire to furnish them luxuriantly, or encourage them or their families in extravagance. But I would have them assured that we desire to see them and their families move in decency and comfort. Do we not desire this? Is there any among us who entertain the opinion that a Methodist Preacher ought to be so provided for as to make him and his wife and little children feel humiliated below other respectable people, whenever they go in company, or even while they remain at home surrounded with other good respectable people, provided with the ordinary comforts of life? Where is the respectable Preacher whose talents are not sufficient to discharge the duties of an ordinary clerkship? Ought he not then be allowed a compensation as remunerative as the ordinary clerk in a mercantile House? Is not "the workman worthy of his meat"? Ought not the "meat" upon which our Preachers feed to be as good and as plentiful as the meat upon which men in the ordinary avocations of life around them, feed? Will any of us say not? If not then let us make inquiry, and make it personally for ourselves, are our Preachers provided for as well as those around them, according to the circumstances of the situation? If they are not, depend upon it there is a wrong somewhere, and God will hold the guilty (whoever they are) to a perfect responsibility. But I am met with the objection that the war has made us too poor to support our preachers as we would like to see them supported.—Dear Brethren, think a second time, and see if you can bear to put forth this objection. Are we too poor to have the Gospel preached to us? Can we expect the preachers and their families to go in want and penury all the days of their lives to preach the Gospel to us? Think of it. Are we not mistaken? How much will it take if each of us will only determine to do our duty? Ah, that would be easy. Well, can't we exert ourselves to bring each one up to the work of duty? Let us determine to make the effort. We are not too poor to provide the necessary and proper means for the support of our ministry. The fact is we cannot afford to be too poor. We must have the Gospel preached in our midst, and I say the Methodist way of preaching it is just as cheap as any other way of having good preaching; and I say further, that the Methodist way is the best way, and the Methodist preaching is in my opinion more like the blessed Jesus and his apostles preached. So, my Brethren, we can not afford to be too poor to have Methodist preachers to preach the unsearchable riches of Divine Grace, and we want the Methodist preacher to have his pious, good wife along with him to associate with us and our families, and we must therefore go to work to provide the means. It will not do for us here in Eastern North Carolina, in our glorious old Cape Fear country, with its bright past clustering around us, to drive Methodism from our midst by refusing to support the ministry. This must be the effect unless we do our duty. If we receive not the holy ones of God, who come bearing his message of Peace under his Divine Commission, He will recall these messengers and send them elsewhere. May our good Lord incline us in the right way!

Yours in Christ,

W. A. Allen.

Kenansville, N. C., Sept. 20, 1874.

Hot Shot

We were at a certain depot in North Carolina when a train of passengers arrived, the conductor stepped off and was met by one of the Presiding Elders of the N. C. Conference M. E. Church, South. After the usual salutations, (as we stood near) we overheard the following from the P. E. "Do you know John ——— at ———?" "Yes! said the conductor I see him frequently in passing!" (Now John——was a preacher in charge of one of the circuits on the Elder's District.)

P. E. "You know him you say. Well, when you see him next tell him to bring out his ten inch columbiads and thunder hot shot upon the enemy all around the circuit—We must have souls converted." There was an energy in the manner in which the above sentence was delivered, a deep toned earnestness of expression which struck very forcibly upon us and we have thought it over many times since. What must be the propulsion of soul on that older which causes him to halt in the midst of all this bustle and confusion, this clamor of waiters, this "smashing of baggage" this shriek of locomotives, this elbowing and shoving, these shouts of news-boys and vendors of apples and pea-nuts, to send such a message to one of his junior preachers! Was it the love of display—a desire to be heard; there was nobody to hear, it was by mere chance we heard it. Was it to impress the conductor with an idea that he was an extra—zealous christian? No need for that as the conductor was not even a church going man; from the very occupation he had in that place he was prevented from attending church—impressions of the kind stated could not have elevated the Elder in the church or been of any kind of worldly advantage so far as we could think. What then were the motives? We concluded first, that he intended to encourage his junior; to rally him to renewed effort; to assure him that he desired his success and to cheer him on to victory, "thunder hot shot on the enemy all around the lines of the circuit." We concluded, secondly, that the actuating cause, the propelling power was the love of souls and the love of Christ—and we think we were not mistaken. As this year of grace 1874 is drawing to a close would it not be well to send out the same rallying cry to all the circuits and stations in North Carolina? "Bring out your columbiads and thunder hot shot upon the enemy's lines." There is yet over a month to Conference, the harvest is not all gathered in. Go out again brethren and reap! Put in your sickles afresh and sharper than ever, gather a large garner full for the skies. Let there be one month more in which the hot shot of the gospel shall fall thick and fast amongst sinners, when "the slain of the Lord" shall be many. Get your hearts, your minds, your all warmed up with the heat of the continuous firing, so that when you come up to this metropolis to Conference you may come warm from many victories and ready to engage in a revival here. Let us have one Conference that shall be noted for the revival power of the preaching and for the souls converted to God.

Revival Intelligence.

Rev. P. J. Carraway writes us October 15th as follows:

We have closed our protracted meeting which resulted in much good to the church. Many were benefited, and sixteen added to the church. Our parsonage will soon be completed, and we will then have one of the best in the Conference.

From Rev. C. M. Pepper we have the following relative to the work of grace on his charge:

Dear Bro. Bobbitt: The Lord has recently visited us on this charge in a very gracious manner. We had one of the best meetings at Zion that it has been my privilege to attend.—Sixteen souls professed to find the pearl of great price and the church was greatly revived. To God be all the glory!

Rev. W. C. Norman writes October 12th:

We have had some fine meetings on the Wentworth circuit. I will give you a brief account of them before long.

Rev. J. W. Lewis writes October 15th:

Bro. Bobbitt: Since my last note to you, I have held two good meetings; one at St. Paul's, Union Factory, and the other at Union Church. We had at the two meetings seven converts, and the church greatly revived. Several accessions.

Rev. T. Page Ricaud writes us Oct. 7th, as follows:

My Dear Bro. Bobbitt: Our meeting closed at Olive last week, and resulted in the conversion of 70 souls, and 60 accessions to the church. It is said to have been the most extensive revival ever enjoyed at that place.

We are now holding a meeting here, and on last night 15 mourners and four conversions—thus far, in all, 9 conversions. Never, in an Itinerant life of 34 years, have we witnessed more intense interest, earnest devotion, and consistent zeal on the part of Christians. They indeed deserve our thanks, and with God is their reward.

"Bless the Lord O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."

Rev. R. L. Abernethy writes:

Bro. Bobbitt: God is blessing us with his presence in the Rutherford College. Last Sunday night we had 18 penitents at the altar of prayer, and 9 persons united with the Methodist E. Church, South.

Our College now numbers about 150, with additional increase every week. Our new college house, 100 by 70 feet, three stories high, will be erected this Fall and Winter. Several new and excellent buildings for boarding purposes are being erected, and we expect to be able by next Commencement to have three or four hundred students.

Let my brethren send their children here, if they desire to have them educated in true Methodistic style, and at the least possible expense. Brother and sister can here enjoy each other's society and thus feel at home, while they are away from parents, seeking an education.

Our location knows no local diseases: has no superior in point of good society and peaceful surroundings. Our village is as quiet at night as the uninhabited forest. All who come among us are astonished at the order, peace and quiet that abound. God dwells in our midst.

Rev. R. M. Brown writes October 9th:

Dear Bro. Bobbitt: The Lord was with us of a truth at Bethel and Stony Hill. We had glorious times at both places. At Bethel there were 18 conversions and 17 accessions.—Several restorations. The church was made alive unto God. I am indebted very much to Rev. W. H. Watkins of Stanly circuit, and Rev. Isaac M. Shaver (Local) of the circuit for valuable assistance.

There were 15 conversions and 10 accessions at Stony Hill. Backsliders were reclaimed; Christians revived; the church left in a warm and flourishing condition. I was assisted there by Rev. A. F. Atkins of the circuit, "a noble old Roman," one among the greatest and best of our Local ministers. Up to this time, there have been about 65 conversions on my circuit, that number I suppose seeking religion. We hope to send you a good report from our camp-meeting to be held next week at Rehoboth.

Rev. P. F. W. Stamey sends us the following good news from his charge:

Dear Bro. Bobbitt: Our camp meeting at Shiloh, on the Dallas circuit was a success. The congregation on Saturday night and Sunday was very large. The behavior was good and the people seemed to listen attentively to the word. The preaching was with power and demonstration from on high, and did good, we trust, for time and eternity. There were about 24 conversions and 22 accessions to the Church. I learned through a brother to day that there have been 9 conversions at the Factory since then, as the result of the camp-meeting, and still the work goes on. We have a new harbor at Shiloh sixty feet square, and several new tents. We hope to make still better improvements. Shiloh is on the Air Line R. R., about 26 miles from Charlotte, 3 from Dallas, and about one fourth of a mile from Gastonia. In short, Christians were made happy, sinners to tremble, mourners to weep, and converts to rejoice. Several promised to have family prayer who have not attended to this duty in the past. I send you a new name for the Advocate—a new convert, and hope to send you more.

Bro. Bobbitt: I have just closed a delightful and profitable canvass on the Henderson circuit. Bro. Bosbamer and his people gave me a cordial welcome, and they responded to the call in behalf of Trinity willingly and liberally. Up to the present writing, I have secured on the Henderson circuit $385, and I expect to get more before I bid them a final adieu. I have assisted Bro. B. at two of his appointments, where the Lord revived his works, and souls were converted. I was with him at Union Chapel last week, and I felt that it was good to be there. It was a melting time. The Church was greatly blessed, and several souls were converted. Bro. Bosbamer is very much beloved by his people, and he is worthy of their affection. He has had a gracious work at nearly all of his appointments during the year.

B. B. Culbreth,

Religious Brevities

The Rev. Dr. Swing, of Chicago, has been acquitted by the Presbyterian tribunal of the charge of preaching heresy, but there seems to have come over his mind a conviction that denominational limits are too narrow for his aspirations. At his request his name has been dropped from the rolls of the Chicago Presbytery, and henceforward may be considered a theological freelance.

The Pittsburg Advocate says: "Our grand jury have found true bills against sixty-five violators of the Liquor law. They were only two days in finding these, and if they keep on at that rate they 'll find them all in course of time."

Confiding in God.—When a man maketh complaint and openeth his need and grief unto his special friend, he feeleth a certain ease afterwards; so that his pain and grief, by the rehearsing thereof, is somewhat relieved, remedied, and taken away. Much more comfort and ease shall we receive by telling and opening our grief and complaint unto God. For man is soon weary and irk of our complaining; but if we should spend the whole day in praying, crying and complaining unto God, He would love, comfort, and strengthen us the more.—Coverdale.

There are two kinds of hope; the one is of nature, and the other cometh of faith. The natural hope is a special gift and benefit of God, which after a certain manner doth help and comfort a man that is troubled and vexed, that he do not utterly despair; but in the midst of all adversity hopeth that in a while it will, within a while be better, and so waiteth and tarrieth till the adversity be overblown.—Coverdale.

Bragging About Her.—A lady was teaching her little girl her evening prayer. After a while she forgot the presence of the child, and her prayer took the form of an earnest thanksgiving for all that the child was to her. After she had finished, the child sprang up and said: "Well, mamma, I never did think you would brag about me to God in that way. But if that's true, what you told him, I've been thinking (putting her arms about her mother's neck) that I'd never be a naughty girl again."

It is with pleasure that we call attention to the new advretisement of the "Old North State Fire Insurance Company" which appears in to day's issue of the Advocate. No company in the State has a better class of officers than this company—We speak from a personal knowledge of the gentlemen. They are men of strict integrity and solid worth. The company has promptly met all losses and has been remarkably successful. We comend it to our readers.

State News.

—The case of Mrs. Denning against W. and W. Railroad for the killing of her husband in the Dudley Railroad accident, has been compromised by the payment to the widow of $1500 and court costs.

—The Gazette informs us that recently the delegates from the various country Granges met and took steps to organize a bank in Kinston, with a capital stock of $25,000. Books of subscription were ordered to be opened at once. Parties not members of the order are invited to subscribe.

—Says the Charlotte Observer: Rev. Dr. Lindley, the returned missionary, who is 73 years old, preached four times in Charlotte on the 11th inst., three times in the 1st Presbyterian Church and once in the colored Presbyterian Church. He spoke over an hour each time to a large audience.

—Col. S. D. Pool obtained 30 subscribers in one day at Monroe for the "Living and Dead."

The Greenville "Register" says: Mr. Jesse Smith, of this county, has three sons who picked 1,248 pounds of cotton on Monday, the 15th inst. Jesse L., 17 years old, picked 403 pounds; Francis M., 15 years old, 414 pounds; Ivy, 13 years old, 131 pounds. We challenge the State to beat this, and we are proud to know that old Pitt can boast of such industrious and enterprising young men.

—The North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference will convene at Hyco Chapel, Chatham county, N. C., on Friday before the 3d Sabbath in November, 1874. The opening sermon will be delivered by Rev. W. C. Clements, of Morrisville. Rev. Dr. Wellons, President of the General Convention South, will be present.

—The Lincoln "Progress" says that $1,500 has been subscribed for a high school at Brevard's Station. Work will soon begin.

—The Rutherford "Star and Reveiler" says that it is the person of Hon. Zebulon B. Vance that Congressional District has one of the most industrious workers that it has ever had.

—The body of Mr. William Fails, the young man who disappeared at Masonboro Sound recently, and who was supposed to have been drowned while fishing on the banks for drum fish, was found floating in Masonboro inlet. When found the line with which he had been fishing was found tied around his waist, while at the other end was a huge drum fish, which was dead.

—We are informed that the Northam Company who own the Ore Knob Copper Mines, is making a fortune. Two and a half tons of pure copper is melted daily, yielding the company $1,000 per day, clear of all expenses. The town that has sprung up at these mines is said to be already larger than Jefferson, the county seat of Ashe.—Piedmont Press.

—The "Track Sweepers."—On our ride to Wilmington the other day we passed a squad of negroes, principally women, and numbering perhaps twenty-five. Immediately after the train passed they stepped out on the track and each with a brush or broom began vigorously to sweep the track. Upon inquiry we learned that it was their habit, and that under the leadership of an old woman they were led to believe that by so doing they were sweeping off the sins of the passengers on the train.—Andonian.

Capt. Plato Durham visited Washington and secured the release from prison of Elijah Ross Spaugh, who has been confined at Yorkville for two years.

—There were 72 beeves, 37 hogs, 57 sheep, 2 calves and 5 deer sold in Wilmington Market last week.

—The round-trip fare to the mountains, for the Ashville Fair, good from 10th October to 15th November, will be fifty per cent less than the summer excursion schedule.

—The proposed Duplin Branch of the New River Canal is already regarded as a success in Duplin county.

—The quarantine restrictions at the port of Wilmington expire on the 1st of November.

—The receipts of cotton at the port of Wilmington on the 12th inst., amounted to 992 bales.

—Several families from Boston have engaged rooms for the winter at the Norwood House at Warrenton.

—W. H. H. Houston, the Mecklenburg forger, has been arrested and brought to Charlotte. His bail was fixed at $10,000 by Judge Bynum, which at last accounts had not been given.

—The Fair of the Carolinas opens in Charlotte on the 3d of November.

—The Charlotte "Democrat" wants a steam laundry.

—The Charlotte "Democrat" wants a law passed for the protection of insurers, requiring Insurance Companies chartered in other States to deposit funds in the State Treasury. If Bro. Yates will turn to our Statute Books he will find what he wants.

—H. L. Staton, Esq., has been appointed Superior Court Clerk of Edgecombe county, by Judge Hilliard. Judge Moore appointed another man.

—The Kinston "Gazette" learns that a negro, near Henry West's shot a squirrel recently and crippled it, and attempted to kill it with the breach of the gun when it went off, discharging the load in his body from which he died next day.

FALL TRADE 1874.
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,
J. M. ROSENBAUM,
(Successor to A. KLINE,)
Corner Fayottoville and Hargett Streets.
I am now receiving my FALL and WINTER stock of General Merchandise, recently purchased in person at Northern Manufactories, and being from first hands, I am prepared to offer advantages to the trade seldom offered in the city of Raleigh.
My stock of Ready-made Clothing is full and complete, bought principally at auction sales from first-class houses. I think I can offer inducements, both to the wholesale and retail trade, that cannot be surpassed south of the New York market.
Staple Dry Goods of every grade, an style, and marked at prices that will sell them.
BOOTS, SHOES, HATS AND CAPS
In every variety, embracing every style, quality and novelty of fashion. Also agent for the N. C. Penitentiary hand made shoes.
The China, Crockery and Glass Ware Department
Is a specialty of my trade, and I can furnish goods in this line to my wholesale trade at factory prices. Call early to secure bargains. Especial attention paid to the retail department.
Attentive and experienced salesmen in every department, and I can assure the ladies it is not a trouble, but a pleasure, to show goods.

"WHERE THERE'S A WILL THERE'S A WAY."
This old adage has been fully demonstrated TO ME, in the last twelve months. Contrary to the expectations of Critics and (would be) prophets, B. H. WOODELL IS STILL ALIVE, and better prepared than ever before to meet the demands of his numerous friends and customers. He expects at all times to keep what the people need. Especially in the line of Groceries.
Hardware, Cutlery, Wood and Willow ware,
Tinware, Boots Shoes and Hats, will not be left out. While Sole and Upper Leather will constitute one of his main feature. Grain and country produce at all times. Needless to enumerate. Call at No. 7 Hargett St. and see for yourself. Prices as low as the lowest, orders filled at prices current on date of receipt. Solicits consignments of Cotton and all kind of country produce, which will have personal attention. Refers to State National Bank and Editor this paper.

TO THE Wholesale Trade.
—:o:—
Judging the future by the past, we enter with confidence upon this our new enterprise, of seperating our Wholesale from our Retail Trade, by having a separate and distinct House for each; and in doing so we flatter ourselves that it will not only meet the approval of our numerous customers, but that an "Exclusive Wholesale House" will bring us a large influx of new trade, and of a character not heretofore enjoyed.
It must be obvious to every buyer that a strictly "Wholesale House," arranged and adapted for that Trade only, with a corps of experienced Wholesale Salesmen, with a Stock carefully selected for that Trade only, and moreover, the avo dance of coming in contact with retail buyers. Such a house, we assert, must and will commend itself to the trade.
Four years ago we advertised that we intended to make Charlotte a wholesale mart and ours "The Wholesale House." We now have the proud satisfaction of seeing it an accomplished fact.
We now call attention to the fact that we have converted our superb store into an exclusive Wholesale House, where you can find all lines of goods necessary for a country store, to wit: Dry-goods Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Notions, Groceries Hardware, Millinery, all in complete lines, bought in large quantities and from the very first hands.
Our stock is now arriving and will be complete about the 1st of September, and will be the largest of any here, the pretensions of others to the contrary notwithstanding. We respectfully invite your personal inspection, or write to us for circulars.
Very truly yours,
WITTKOWSKY & RINTELS.
—:o:—
RETAIL
Now, a few words about that. We now occupy the superb house heretofore so favorably known as the Messrs. Dean, Brown & Co.'s Dry-goods House, to carry on our Retail business, and as "Excelsior" is, and has always been, our motto, we claim also in that line to excel in stock, to excel in lowness of prices, and to excel generally. We will, in that house, have a corps of thirty Salesmen and Sales-Ladies, all experienced, affable, and obliging.
For We will make the Millinery branch a specialty

Shelling Peas.

Passing by the kitchen,
Through an open door,
I espy three children
Sitting on the floor
Through the open window
Comes the morning breeze,
Fanning them so gently
While they shell the peas.

In the eyes are busy,
Little fingers too,
Picking all the peas out
Soon as brought to view.
They are free and happy
As birds upon the trees,
Laughing, talking, singing
While they shell the peas.

Baby's dish has in it
Naught but pods, 'tis true,
But she's just as busy,
And as happy too.
They must learn to labor
Little ones like these Should have some employment;
Let them shell the peas.

Up at early morning,
By the break of day,
All their work done early,
They 'll have time to play.
Children are so happy
When they try to please,
They do much to help us
While they shell the peas.

Little Mary.

Oh, papa, I am so glad we are going to Mississipsi to live!" So said little Mary many years ago.

Her father was busy making preparations to leave his native State, and seek a home and fortune in Mississippi whither dear friends had lately gone and sent the tidings back of good lands, easy labor and fine crops. Little Mary's mother had been toiling many months at the spinning-wheel and loom to fit her family out for the long journey, which was to be made by private conveyance for this was before the day of railroads, when the great locomotive makes his swift-winged flight, bearing travelers over thousands of miles in a few days.

Mary had been very patient in rocking her infant sister, singing her sweet little songs, and often shouting praises to the Saviour; for, though she was but four years old, she was a Christian in her young life.

She was a frail and delicate little one, loving and affectionate in her nature, and had entwined herself very closely around her parents' hearts. Now her young heart was all aglow with the thought of the pleasant journey they were soon to enter upon. So happy did she seem that her mother scarcely noticed her weary looks or her pallid cheeks; for disease even then was preying upon her vitals, and prophetic friends had said: "You will never get her to your journey's end." With buoyant hearts and bright anticipations the parents and grandparents, with their families, bade farewell to all their youthful companions, and set out upon the journey that must occupy them at least a month, in that old fashioned way of traveling by day and camping at night. Little Mary was so enchanted with everything on the road-side—she saw so many beautiful streams, and ate so many luscious fruits of the forest—that she did not complain until the destroyer had made ravages upon her tender frame too plainly to be mistaken. Her parents and relatives then did everything in their power to stay the hand of disease, but ere their trip was half way-made little Mary was too ill to travel, and her parents were compelled to stop, that she might have medical treatment.

They took quarters in a beautiful village in South Carolina, where kind strangers essayed to assist the distressed parents in relieving their sick child. Three long weeks they tarried, and the little one bore her sufferings patiently, longing to see the new country, when our heavenly Father called. "It is enough; come up higher." Kind ladies of Greenville made a beautiful shroud to wrap her little body for its burial. Clever citizens brought the little casket, saying: "It is our custom to bury strangers who die in our place." So they gathered together, and with the bereaved parents laid her in their church-yard one beautiful Sabbath evening. Oh, it was bitter grief to put her away in a strange land and thing of resuming their journey, never again to see the place where she was laid to rest. The pitying compassion of our Savior alone enable them to say farewell forever as they passed out, next day, from the lovely wayside village, leaving their sweet little Mary in her narrow home.

Little Mary had an influence though she was young, as all good children must. Methinks the memory of the dear child has comforted her patient mother all along the weary way of life. Now she is growing old and ripening for the eternal life. She looks forward to a reunion beyond the skies. She often tells other dear children, who have come into her home, of little Mary and they must feel purer and happier for having an angel sister. Her father, too, loves to think of that long-lost one from his pleasant home. Often she has nestled upon his strong arm and made his young heart throp with pride; but many years have fled since then, and he is nearing the close of another journey. The siver strands that once waved in jetty curls upon his noble brow tells us that he cannot linger much longer upon the shores of time. O that he may be as ready to meet his little angel as she must be anxious to give him a welcome in her heavenly home.

Had little Mary lived until now she would have been a grown woman; but it pleased the all-wise Father to make her a child-angel in heaven, and she is still remembered as little Mary.

The little brother who shared her joys and sorrows, and was her constant companion while she was on earth, has dear little children of his own, to whom he loves to tell the story of his gentle sister. No doubt the influence of that sweet sister has made him pure and noble in his aspirations, and will help him at last to obtain an inheritance with her in immortal bliss. She has sisters and brothers here who never saw her, but they love to hear about her, and we hope they are trying to live a holy life, that they may see and know her in the glory-land.

Precious is the memory of little Mary, who awaits us on the shining shore. D.

Poultry Parasites.

The use of sassafras wood for perches and nest boxes has been repeatedly recommended as a preventive of vermin in poultry-houses.

A recent correspondent of the Poultry Bulletin furnishes to that paper an article from the American Farmer of 1819, in which it is most positively asserted that sassafras possesses this virtue. Every year or two this same old story is repeated by theorizing writers on poultry affairs. Why is it that such idle statements so often find their way into print? In this case it must be owing to a misunderstanding of terms, as well as to ignorance of the nature of some of our poultry pests. The term "vermin," as used in the article above mentioned, is explained to mean chicken lice, yet the writer no doubt referred to what was commonly known as "jiggers," or chicken mites; for chicken lice proper live on the bodies of fowls, while the mites infest the perches, and trouble the fowls chiefly at night. The chicken mites are to poultry-houses what bedbugs are to human habitations. They suck the blood of the fowls at night, and hide away in the cracks and crevices of the perches during the day. They belong to the class of spiders; while the chicken lice are true insects, a different class altogether.

In neglected poultry-houses the mites are sometimes found in great numbers crawling over the perches, nests, floors and walls, so that a person dare not enter for fear of being overrun by them. As the true chicken lice are never known to accumulate to such an extent, the sassfras preventive is no doubt meant to apply to these swarms of mites rather than to lice proper; and now the surprise is that this pretended preventive (having no foundation at all for reliability, except in the fertile imaginations of some writers gifted with peculiarly sensitive olfactories) should be so often brought to our notice without calling forth the indignant protest of better informed poultry keepers against such senseless theories.

We have been in the habit of using sassafras poles in our hen houses for many years past, because they are here easily obtained, and besides the bark is just about the right roughness to admit of the fowls grasping the perches comfortably; but the mites seem not to be annoyed in the least by the aroma of the sassafras. Even the free use whitewash will not dislodge them. We have also freely applied sulphur to the perches, but without much effect. The only means by which we have been able to rid our fowls of these pests has been to well saturate the perches occasionally with coal oil. This is applied with an old paint brush. The oil is very penetrating, and quickly finds its way into the crevices and beneath the loose bark.

The same correspondent of the Poultry Bulletin, who has again brought to light this old notion about the virtue of the aromatic sassafras, promulgates a piece of information:

"The thousand and one remedies recommended to free chickens from lice are thrown into the shade by the following safe and effectual mixture: A spoonful each of lard oil and pow dered sassafras bark; mix and apply to the head and neck of the chicken, and under the wings and breast of an old fowl. One application of the work carefully done is all that is necessary."

Now the lard oil alone, or common clean lard, will answer every purpose of the above mixture. It is the lard or oil stopping the breathing pores of the lice that kills them so effectually, and the sassafras has nothing to do with it whatever.

Some writers have recommended sulphur and lard for the same purpose, but the lard alone will do the work every time, and the chicks are spared the risks of taking cold and being otherwise injuriously affected by the use of sulphur.—Prairie Farmer.

SNOWFLAKE CAKE.—Take a half cup of butter, two cups of white sugar, four cups of flour, one cup of sweet milk, three eggs, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, and one-half of that quantity of saleratus. Stir butter and sugar together, add the beaten yolks of eggs, and half the flour with the cream of tartar in it; turn in nearly all the milk, dissolve the saleratus in what is left and add it. Beat the whites of the eggs and mix in; stir in remainder of the flour. Bake in jelly cake tins. Grate the meat of two fresh cocoanuts after paring off the outer skin; add to them one cup of sugar and the beaten whites of two eggs. Spread between the cakes, which should have been baked in three pans. Heap the cocoanut very high on the top of the uppermost cake, and scatter sugared almonds among it.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

The Source of Many Ills.

If all the ailments, bodily and mental, which torment the human family could be traced to their primary sources, it would probably be found that three-fourths of them originated in the failure of the stomach and the oil or organs by which the food is converted into nutriment and applied to the purposes of life, to perform the tasks allotted to them by nature, vigorously and regularly. This being the case the vast importance of a medicine which compels these organs to do their whole duty thoroughly and efficiently, becomes at once apparent. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters may be truly characterized as a preparation of this kind. Indeed as the only one which can be implicitly relied on as combining the properties of a stomachic an alterative and an aperient in such proportions as to produce simultaneously the desired effect upon the disordered stomach, liver and intestines. This conviction is warranted by the celerity and certainty with which the Bitters afford relief in chronic cases of dyspepsia, hopelessly obstinate and confirmed constipation. The fact, that a host of these complaints and others that grew out of them, could be cured by fierce cathartics, has at last, it is hoped been thoroughly exploded. The sick, during the last hundred years have swallowed thousands of tons of mercury, scammony, gamboge, croton oil, jalap, &c., and tens of thousands of graves have been prematurely filled thereby. But ever since the principle of renovating, as embodied in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, was arrayed against the principle of prostration, as represented by mineral salivants and furious purgatives the latter has steadily and surely fallen into deserved contempt. The outcry against stimulation by which concoctors of depleting drenches hoped to give relief to their disgusting and dangerous compounds has only served to increase the demand for the wholesome stimulant, tonic and alterative which for twenty five years unimpeached over all opposition and is now the most popular medicine in the Western hemisphere.

Bradley's Patent Enamel Paint.

It is but little more than a quarter of a century since the art of mixing paint was confined almost exclusively to a few comparatively speaking. Now, however, through the ingenuity of dealers, we are not only enabled to apply the paint if we desire, but can see the shades in advance, sample cards being furnished gratis, with the different shades of tints, mentioned. Those who have used the "Enamel Paint," speak from experience, that it is all that is claimed for it, and evidently supercedes the "old style paint." As an evidence of the great worth of the Enamel Paint, we most respectfully request all our readers to carefully read the excellent testimonials of Mr. C. P. Knight, in this paper.

Under date of March 29 Hon. Horace Greely, of the New York Tribune, writes: "J. Ball, of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

Prof. W. Merrick, of Lexington, Ky., wrote, April 24th, 1869: "Without my spectacles I pen you this note, after using the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS thirteen days, and this Morning perused the entire contents of a daily newspaper, and all with the unassisted eye.

"Truly am I grateful for your noble invention. May heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using my spectacles twenty years; I am seventy years old.

Truly yours, PROF. W. MERRICK."

Rev. Joseph Smith, Malden, Mass., cured of Partial Blindness of 18 years' standing, in one minute, by the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS.

E. T. Sabin, late Mayor of Dayton, Ohio, wrote on Nov. 15th, 1869: "I have tested the PATENT IVORY EYE CUPS, and I am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them. They are the greatest invention of the age."

Wm. Beaty, M. D., Salvisa Ky., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions, my sight is fully restored, after being almost entirely blind for 26 years."

Alex. R. Wyeth, M. D., Atchison, Pa., writes: After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by paralysis of the optic nerve, to my astonishment your PATENT EYE CUPS restored my eyesight permanently a three minutes.

For the Advocate.

In Memoriam.

The following lines were written by M. L. W. They are in memory of Mrs. Jessie Winston Smith, wife of S. S. Smith, of Creedmoor, N. C. In 1871 she united as a bright, happy, pure and faithful member of Tryon Street Methodist Church. She was truly a shining spirit at the sacred altar, and her singing were enriched with melody from her sweet spirit. The church so devotedly taught in the Sunday school were refined and enobled by the amiability and purity of her character. Her presence in the sanctuary or the church inspired the worshipper with stronger and purer faith.

Always faithful in every sphere of duty and beauty on the plainest duty, she bloom to the flowers she nurtured and loved and drew her favorite sweetness—the luxury of doing good. Who does not thank God for such spirits to our world?

Less than a year after a happy marriage, with innocent beautiful babe resting to her bosom, and a husband bending with breaking heart over her, her sainted spirit passed to its eternal rest.

The lines were written impromptu by one who loved her, during her last illness.

Sister, amidst the time's drawing

We had the pleasure of greeting in our sanctum, the past week, our excellent brother, Rev. L. L. Hendren, agent for Greensboro Female College. We are glad to learn from him that, notwithstanding the great scarcity of money in the country, he has met with encouraging success in raising funds for the College. He is an earnest and faithful worker, and is greatly interested in the success of the institution he represents. There is money enough in the church to pay the College debt and place it upon a grand career of prosperity. Dr. Jones, its able president, and those associated with him in the faculty, at once commend the College to our people. As a church and conference we are justly proud of Greensboro Female College.

In the first number of the "Cross of Blood" which appeared in last week's issue, there were several mistakes made by the printer, which in a few instances, affected the sense of the article. Only those who are, or have been connected with a printing office, can appreciate the exceeding difficulty of excluding typographical errors. The printer and his types will at times play antics and the tired eyes of the proof reader will sometimes overlook the mistakes they make. We are sure they occur as seldom in the Advocate as any other paper we wot of. The intelligent reader will, however, always make amends and, in this case, will attribute no nonsense to the always learned and accurate author, Rev. W. M. Robey.

We have received an appeal from the ladies of Kittrell's addressed to the Methodists of North Carolina, to aid in building a Methodist Church at that place. They have labored faithfully to raise the necessary amount at home, but they still lack a few hundred dollars to complete the building. They appeal to our Methodist people in the State to contribute something and send the same to Conference by their pastors to be placed in the hands of Rev. J. R. Griffith, of Granville circuit or J. W. Hays, Esq., of Oxford. We trust our readers will extend what aid they can.

CHURCH REPAIRS.—Edenton Street Methodist Church, in this city, is undergoing some repairs, being repainted and rendered more sightly than it has been heretofore. The interior will present a handsome appearance when finished, and we trust that the spirit of improvement, which now manifests itself, will continue to increase until a larger and more commodious edifice, such as the growth of the city and the interests of Methodism demand, is built.

The Western Christian Advocate, in a recent editorial, specifies some of the items of progress made by Protestantism against Romanism within the past few years. The schools of Austria have passed out of the control of the priests. Germany, once divided between Catholicism and Protestantism, is now united under a strongly Protestant government. Mexico is emancipated from proscriptive papal rule, and now has one hundred Protestant churches. In Spain, celebrated for intolerance in the past, the Bible and the Protestant church are now free. The bigoted government of Naples has lost its sway. The pope has lost his temporal dominion. Truly, the Lord has triumphed gloriously.

The Christian Age, edited by Rev. Dr. Deems, in New York, has been merged into and consolidated with the Church Union of that city. Dr. Deems finds that his duties as President of Rutgers Female College, together with his ministerial and other labors, will prevent any further connection with the paper than as a contributing editor.

We are glad to learn from our much esteemed friend, Rev. S. Lander, that Williamston Female College, S. C., of which he is the popular President, is filled to its utmost capacity. He can take no more boarding pupils.

We learn with regret that the health of our excellent Brother, Rev. W. P. Craig, continues very feeble. He has been unable to preach for several months.

Is the Preacher Paid ?

To members of the church and those interested in the successful spread of the gospel, but few more important questions can be asked than that we have written above. The conference year is closing, with all the arduous and devoted work of the pastors, and they are preparing to meet in annual session to join one another and to report the condition of their charges, financial as well as religious. It is essential that all the financial interests of the church shall be well cared for, and none more so than that those who have labored in and out of season to preach the gospel, lead the flock and protect the moral and religious interests of communities, should be paid fully for their sacrifices and faithful performance of duty.

It will not do to say that preaching, like poetry, is "its own reward"—that the preacher should look to nothing else than the satisfaction derived from sounding the gospel trumpet and doing good. This, it is true, is his chief aim; but he is also "worthy of his hire." He needs it to keep himself in food and raiment suitable to his condition. His family need it for the same end and for their education and enjoyment of the legitimate pleasures of life. Our Protestant system does not enforce celibacy upon its ministers, nor does the Bible or common sense. If it did, the preacher might not need his "hire" in money, but could "board around" like the old field school teachers of the olden time, and receive his remuneration somewhat in the shape of charity-gifts. But, as is most frequently the case, he has a family at home whose needs are urgent and for whom he must provide. If he foregoes all other methods of doing this and serves the people in holy things, they must care for him and his, just as the Israelites were directed to provide for the priests who ministered at their sacrificial altars.

Is the preacher paid? Has he received what you have promised, through your stewards, and what he has been relying upon in the regulation of his expenses? If so, you have only met the obligations, which not only your own word but the commands of God impose upon you. If not, then you may well fear the frown of him who sends his messengers to the world and declares that it shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for those who refuse to receive them.

Canadian Evangelical Alliance

From the New York Advocate we learn that this Alliance whose session closed a few days ago at Montreal, was largely attended. Judge Wilmot, of the Methodist Church, presided. The papers read were of marked merit. Dr. M'Cosh's reply to Prof. Tyndall; Dr. Donald Fraser's paper on the Relation of Art to Worship; Dr. John Hall's address on the Modern Pulpit; and the papers on Science and Christianity by Dr. Dawson, of Montreal, and Dr. Wilson, of Toronto, were important contributions to the elucidation of these topics. Several Methodist ministers contributed valuable papers. Rev. John Lathern, of Halifax, read a paper on "Hymns of the Church a Bond of Christian Unity." Rev. John A. Williams, of Simcoe, read a paper on "Christian Evidences;" and Rev. W. H. Poole, of Toronto, read a paper on "The True Spirit of Alliance."

But the chief value of this Christian conference, as the Christian Guardian properly observes, is not to be found in the new light shed on important questions, but in its tendency to promote the spirit of unity among Christians of different denominations. The united communion service in St. Paul's Church was deeply interesting. English and American Presbyterians, Methodists, Episcopalians, Congregationalists and Baptists, all devoutly united in publicly confessing Christ by partaking of the memorials of his death. Dr. Jenkins gave out the hymn, and read the words of Scripture; Dean Bond led the congregation in the Apostles' Creed, and offered the prayer of consecration; Dr. Ryerson gave an address before the distribution of the bread; Dr. Mellor dispensed the cup, and gave a suitable address; Dr. M'Cosh gave closing address, and Dr. Fraser pronounced the benediction. The whole service was a beautiful illustration of the real unity of God's people.

BRO. BOBBITT: It is very important that the Joint Board of Finance be properly informed of the condition of every claimant on the Conference fund, and it is to be hoped that every preacher will, in whose charge they live, report faithfully in writing as to their several conditions, as the Discipline directs. See Dis. page 78.

H. H. GIBBONS.

Franklinton, N. C., Oct 22nd, 1874.

Whoever accumulates learning or discipline or culture for selfish gratification alone, regardless of what he owes to Christ and humanity, has in him all the essential qualities of a miser. We talk of misers as if they were found among the commercial classes only. But the term is applicable to all who hoard up God's gifts in selfish carelessness of the duties which those possessions impose. It is the use of power for blessing which alone can bring happiness to him who has it.

Rev. A. W. Mangum preached in Tucker Hall Sunday morning and evening to large audiences.

The New Rule.

In reference to the 'New Law,' now being agitated, I have read most of the letters pro and con, and find myself now more in favor of the measure if possible than at first. It is strange and sad that good men should be so divergent on a matter of such paramount importance. A dram drinking christian is to me a paradox, an anommaly, a monstrosity, and yet, forsooth, some argue, it will injure the church, many good men will quit the church, if you pass it, and possibly go back fully to the world, and thereby we who argue in favor of its passage will be the placers of the stones of stumbling and consequently be amenable for this great lapse of many who otherwise might be saved. Ah! indeed; and shall we pander to the vitiated taste of a few for fear of losing some of the tithe paying bigots of the church? God forbid! Some say it is an ex post facto law. Well grant it; if the church, like an individual finds itself in error is it not more honorable to correct it than to proceed in known sin? Yea, verily. St. Paul said if eating meat caused his brother to offend, he would eat no meat. In this, our age of such great liberty, he would be called an extremist—an ascetic. Meat is a necessary article of food, alcohol never: one sustains the system, the other destroys both soul and body. It shows however what we do not find nowadays—St. Paul's strong love for the brethren and his great self denial.

Moderate drinkers and otherwise very consistent men, are the very worst examples that have ever cursed the strata of society,—they are the first leaders of the young in the paths of error.

If it takes half from the Church, I say let them go in peace, then we will know the chaff from the wheat. A man who loves the social glass better than the Master is not a worthy servant. Give us a God fearing and a God serving church, pure and undefiled in the way, that the world may find no fault of our Zion. Eradicate not only by the ecclesiastical law, but by civil statute this parent of all vices Decapitate this hydri headed monster, then we will have a purer church, a happier and freer people basking in the smiles of approving heaven.

Fraternally yours,

JNO. D. THORNE.

Littleton, N. C. Oct. 20th, 1874.

The Lone Star State.

BRO. BOBBITT: There are numerous revival meetings in progress in Texas; in fact, this seems to be an unusually fruitful year in the work of the Lord. It is exceedingly gratifying to know this, inasmuch as large numbers from various localities in the old States are coming to this new world, and it is vastly important that they be met on their arrival with soul-saving influences.

Politically—we are quiet, and under white, Democratic rule. The negro can only exert an appreciable influence in a few counties in the State. It does not materially hurt the Legislature to have a half dozen colored men sitting in a group by themselves in the House of Representatives!

As to schools, there are many of them in the Lone Star State—about 20 in Austin. There are a few good schools in Texas, but many that are ephemeral and inefficient. The greatest trouble which the immigrant finds in his country home is the want of school and church privileges. In a few neighborhoods he may find these; in many places there is great destitution.

A copy of the book, "Service of Song," has been ordered to be sent you. The 2nd edition is just out of press. This book is the production of a North Carolinian - Rev. A. G. Stacy, and it is hoped that it will be widely circulated in the author's native State. Persons desiring copies should correspond with him at Austin, Texas.

Our large cities, and the country generally, rejoice in good health.

OBSERVER.

Austin, Texas, Oct. 3rd, 1874.

IN SPEAKING of an accession of twenty persons to the Methodist Church in Calcutta, the Foreign Missionary says: "A noteworthy feature of this work is the fact that the meetings are frequently attended by Roman Catholics, Hindoos, Brahmas and even Mohammedans. One Mohammedan has been converted and baptized, and several Hindoos have been awakened, but not as yet brought to a decision. A considerable number of Roman Catholics have been converted."

HELPING THE MINISTER.—"One thing helped me very much while I was preaching to-day,' said a clergyman. "What was that!" inquired a friend. "It was the attention of a little girl, who kept her eyes fixed on me, and seemed to try to understand every word I said. She was a great help to me." Think of that my little ones; and when you go to church, or chapel, fix your eyes on the minister, and try to understand what he says, for he is speaking to you as well as to the grown-up people. He is telling about the Lord Jesus, who loves the little ones.

A GOOD LADY once remarked to Dr. Adams that his sermons were a little too long. "Don't you think so, Dr. Adams?" said she, "just a little." "Ah! good sister," said he, "I am afraid you don't like the sincere milk of the word." "Yes, I do," said she; "but you know the fashion now-a-days is condensed milk."

Revival Intelligence.

Rev. E. A. Yates, Presiding Elder of the New Berne District, writes:

I have never seen such a general revival of religion on this District. I think I am sure the spiritual, financial and building condition of the District has never been better than now—at least, within my knowledge. The preachers have labored hard, some of them excessively. Bro. J. N. Andrews has been almost prostrated with sore throat by protracted preaching; but the "word of God is not bound," nor will he be in a week or two, I trust.—The preachers on my District certainly deserve credit for constant and prayerful effort.

Rev. R. L. Abernethy writes:

BRO. BOBBITT: Brothers Ferree, John Dorsey, F. R. Kaylor and myself held a meeting at Salem Church, near Morganton recently, which resulted in the conversion and accession of a number of persons to the M. E. Church, South. The meeting closed with a large number of penitents at the altar.

Rev. J. H. Grimm writes Oct. 21st.

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: You may say to the lovers of Zion, that the Lord has been reviving his work, on the Wadesboro circuit. At Pleasant Hill, we protracted our meeting 8 days, which resulted in 25 conversions and 27 accessions. Bro. J. S. Nelson, our beloved P. E., and Bro. J. H. Sanford, of the Lylesville circuit, rendered me great assistance at the place. My next meeting was held at Sandy Plains, where we had 20 conversions and 11 accessions. I was assisted at this place by Bro. Sanford. My next was at Long Pine, which resulted in 14 conversions, and 11 accessions. I was assisted at this place by Bro. T. W. Kendal, Local of the Wadesboro circuit. We protracted from the 3rd Quarterly Conference—which was held at Bethel. Bros. J. S. Nelson, P. E., O. J Brent, of the Wadesboro st., and M. V Sherrill of the Monroe st. were with me rendering me great service. This meeting closed on the 10th day, with 33 conversions, and 27 accessions. Making in all 77 accessions, and 93 conversions. I have been greatly assisted in my labors by Bro. W. C. Porter, an exhorter, as well as the lay Brethren of my circuit who are a noble set of christians. The membership of the church has been greatly revived, and the spiritual condition of the church is good. To God be the glory!

From Rev. James Mahoney we have the following:

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: The good Lord is still with us, in the presence and power of the Holy Ghost, carrying on his blessed work, spreading scriptural holiness over these lands. I commenced a meeting at Cokesbury the 1st Sunday in this month; protracted till Thursday night, which resulted in the conversion of six precious souls, all of whom joined our church. The church at this place had been in a cold (and to some extent) backslidden state; during the meeting, the membership were greatly revived, refreshed and blessed. I had no ministerial aid, though a number of the members from "Bethany" came over to our aid, with their lamps trimmed and burning. Worked in the altar,—encouraging and praying for mourners, and singing sweetly as they are used to do, to the cheering of us all.—I feel they helped the few faithful sisters, at Cokesbury. Great and lasting good was done.

The next Friday I preached at "Bethany," where the 4th Quarterly Meeting was to be held Saturday and Sunday—text 6th and 7th verses of 95th Psalm. We had a good meeting: the congregation came, worshiped and bowed down before the Lord our Maker, and felt that he was their God, and that they were the people of his pasture and the sheep of his hand.—Our beloved Presiding Elder, Bro. Black, came and preached at night to a large congregation—Saturday the house was full. Bro. B. preached again; good feeling, and good done—at night Bro. Thomas W. Smith preached to a crowded house, filled his place well, and interested us all. Sunday morning dawned on us clear and beautiful. The crowd came—the Presiding Elder preached, as he is accustomed to do, in demonstration of the spirit and power. I have never seen as many young, happy christians at one time, come forward, kneel around the altar, taking their places at the feast, to bless the Founder's name in taking the sacrament, as on that occasion. We who love the Saviour, felt that we were kings and priests unto God and felt 'twas our privilege to give him glory &c.

At the close, one man, high in the esteem of all who knew him, came forward and joined the church.

We will say "Hallelujah! the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." Amen.

Rev. W. H. Watkins sends us the following.

DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: Our camp-meeting at Rehoboth commenced Saturday, 10 inst, and closed Wednesday following. There were many tent holders: and besides many families who camped with wagons. Our P. E., Rev. J. S. Nelson, arrived in due time and remained till near the close, preaching with power and laboring with much zeal in the altar. Persons that were present cannot rise up in the judgment and say to him, "you did not warn us, you did not instruct us." Revs. A. D. Betts, G. W. Gwinn, R. M. Brown and P. Greening, of the travelling connection, were present, and all showed zeal for the Master's work. Revs J. S. Kendall, T. Kendall, J. Shaver, A. Atkins and T. Hendley of the local ranks were with us. The first mentioned, Dr. J. S. Kendall, is indeed a veteran soldier of the cross. Though he hath seen 80 summers, yet he is abundant in labors. May the Lord give him yet many shields. There were present Revs. Wilhoit, and D. Davis of the Baptist church.

Generally speaking, we had good order for so large a crowd. The Lord was with us from the beginning and we had a feast of fat things. I think near 20 professed faith in Christ, 9 joined the church, 6 adults, and 7 infants were baptised. The hearts of many were made glad; the closing service conducted by Rev. T. Kendall will be long remembered.

There were many anxious souls that did not find Jesus. Let all pray, that they may yet find Him, and that those who have found Him may never turn back any more.

There have been about 70 added to the church on this (Stanly) circuit this year. The Lord be praised for his goodness.

Rev. J. P. Simpson writes 15th Oct. as follows:

MY DEAR BRO. BOBBITT: The revival in this circuit continues. We report 55 converts in addition to 141, reported 30th Sept. last. Of the 196 converts, 135 have joined our church: 36 were members at the time of their conversion; 18 belonged to the churches; and 7 have not joined any church. There has been a general awakening in the circuit, the more remarkable at Gold Hill. It has brought a moral revolution in the conduct of its citizens. All classes have been more or less impressed by the exhibition of divine power. Some of the most notable of the profane and wicked, have joined the army of the Lord. The conversions were quick and powerful, demonstrative and convincing. The zeal and efficiency of the converts was beyond all precedent examples that I have witnessed. The elder members, too, shared largely and joyously in the consolations of the Holy Spirit. They were many of them, (so they say) revived beyond all former experience. We their Pastors, find it good, pleasant and spiritually refreshing to mingle with them. The Preacher in charge, has just spent 5 days among them and received 71 into full membership at one meeting. Such a number of converted persons he had never before received into one church, at one and the same service. It was an impressive and happy scene. The whole congregation stood and rejoiced with loud praises. Twenty three were baptised by pouring, and enjoyed the substance, while receiving the figure, the emblem of the Holy Ghost. He then organized 8 classes of 25 members each, (a large membership appointed 16 teachers and organized and set in active operation, a Young Men's Christian Association. In that lovely band there are 10 or 12 young men (converts) who pray with uncommon intelligence, piety and zeal. They can exhort, sing and pray and work beyond any band of converts I have ever received into or seen in our church. They have moral courage, and religious power in an uncommon degree. They are almost every day or night, and have been for sometime, engaged in some religious service. "The zeal of God's house hath eaten them up." There have been upwards of 30 conversions at their meetings. The church is already of the belief that God will call more than one of their happy band, to be a David, a Peter or a Paul.

The old and tried friend of our church in Gold Hill, brother Ephraim Mauney, pronounced Mooney, is our faithful Nehemiah, our church builder. He has already reared the walls of our new church building, and is pushing forward the frame work with great industry, and will rear it within a fortnight, if he shall have favorable weather. And it would be unkind did we fail to speak of the devotion and moral heroism of our christian ladies at Gold Hill. They toiled long and actively, devoutly and usefully to help forward the good work of revival and reformation. The Misses Cunningham, known to so many of our preachers, as faithful helpers, with many others, stood up nobly and courageously for their Master's cause. "Verily, they have their reward."

Gold Hill, in morals and religion, in all the elements of christian life and doctrine is greatly improved and is improving. We are devoutly grateful to God for his kindness and love to his people. To him be all the glory! Amen!

Rev. C. H Phillips writes Oct. 21st: Please say through the Advocate the Lord is with us. At Wesley Chapel we had 20 accessions and over 30 professions. At Mt. Olivet 40 conversions and 40 accessions. I have received 86 into the church on the circuit thus far, and more will unite.

Rev. J. T. Harris writes Oct. 20th: We have a fine revival now in progress in Hillsboro.

SEVENTEEN Methodist preachers belonging to one family—two great grand-children, ten grand-children, and five children of the late Luther Peck, of Syracuse—had a gathering at the residence of Bishop Peck, in that city, on the 23d of October.

Religious Brevities

SOME of the seventh Day Baptists propose to change their denomination al name to "Saints of the Most High.'

THE number of Methodists in England, as reported at the late Conference, are: Primitives, 164,772; United Methodist Free Churches, 61,371; Wesleyans, 857,645. Total, 589,733. To these are to be added to minor bodies; The Bible Christians and the New Connection Methodists.

MR. SPURGEON has received the sum of $50,000 for his Orphanage and Students College. The legacy was bequeathed by a gentleman who had attended Surrey Tabernacle for a few months.

The North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, will convene at Hank Chapel, Chatham county, N. C., on Friday before the 3d Sabbath in November, 1874. The opening sermon will be delivered by Rev. W. C. Clements, of Morrisville. Rev. Dr. Wellons, President of the General Convention South, will be present.

The American Board of Foreign Missions has retired from the work of evangelization in Italy, and recalled the few laborers it had sent there. The experiment, the officers of the Board say, was faithfully made, but resulted in no fruits corresponding to the toil and expense. They think that other methods of evangelization, by men thoroughly suited to the field, and working by plans which Americans do not readily adjust themselves to, must be relied on to carry the Gospel into Italy, and raise up Churches and a Christian ministry.—Presbyterian.

THE General Conference of the canada Methodist Episcopal Church has adopted provisions to admit lay delegates to the General Conference without any conditions or limitations as to the restrictive clauses of the Discipline. It has also made proper modifications in the composition and powers of the District Conferences, by which the lay delegates are to be chosen. A report on Methodist union was adopted, and a committee was appointed to consider and formulate a basis of union "with the Methodists of the Dominion, or of the Continent or any branch or section thereof."

Bishop Janes has so far recovered from his recent severe illness as to be able to resume his official duties.

Profitable Politeness.

The Boston Traveller, in commenting on the prevalence of rudeness, tells the following incident that happened some years ago: There was a very plainly dressed elderly lady, who was a frequent customer at the then leading dry goods store in Boston. No one in the store knew her even by name. All the clerks, but one, avoided her and gave their attention to those who were better dressed and more pretentious. The exception was a young man who had a conscientious regard for system. He never left an other customer to wait on the lady, but when at liberty he waited on her with as much attention as though she had been a princess. This continued a year or two, until the young man became of age. One morning the lady approached the young man, when the following conversation took place:

Lady—"Young man, do you wish to go into business for yourself?"

"Yes, ma'am," he responded, "but I have neither money, credit, nor friends, nor will any one trust me."

"Well," continued the lady, "you go and select a good situation, ask what the rent is, and report to me," handing the young man her address. The young man went, found a capital location, a good store, but the landlord required security, which he could not give. Mindful of the lady's request, he forthwith went to her and reported.

"Well, she replied, "you go and tell Mr—that I will be responsible.'

He went, and the landlord or agent was surprised, but the bargain was closed. The next day the lady called to ascertain the result. The young man told her, but added, "What am I to do for goods? No one will trust me."

"You may go and see Mr—, and Mr —, and Mr —, and tell them to call on me,"

He did so, and his store was soon stocked with the best goods in the market. There are many in the city who remember the circumstance and the man. He died many years since, and left a fortune of $300,000. So much for politeness, so much for civility, and so much for treating one's elders with deference due to age, in whatever garb they are clothed.

AROUND THE TEA-TABLE, by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage; Published by Cowperthwait & Co., Philadelphia. Sold only by subscription.

This book consists of fragmentary articles, sketches and essays on all kinds of subjects, and written in Mr. Talmage's inimitable style. It is interesting as all his writings are, and contains much quaint and original thought and illustration.

THE NEW SONG, FOR REVIVALS, PRAYER AND CAMP-MEETINGS, by Rev. Aaron Coons, New York. Nelson & Phillips, Methodist Publishing Home, New York, 50 cents per copy, $45 per hundred copies.

We have received from the author and compiler this publication which seems to be well adapted to the purposes for which it is intended, and has received many testimonials of its worth from various competent sources. It is not a vapid compilation of tunes and songs taken at random from former publications but consists chiefly of new songs and, tunes composed and arranged specially for this book, by Mr. Coons and others. We consider it a valuable publication.

We have received from Messrs. Strawbridge & Co. of Cincinnati, Lithographic Printers and Engravers, a handsome chromo, entitled "Uncle Jonathan." Chromos, handsome and cheap can be had of them. Address them at Cincinnati, Ohio.

Died, in Alamance Co, N. C., on the 23d of July 1874, in the 66th year of her age, Mrs Margaret Dailey, wife of Mr James Dailey. She had been a member of the Christian Church for 40 years, and died in the full hope of obtaining the blessed reward promised to those who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. She spoke of her approaching end with calmness and resignation.

She bore her affliction during her protracted illness, with out a murmur, trusting implicitly in Him whom she had so long served. She rejoiced several times during her illness, and exhorted her husband and children to prepare to meet her in Heaven. Husband and children weep not for your loss is her eternal gain and she is already entered into the rest which remains for the people of God."

Poetry

A Tribute to the memory of "Little ——," child of Capt. Wm. E. and Mrs. M. Ardrey, of Pineville, who died August 14th, 1874; aged three years and four months.

Gleam on, my lovely spring
Thou hast a jewel, kindly gave
Rest in joy, was moved to weeping.
But we lost it in the grave.

LITTLE ROSSIE.

Sleep sweetly Rossie, in thy grave,
Dear innocent, thy soul,
Thou dwellest in the bosom of flowers wave,
Thy spirit is with God.

Our home is clothed in sorrow now,
For Rossie is not here.
We miss thy voice in every room,
We miss thee every where.

"Mama" will wait in vain at morn
Her Rossie's smile to greet,
And "Papa" darling, in the evening
Thy kisses will not meet.

Forever closed the bright blue eyes,
That lit Heaven's love on earth,
Forever hushed the lisping lips,
That breathed their holiest words.

Dear Rossie, thou wert beautiful,
As calm in death you lay,
With flowers wreathed on your brow
You that bright morning day.

And here those eyes are closed
Closed while the world was gay,
For in the night time angels came
They lightly and beauty traced.

They came and kissed the sleeping one,
They kissed her cheek, her brow,
We know they kissed her, for they left
Traces of heaven on earth.

And we will not call them cruel now,
We will not be envious with them
ers
To home so far more sweet than this,
Than this cold world of ours.

Now we for thee can see flowers
Flowers, or pearly gates
Or hear the sweet celestial songs,
Or see the gold plates.

Wave gentle flowers, above the cradle
Where little Rossie sleeps
And low calm waves be still,
For God our Jewel keeps.

Johnny's Conversion.

The following account of the conversion of a little boy, as related by his father, will, we are sure, interest our little readers, and we trust, be blessed to them:

"When my child was about three years old, and while speaking to him of a divine Savior, I said to him: Johnny, the Lord Jesus came into the world to save sinners little sinners like you, as well as big sinners.' He looked up and said: 'What is a sinner, papa?' 'You are a sinner, Johnny.' 'No, I am not, papa. I don't know what a sinner is.' I described some of his little faults, but without applying the description, and remarked: Any little boy who does so is a sinner. These things do not make him a sinner, but they show that he is a sinner; for, if sin was not in him, it would not come out in this or in any other way.'

"With blushing face and flowing tears he sobbed as though his little heart would break. Laying my hand gently on his head I asked him, with tenderness, what was the cause of his grief; but he only wept more loudly, and clung to me the more. I then asked: 'Have you found out who is a sinner?' 'Yes, papa!' 'Who is a sinner?' 'I am a sinner, papa!' 'Then the gospel is good news to you, Johnny; for it tells you of Jesus, the sinner's friend.' It was my habit to direct his mind to Christ Jesus alone.

"When my child was about seven years old I was occupied, during a few months, in a large village, in making known the gospel of the grace of God. Many poor, neglected sinners were there brought together to hear; and about forty of them were led by grace to know the joyful sound. Infidels, openly immoral persons and gray-headed sinners were of the number saved; and in the midst of these was my own little one, confessing Christ in all in all.

'A few of the particulars of his conversion may serve to show the simplicity of his faith in Christ.

"One evening, after a meeting at which Christ alone was exalted, and God's way of saving sinners through him was declared, my little boy came to me, led by his mother, who said: 'Papa, Johnny wishes to say something to you.' 'Well, my dear,' said I, 'what is it you wish to say?' He replied quietly: 'I believe now, papa.' 'What do you believe?' I inquired, being careful not to anticipate or suggest. 'I believe, with my heart, that Jesus is the Son of God, and that he died on the cross for sinners; and God the Father raised him from the dead, and he is now at the right hand of God in heaven, Lord of all.' These were his precious words, and he added: 'I do believe this, papa, with all my heart.' Giving thanks to God, I asked my little one this question: 'Are your sins forgiven, Johnny?' 'I don't know.' This was said just as a little child would speak.

"About a week after he came to me with a placid countenance and said: 'Papa, I believe more now.' 'What do you believe now, my dear?' 'I believe with my heart, as I told you last week, that Jesus is the Son of God who died on the cross for sinners, and that God raised him from the dead; and he is at the right hand of the Father, Lord of all. And I believe that God has forgiven my sins for Jesus' sake. All fear is taken away, papa, and I am now waiting for Jesus to come from heaven.'

"It was a touching sight when, in the midst of a group of rescued sinners, this little one stood and confessed his faith in Jesus, the divine and only Savior of his soul. There stood the infidel and the gray-headed sinner, and, in the the midst of such, this little one of seven years old, confessing alike the grace by which they were all equally saved from sin and death, and the value of that precious blood in which their various sins were all and forever washed away." — Pure Streams.

Do not let us confound zeal with faith. A man may be zealous yet have little faith. No; we must believe the promises. We must have it engrafted into our being that God is the rewarder of those who diligently seek him. Our faith in the Lord has been such for years that we felt as one would on being told the Lord was in our house, and we had but to open the door to see him face to face.

Farm, Garden & Household

Experiments With Varieties of Cotton.

I have tried many varieties of cotton seed, and generally have found them, to some degree at least, conform to the specialty claimed. "The Boyd Prolific," "the Diskson," and "the Simpson," and a few others, are very valuable varieties of short staple, "the Simpson," being by far the most thoroughly developed variety, as the plants of this seed have for years, under care full selection, exhibited greater uniformity than any cotton I have ever planted. Last year a friend sent me seventy seeds of "Fifteen-Lock Cotton." I planted it very carefully, and got sixty five plants from the seventy seeds, it was planted on good and highly improved soil; proved a prolific cluster cotton, but not well-established, as the stalks were not uniform. I soon discovered what the "Fifteen-Lock Cotton" meant. The forms clustered occasionally so close together that three or four of them would be merged into one, thus forming a gnarled monstrosity, the specialty of clustering having been carried to a ruinous extent. I do not think, however, that there were more than a dozen of such deformities. Just twenty of these stalks were uniformly close clustering, with every boll having five lobes. I discarded the other stalks, and saved the seed from the twenty stalks, and this season planted on a rich piece of ground—one-fourth of an acre. The result is a very fine cotton, much of it the best clustering cotton I ever saw, though it is not yet uniform; and on this one-fourth acre I have seen only three specimens of the "monstrosity" above referred to, though there are great numbers of clusters of four and five bolls, yet all distinct and separate. As I before mentioned, these seeds were selected from bolls of Fifteen Lock Cotton, and from stalks where every boll presented this peculiarity.—The peculiarity is by no means common in this crop. There is a considerable quantity of it with five locks, but it is by no means common. I send you a sample of the healthful clustering of this cotton, and of the deformity also, and you can judge what "Fifteen Lock Cotton" is.—Hopkins, in the Rural Carolinian for October.

Developing the Fertility of the Soil.

Rain, sunshine, alternate heat and cold, together with the powerful action of electricity, disintegrating, pulverizing and desolving the rocky surface of the earth from time immemorial, has the effect of producing a soil adapted to the production to the production of useful plants which in the process of time, become adequate to the sustenance of living creatures. A fertile soil must be formed before useful plants can grow; and useful vegetables, grain and fruits must grow out of the soil, or animals and human beings cannot propagate their species. But pulverized granite, ground gypsum, marble dust, or the flour of shale, or slate, if ground ever so fine, cannot be denominated a soil. Still, if the surface of a barren country were covered a foot or more in depth with finely pulverized rock, say the flour of granite, the unavailable fertility in that mellow bed could be easily developed so as to produce a soil that would yield one hundred bushels of Indian corn per acre, or forty bushels of fine wheat, or three tons of prime hay per acre.

Certain species of weeds and plants possess a wonderful power in preparing soil for the luxuriant growth of vegetables and grain producing plants. Fertile soils have been formed simply by the working which the ground received by the growth of vegetation supplemented by the fertilizing material which was annually restored to the seed bed when all vegetable growth returns to dust. Taking the hint from the instructive operations of Nature, tillers of the soil can readily perceive how easily a piece of ground of ordinary fertility can be made to yield one hundred bushels of shelled corn per acre, forty bushels of wheat, one hundred of oats, or one thousand bushels of excellent turnips. This can be accomplished by sowing about four bushels of Indian corn per acre twice every season, and ploughing the green crops under for a few successive years.—N. Y. Observer.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

The Source of Many Ills.

If all the ailments, bodily and mental, which torment the human family could be traced to their primary sources, it would probably be found that three-fourths of them originated in the failure of the stomach and the other organs by which the food is converted into nutriment and applied to the purposes of life, to perform the tasks allotted to them by nature, vigorously and regularly. This being the case the vast importance of a medicine which compels these organs to do their whole duty thoroughly and efficiently, becomes at once apparent. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters may be truly characterized as a preparation of this kind, indeed as the only one which can be implicitly relied on as combining the properties of a thorough, mild, alterative and active tonic in such proportions as to produce simultaneously the desired effect upon the disordered stomach, liver and intestines. This conclusion is warranted by the celerity and certainty with which the Bitters afford relief in chronic cases of dyspepsia, torpidity of the liver and constipation. The false idea that these complaints and others that grow out of them, could be cured by fierce cathartics, has at last, it is hoped, been thoroughly exploded. The sick, during the last half-dozen years have swallowed thousands of tons of mercury, scammony, gamboge, croton oil, jalap, &c., and tens of thousands of graves have been prematurely filled thereby. But ever since the principle of prostration, as embodied in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, was employed against the principle of prostration, as represented by mineral salivants and lurious purgatives, the latter has steadily and surely fallen into deserved contempt. The outcry against stimulation, by which concoctors of depleting medicine hoped to give relief to their exhausting, and oftentimes poisonous compounds has only served to expose the designs for the wholesome stimulant, under the alternative claim to favor on the ground of its purity. Although this article is now the most popular stimulant in the western hemisphere.

Dr Pierce and Law on the Proposed Change in the Discipline.

Mr. Editor: With much diffidence, I undertake to comment a little on Dr. P.'s views, as given in the papers, upon the change proposed to be made in the General Rules in reference to alcoholic liquors. Dr. P.'s great age, great learning, great experience and well proven fidelity to the M. E. Church, South, entitle him to the large influence which he possesses. His character and position render any error in judgment about an important matter a very serious misfortune; and will also, doubtless, deter many who think differently, from a public expression of their views. Such, indeed, would be my case were it not that a sense of duty, with which I have in vain endeavored to compromise, compels me publicly to notice, adversely, his opinion. And the more so, from the fact of the tremendous importance which attaches thereto, because of the favor with which he urges upon all the church papers to publish his opinion, before the sitting of any Conference, which is to determine by vote whether the change shall be made.

If I understand the Dr., he takes the position that the church has no right to enact the proposed law, because it transcends the Bible in its requirements: that the Bible forbids neither the manufacture, sale nor use (as a beverage) alcoholic liquors.—If we join issue, believing that the Bible does forbid all, by fair argument and interpretation, if not positively its use and sale.

1st. Its manufacture: this requires time, labor and capital; which three things are talents; to use these for the production of that, which is injurious to man and subversive of the merciful interests of God to man, as manifested in the gift of his Son, or either, is wrong; is an improper use or abuse of those talents. If the general tendency of this product is injurious, the production is wrong. It is manufactured to sell: it is sold to be used: it is used, and all observation proves that he who uses it, as a beverage, and generally ends in using it to intoxication. This excludes him from polished, even respectable society generally, and always, if unrepented of, from heaven. The love of money (which is the root of all evil) is the cause of the manufacture. If these things be so, then inevitably the manufacture of alcoholic liquor is wrong, and the manufacturer a sinner, and a habitual sinner ought to be in Christ's Church.

2nd. It is made of grain or fruit. This produces a very large, unnecessary demand for the articles of which bread, the staff of life, is made: thereby enhancing the price so that the poor is compelled to spend an unnecessary amount of his Lord's money for the physical maintenance, which ought to go some way for the glory of God while the poor may, and sometimes does, lack and suffer hunger, and therefore it is wrong. Fruit is a very great, and greatly unappreciated blessing, given by our kind Father at that season of the year when the appetite of man and beast craves, the physical economy demands, and the earth is saved or improved by it. To create out of it that which is detrimental to health, offensive to the normal palate and appetite, &c., and fatal to good morals, if excessively used, as it generally is, if used habitually, which is or literally the case if used at all is wrong; and he who creates or manufactures it, is a sinner, and ought not to be in Christ's Church.

The manufacturer of alcoholic liquors does it solely to make money; he knows that it will be drunk; that it tempts men to drink: that many will become drunkards, attended by all the ills and horrors which he continually witnesses around him, ending in temporal and eternal ruin. I say he knows all this, and knowing it, if he love his neighbor as himself; if he desire the welfare of his fellows; if he love goodness and morality, can he, by possibility, make it? Ought a man, whose talents are being used to place before his fellow man that which tempts and leads to and does ruin, ruin, destroy him and his, to be received into or retained in the church of Christ? By all that is good, all that is pure, all that is holy, by every purer feeling of our nature. No!!! and let all the church say—Amen.

2nd. Its sale. I think its positive prohibition is in Isaiah, 5th chap. 22, 23, 24 verses. "Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink: Which justify the wicked for reward, and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him! Therefore as, &c." Here the "mingler of strong drink" may be, and I believe is, the liquor seller, who is ever ready to find an excuse for a "wicked" man to drink the liquor which he furnishes for the "reward"—for his money, and also to tempt and excuse the righteous (church member) until his righteousness is lost in drunkenness. 22nd verse pronounces a woe upon the wine drinker: (more of this anon.) See also Habakkuk 2 chap. 15 verse. "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth thy bottle to him and maketh him drunken also, that thou mayest look on their nakedness!" How anything can be plainer than that woe is here pronounced upon the liquor dealer, I cannot imagine. 1st. Upon him who gives it, as politicians for instance, sometimes, and gentlemen in each other's houses; treats in saloons, &c. 2nd. A little worse, it may be, "that putteth thy bottle" (in any way, anywhere) to him; 3rd, "and" (worse yet) "maketh him drunken," that so, lost to all sense of decency, he exposes his person to be viewed in its nakedness, as poor Noah; or it will admit of the interpretation, without violence to the fact which we often see, of one man making another drunk in order to take advantage of him; his intoxication rendering him liable to, open to (marked" as to his reason) imposition, whereby he is defrauded. Hence, being denounced by Scripture, liquor selling, &c., must be wrong. Is that man a fit subject for church membership upon whom the "woe" of the head of the church is resting? Clearly not; and most persons whom we have heard on the subject (their name being legion) in and out of the church say, Amen!

This ought to suffice without referring to those Scriptures from which the legitimate inference condemns the liquor dealer; to instance: "No man liveth to himself." Now what is the influence exerted by the liquor seller upon the community? This is so palpable it can need no argument.—The Bible requires an equivalent to be given for that which is exchanged; does the liquor seller give it? As we are not writing a temperance essay, we will not stop to invite attention to the misery, degradation, ignorance, crime, &c., growing out of and produced by the liquor seller; but will ask for any good that ever has grown or can grow out of his business. Ought a member of the church to, can he consistently with his christian integrity, engage in any pursuit upon which he cannot, dare not, ask the guidance and blessing of God? Will you imagine the prayer of the grog seller and will you put it in print: or will you fear lest in such an attempt God may pronounce you sacreligious, mocking, and strike you down? If he cannot ask that blessing on his daily vocation, what will be the account given at the judgment? Surely he ought not to be in the church, and the church ought to, aye, must have a law by which she can purify herself.—It is a painful fact that many members of the M. E. Church, South, and some of them official members too, holding the license of the retail grog shop keeper, daily present the tempting cup and deal out to their neighbors what they know will temporally and eternally ruin them, and proffer the cup of temptation to their brethren in the church, some of whom are weak and their righteousness is taken from them. If my liquor selling christian (?) brother supplies me with the beverage and happening to get a little too much, or being in such a physical condition that a very little has an unusual effect, I become intoxicated; how can that brother sit upon my trial when our church arraigns me for the commission of this act, "sufficient to exclude me from the kingdom of grace and glory," and give his verdict against me? As solemn and serious as this is, I, with diffidenlty, restrain a laugh, while my imagination pictures the solemn countenance and the pious sigh of my tempter, aider and abetter, voting me guilty and excommunicating me, his fingers meanwhile toying with the shilling in his pocket, which awhile ago purchased my downfall: his sympathetic (?) heart praying God's mercy on me, the next breath craving God's blessing on his business, the business that took away my righteousness. Can even the solemnity of the subject restrain the smile arising from beholding this scene, so difficult to distinguish from a solemn farce? Why was the serpent cursed for asking the woman to eat the fruit, pleasant to the eye, delicious to the palate and desirable to make one wise? Was it not for tempting her who was cursed because she yielded? Is there no analogy here, or are the two cases too similar to admit of analogy? If there be no sin, no moral wrong in the business, has it no appearance of evil, from which we are as emphatically enjoined to abstain as from drunkenness?—Right or wrong, there are thousands in the church who believe it to be sinful, and St. Paul says—we are to do nothing whereby our brother is made weak, or our weak brother stumbleth, which is an offense against him, and thus sinning against the weak brother we sin against Christ. See 1 Cor VIII Chap.; and Romans 14th chapter. Our church needs more of the substance of religion: she needs purifying; she must be purified, or notwithstanding the great number of revivals reported in the newspapers, she will continue to spiritually languish and decrease in moral power. Who will risk his reputation for intelligence, candor and veracity by asserting that to-day there is in the M. E. Church, South, as much (by a great deal) of pure, undefiled, simple, humble piety, Christ—likeness that there was 20 years ago? Has the world that high regard for and confidence in the real, genuine goodness, godliness and unselfishness of both ministry and laity that it had in the days of $100 salaries; the old stick-gig of the Presiding Elder, when he, in homespun coat, of the "shad" pattern, met his members in class and with them shouted the praises, blessed the goodness of God and rejoicingly, if not ecstatically, sang, "Children of the heavenly King." "We're on our journey home," &c. There may be more dignity, polish and refinement, as the world has it, "keeping up with the times," in broad cloth, patent—leather, organs, rhetorical flourishes and all that; but where is that deep, earnest, really self-sacrificing, humbleness of heart and meekness of spirit that Mr. Wesley practised and so insisted upon and did characterize his adherents, in so much that they were contemptuously styled "Methodists," and upon which foundation this present gigantic structure of Methodism has been reared? What will the end be, is a question requiring no prophet to tell if the church's increasing worldly—mindedness be not checked; if she be not purified. Her great, though plain and simple doctrines must be preached from the housetops (how seldom do we hear them) and the almost neglected Discipline must be executed: She must be purified or I much fear it will ere long be said unto her as it was unto the angel of the church of Sardis (Rev. 3 chap., verse 16 especially). One mighty trouble of the church is her liquor-selling and dram—drinking members; and the indifference manifested on this subject by many others—I am happy to know of not one manufacturer among them.—Let them with love and gentleness be reclaimed—or have "no more place among us"—The Discipline does forbid the selling (as a beverage) of liquor by a minister. By what express Biblical authority? Why not he sell as well as a layman? Does the Bible make or warrant any such difference? The common liquor seller devotes his talents to that which is of no service, in fact or tendency, now or prospectively, in developing or improving the world; the physical, mental or moral man; in promoting the glory of God, neither directly nor indirectly; nor in advancing the cause of Jesus Christ: but it has been the reverse in all the past, is in this present and will be all time to come. It, therefore, ever has been, is now and forever will be wrong: one of Satan's mightiest instruments in effecting the ruin of man: and therefore no one, who professes and calls himself christian, must permit himself to be so far imposed upon by the old Deceiver and father of lies, as to aid him in his soul-destroying work. God has cursed him and God says "Woe to him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth thy bottle to his mouth."

(To be concluded next week.)

The Christian at Work sees both a difference and a distinction between a superintendent who oversees his school and one who overlooks it - overlooks the disorder, the new scholars, the visiting parents and friends, the study of the lesson, and the important details necessary to keeping a school from being "a monument of mismanagement," which, by the way, is a good alliterative, but a bad actual title for any Sunday school.

Dr. L. Pierce and the New Rule.

Mr. Editor: I see in your paper of Oct. 7th, 1874, an article in reference to the 'New Rule,' from Rev. Dr. Pierce, D. D.,—the 'Nestor of Methodism.'—I have the most profound respect for this great man and eminent minister of the Gospel. While I feel great diffidence in opposing Dr. Pierce on this or any other question, I feel bound, nevertheless, to do so. I believe he is in error, and hence I shall try to show wherein.

1. The Church has the right to change the 4*th* 'restrictive Rule' by the vote of two-thirds of General Conference and three-fourths of all the members of the Annual Conferences. Mr. Wesley was a wise and good man. He never claimed to be infallible; nor has the Church ever dreamed that he was. No man, it seems to me, can question the constitutional right of the Church, to change the Rule in reference to 'spirituous liquors.'

2. Dr. Pierce assumes that Mr. Wesley's original rule is the same identical rule now in our Discipline. He takes up a whole column in an argument on this assumption. The rule now in the Discipline reads thus:—'Drunkenness, or drinking spirituous liquors, unless in case of necessity.'—But Mr. Wesley's original rule reads thus: 'Drunkenness, buying or selling spirituous liquors, or drinking them, unless in cases of extreme necessity.' (See history of the Discipline, by Emory, page 178.) See Wesley's works, vol 5, pages 190 2.) Also see Lee's History of the Methodists, page 31. Now, either all these authorities are in error, or the rule now in the Discipline is not Wesley's original rule. Who is right, Dr. Pierce, or these authorities? 'Buying and selling spirituous liquors' was a part of Wesley's original rule. These words are not now in the Discipline. The rule then has been changed. Who did it?

3. The Church has changed this rule more than once. Robert Emory, in his History of the Discipline, page 181, says:

'The rule on this subject has been at different times as follows:

1743. Mr. Wesley's original rule:—'Drunkenness, buying or selling spirituous liquors, or drinking them, unless in cases of extreme necessity.'

1789 'Drunkenness, buying or selling spirituous liquors, or drinking them.'

1790. 'Drunkenness, or drinking spirituous liquors, unless in cases of necessity."

Here it is manifest Dr. Pierce stands opposed to history. Now if we had Mr. Wesley's original rule in our present Discipline we should be better satisfied with it. For if our members could neither buy, sell, nor drink as a beverage, they would not make it to sell or drink as a beverage.

4. Dr. Pierce says: 'Mr. Wesley, like a wise man, made temperance one of his fundamental conditions of Methodist fellowship. But this he did not upon the basis of total abstinence, but upon the basis of useless use of liquors. We suppose the idea of including all distillations of liquors and all sale of it never entered into his mind, for the good reason that what was obliged to be allowed, required both the others.' What is the difference between the 'useless use of liquors,' and the use of liquors, and the use of liquor as a beverage? We suppose such an idea did enter into Mr. Wesley's mind—else it never would have come out in the shape of his original specific rule. The new rule proposed by the General Conference does not prohibit the 'making, buying or selling of liquor,' except in those cases where it is made, bought and sold for a 'useless use.' The 'useless use' is drinking it 'as a beverage.' By the terms of the new rule a man may 'make, buy, sell and use liquor' for medical or mechanical purposes, but to use it 'as a beverage is the 'useless use.' But to 'make, buy, sell and use intoxicating liquors as a beverage is not simply a 'useless use;' it is rather a use that is demoralizing, ingenious, ruinous to body and soul, and blasting to the character of individuals, churches and nations. Mr. Wesley's head was level on this question. In his original rules for 'Band Societies,' which can be found in the 'History of the Discipline,' page 185, one of the rules reads thus: 'To taste no spirituous liquors, no drams of any kind, unless prescribed by a physician.' This looks like Mr. Wesley had an idea in his mind that all use of liquors except as a medicine, was a 'useless use.' How does this differ from total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors as a beverage? If to use liquors as a beverage is a 'useless use' can a Christian 'make, buy or sell liquor' to be thus used?

5. Hear the Doctor again: 'I declare that not one of all the advocates of this measure can show a single text in all the law of God which expressly forbids distilling as such, the simple selling of liquors as such, or the temperate use of it at will, so as to justify any connections with it as sufficient to dissolve Church relations!' Hear this, ye whiskey makers, buyers, sellers and drinkers, and rejoice! I call the Doctor's attention to this passage: 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.' * * * 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.' Matt. 22 and 37-39. Here I hold: 'The making, buying, selling to be used as a beverage,' which is a "useless use," are all by plain inference forbidden.

According to the Doctor's position you cannot turn a man out of the M. E. Church, South, for any act not named specifically in the Bible.

How could you turn a gambler out of the church? how a dancer? how a horse racer? But the Doctor has taken a position above, which he contradicts before he closes his article.

6. Hear him again. "There is nothing necessary to put a distiller out of the church if he is refractory, but to try him under the first article of our general rules, as they are, considering them as containing the fundamental condition of fellowship in our church; which is to be secured first" "by doing no harm" * * * "every-body knows that running a distillery as a business, is doing harm."

Let every distiller hear this and tremble; for your business is already condemned in the first article of our general rules. You are 'doing harm.' Dr. Pierce says: 'Everybody knows that running a distillery as a business is 'doing harm.' Mr. Wesley's original rule declares that, 'Drunkenness; buying or selling of spirituous liquors, or drinking them, unless in cases of extreme necessity,' are forbidden by the general rule of 'doing no harm;' and Dr. Pierce declares that, 'Every body knows that running a distillery as a business is doing harm." Mr. Wesley and Dr. Pierce cover the whole case of 'making, buying, selling and using as a beverage intoxicating liquors,' which is the new rule proposed!

The new specific rule is already comprehended in the general rule of 'doing no harm.' Let the charge be 'doing harm,' and the specifications ministering to intemperance for filthy lucre's sake, if he be 'a distiller' or vender; or for appetite's sake, if he be a drinker; you will never fail to get a verdict of guilty, I never did. Says Dr. Pierce: 'You cannot be flung in this issue.' The Doctor clearly and effectually spikes his own gun, and his arguments about the new rule changing the conditional ground of Church membership explodes itself.

I shall vote for the new rule as already embraced under the general rule of 'doing no harm,' and because it covers the whole case, while the present rule does not.

Does God Hear Prayer?

The enemies of Christianity turn their batteries first upon one point and then another of Christian doctrine, so that every inch of the Christian rampart has to be tested. Recently the guns of the opposition have opened with unusual vigor against the Christian doctrine that, "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of those that diligently seek him." If the enemies of this doctrine are correct in their views, then all forms of prayer are useless—an actual waste of time and thought and words. In reference to this subject Tyndall says, "we must abandon caprice and trust the law of nature," and his admirers have caught up the expression and enlarged upon it with enthusiasm, so that we may now meet with the following formularies of setting forth such thoughts.

1. "As God is infinitely wise and good, his wisdom and justice will lead him to bestow whatever is fit for us without praying, and if anything be not fit for us we cannot obtain it by prayer'

2. "God will always do what is best from the moral perfection of his nature, whether we pray or not."

3. "We must regard him as a capricious tyrant, who will not do what he knows is needed for the welfare of his subjects without being suitably placated."

4. "If God gives rain without prayer, then prayer is not needed to produce rain."

Such expressions as the above are now becoming familiar with the admirers of those who would wish to baptize skepticism with the name of science, but they are that "swerving from the right line which leads eternally astray." They suppose that God has established laws, over which he is never again to have control.—That through all succeeding ages these laws are either to work in harmony or antagonism, without the interference of the divine hand that first set them in motion. If such a position be true, then the sovereign of the universe is the greatest slave of the universe, having imposed upon himself eternal restrictions, involving difficulties more inextricable than those of Laocoon.

On this subject, Richard Watson remarks: "The true immutability of God consists, not in his adherence to his purposes, but in his never changing the principles of his administration." Now "the duty of prayer rests upon divine appointment," and if God has established it as a principle to give blessings, spiritual or temporal, in answer to the petitions of his subjects, it involves no necessity for a change of principle. It becomes "a part of his unchangeable system that prayer shall be heard and answered."

God saw that to create a truly intelligent being, it was necessary to create a moral being—one capable of merit and demerit, otherwise his intelligence would be automatic, as much so as the machinery of his factory or locomotive systems. To create a moral being it is essential that he should be surrounded by circumstances mutable in their character, that conditions should be varied to develop and test the virtue of the being. Under such circumstances if God should bind himself never to aid the good or visit a just retribution upon the bad, but that all should alike take the chances of laws irrevocable, and that had been voluntarily placed beyond the control of Omnipotence, it would indeed look like divine caprice. But Infinite Wisdom "will always do what is most consistent with his wisdom," and if it is consistent to reward the good and punish the evil, a little more or a little less impulse given to any operation in nature would involve no infringement of his immutability.

Letter from Bishop Keener.

St. Louis, Mo., October 9, 1874.

Mr. Editor: I have just concluded the Southwest Missouri Conference. The Missouri, the Western and this Conference came so closely one upon another as to leave me but little time for writing. The Western Conference is that part of the Missouri Conferences which look out toward the Pacific, and embraces the States of Nebraska and Kansas; in fact the heroic part of their territory. It argued but little healthy progress to cut off those plainly-populated and difficult regions from the strong and inviting breadth of the mission-field. There is a necessity for something to fall back on with men who occupy outposts; they must have the moral support of a good backing. It not only strengthens their own hands, but it presents a front to the enemy not estimated by the scouts and skirmishes which appear, but by the army behind, of which they are but the advanced guard. As it is, the preachers of the West have to go back constantly by transfer to the Missiouri Conferences, and their places must be supplied by fresh men. A small Conference is worse than a mistake—it is a calamity. Our system of District Conferences is admirably adapted to meet the wants of those who have to work so far from the center as to be unable to go to the meeting of an Annual Conference. Then the advantage of throwing, as often as may be needed, fresh relays of laborers upon the frontier, without their losing pleasant Conference relations, would be retained. One can go to Denver from the South west Missouri Conference, on the Kansas Pacific, for half fare, say $20—not much more than it takes to go to Conference in Mississippi or Louisiana.

The session of the Missouri Conference was a very agreeable one to me. Bishop Marvin was present and aided largely in giving interest to the public services of the occasion. This is a fine, homogeneous body, doing its work well. They cultivate an excellent region for the development of both Conference and membership. Quite a number of stations of equal strength, and a fine list of first-class circuits, with some sterile spots, constitute its territory.

The Southwest Missouri Conference has also a most desirable width of rich bottom and lime mountain lands, dotted over with towns of from three thousand to forty thousand inhabitants. The railroads are frequent and the amount of travel very great all over this spirited, uneasy region. Everybody is wide awake in pursuit of some thing, far more disposed to combine in associations, corporations and stock companies than are our people. The most desperate adventures at boring or opening mines, starting factories, buying exclusive rights, or monopolizing articles of merchandise are entered into without fear of results. Men do not become discouraged by failure—only take a new departure. One here is in the middle of the current of that stream of population which has for years now been setting westward. The ships which unload their living freights in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore discharge mainly for this market. That mass of undigested European population which avoided Southern ports has debouched upon this northwestern space, and, like the turbid waters of great rivers, can be recognized far out in the ocean.

The white man is preponderant so overwhelmingly that one scarcely sees the negro. It is a good place to philosophize and argue from in reference to the capabilities and qualities of the black man. And in this respect invites population from the South. But only in this respect. There is nothing else here to attract one from Alabama, Mississippi or Louisiana. The Christian church has not so sensibly and deeply affected the whole population; the ministry does not occupy relatively so good a position, nor is it nearly so well supported. A preacher coming from the South, though among friends, will have to form a reputation and influence as if starting anew, and will find himself received with brotherly welcome, with out enthusiasm. The prospect of usefulness is increased by the motley-populous character of the country; but, on the other hand, lessened by the prevalence of many forms of heresy and skepticism which have never found their way yet into the South. It therefore becomes preachers who think of leaving Georgia and the Gulf States and the Carolinas, in the hope of finding a riper and fairer field for themselves and for their families, to ponder well what they seek for, and ascertain whether the Northwest offers the advantages they wish to find. Some have done well and are highly esteemed by their brethren here; but so they would have been and were at home. Others have been disappointed, and seek relief by still going West.

I think it high time, in the midst of the "Westward, ho!" enthusiasm, to put in a few plain sentences, at least, for Southern men who are fifty years of age. There are troubles here looming up as well as in the South, and no part of the country is more dependent than this for the very existence of society upon the prosorving and leavening influence of the church of Christ.

I send you in this envolope one of the far famed brown grasshoppers of the West. He has made no small reputation, both in Church and State. On a clear day I looked up toward the sun, when in Kansas City, and saw them far up in the air, shining as snow flakes, and fully as thick. They rise against the wind and generally go with it, but in the upper currents seem to be moving all abroad. At the first jump they fly some twenty steps, and seem about as heavy as the ordinary insect, but are really capable of sustained flight equal to that of any bird. They pass in clouds, at times, that shade the sun. They can eat with relish almost every green thing, and marvelous things are told of their dibbling successfully at the handles of picks, devouring carpets, clothes, dog-fennel, almost anything that can fill a vacuum. You will observe that this is quite an ordinary-looking individual, and falls considerably short of those glossy, fat fellows, common with you, that display their black bellies, and backs tipped with red, as they feed upon the coffee weed in the early summer-time. His eye is bright, and on his breast there is a very tolerable likeness to the human face, having upon it a rueful expression—pretty much that of one whose collections have come short by reason of the "grasshopper." Bro. Sullivan's little son, Magruder, presented me with a collar box full of them for the sake of "Auld Lang Syne." He has quite taken to me. The States of Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska and western Missouri have suffered severely from this insect epidemic. In the spring the eggs laid will yield a yet larger crop, unless destroyed by the severity of the winter.

Hoping to see you all speedily, I am truly yours. J. C. Keener

Jeff Davis' Private Papers.

The papers and effects captured with Jeff. Davis at the close of the war, have ever since been jealously preserved in the Government vaults in Washington A few week ago Mr. Davis had his memory jostled by a business transaction, which made it important to have certain private papers stowed away in the catacomb of the War Department. Through a Southern friend he communicated with the Secretary of War and asked if there was any impropriety in requesting the return of such unimportant documents and letters as would only be of service to him in business relations. Gen. Belknap thought there would be none, and the urn of the Confederacy was brought forth, the seal broken and the contents examined. The letters and private papers ordered to be returned. A ring, several boxes of cigars, brought by blockade runners, and not having the loyal evidence of internal revenue stamps, underwear and linen shirts, in as good a state of preservation as any cloth about the mummies at the Smithsonian Institution, were also included in the category. At the bottom of the box were exhumed dreadful emblems of war, a pair of revolvers and a carbine. Should these, too, be returned? A council of war was held, at which General Townsend, General Vincent and the Secretary of War were present. It was solemnly resolved that, at the present critical juncture in the affairs of the South, it would be imprudent for the War Department to furnish arms to the ex President of the deceased Confederacy. The rusty revolvers might have in them elements of a new rebellion, and wise statesmanship dictated that these silent weapons of death should again be consigned to the catacombs of the War Department, where a Democratic successor of the present secretary alone can wake them to glory. It can be stated that this affair had nothing whatever to do with the recent outrages in the Southern States. Mr. Davis gets his private papers, some of his friends have been favored with the dried up cigars as souvenirs of the Lost Cause, and all that is dangerous, the revolvers and carbine, again repose peacefully in the War Department, for the great seal of General Townsend has consigned the box to its old position, wrapped about with red tape and marked, "handle with care."

The Preacher and the Turkey.

A correspondent sends the following story to an English paper, and vouches for its authonticity:

Half a century ago, when the income of a Dissenting preacher was not very large, his salary was often supplemented by a bountiful supply of provisions, from the well-to-do members of the congregation. The grandfathor of our correspondent was a Baptist minister in Hertfordshire, and at Christmas-time he used to be positively inundated with hampers filled with good things. On one occasion an enormous turkey was sent to him by the thoughtful kindness of a neighboring farmer, but as the minister's family had already provided for the Christmas dinner, the bird was sent into the market and sold. A passer by, seeing this fine specimen of poultry, said, "What a splendid turkey! just the thing for the parson's Christmas-dinner," and to the parson it was sent. The prudent wife sent it a second time to the market. Another friend, singularly struck with the magnificent proportions of the turkey, purchased it, and also sent it to the parson. Not wishing to fly in the face of Providence, the good parson said at last, "It is very clear that the Lord means us to have this turkey," and, with the entire approbation of the family, it formed part of the Christmas-dinner.

The Cross (X) Mark is to remind you that your subscription has expired. Let all renew promptly.

It is with no little degree of pleasure that we announce to our readers the name of Robert T. Gray, Esq., as one of the editors and publishers of this paper. Having served as associate editor of the Advocate during the whole of 1873, and the early part of the present year, the readers of the Advocate will join us in extending to him a hearty welcome to these columns again. He returns to the paper at our earnest solicitation, and is not influenced in taking this step by any want of success in the practice of law. Fond of journalism, and being desirous to extend his usefulness in the church of his choice, he assumes the labors of editor, but does not abandon the practice of law, believing that the duties of the one will not materially conflict with the duties of the other,—a conclusion which those who know his working capacity will endorse. The increased and growing patronage of the Advocate has brought with it a corresponding increase of labor and responsibility. By a proper division of this labor and responsibility, the interests of the paper, in all its departments, can be better subserved. With this brief announcement, we continue to send forth the Advocate upon its mission of love, looking to the great Head of the church to direct our thoughts and to guide our pen. We make no pledges farther than that we will spare no pains or reasonable expense in raising the Advocate to the highest possible standard of religious journalism.

A fondness for journalistic work, contracted during my former connection with the Advocate, coupled with a sense of duty and the solicitations of friends, will explain my reappearance on these columns.

My former pleasant experience with the readers of the Advocate bids me hope that the future has in store for me not less, but greater pleasure and profit, inasmuch as my connection with the paper is to be more intimate and lasting.

Having had continued and full opportunities of judging correctly, I take pleasure in saying that I come to the Advocate in the hey-day of its prosperity, when its circulation is not only sustained but increasing and the demands of the best class of advertisers upon its columns are so great as to suggest, if not require, the erection of barriers against them. Commendations from every direction attest the esteem in which the paper is held and the approval which is given to the policy and management of its hitherto sole conductor.

I have no promises to make—except that as I tried to be faithful when occupying a subordinate relation to the Advocate, so now, I shall omit no endeavor, in the more responsible position of co-editor, to meet the demands of duty.

R. T. GRAY.

DAILY CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

For Conference Week.

We propose to issue during the session of Conference to be held in this city, commencing Dec. 2nd, a Daily Christian Advocate.

The Conference will be of great interest—many matters of importance affecting the good of the church will be discussed and passed upon, and it is desirable that our people should be informed fully of its proceedings as they occur. We are aware that it will necessitate much expense and trouble, but believe it to be a practicable undertaking.

The Advocate will contain a conference and church directory, full reports of proceedings, condensed reports of discussions and sermons, editorial reviews and suggestions, church news, a brief synopsis of the proceedings of the General Assembly and Grand Lodge of Masonry which will be in session at the same time, together with other matters of general interest.

In order to meet the expense of publication, the paper will be furnished daily during the session, postage paid, 30 cents per copy. We earnestly solicit our preachers and others to receive subscriptions and forward names and funds at once so that our books can be arranged before the meeting of Conference. Let the preachers make the announcement at their appointments, and when they cannot give the matter their personal attention let them designate a person or persons to canvass for the paper. Any person sending us ten subscribers with the cash, will receive the Daily Advocate, free of charge.

A Religious Newspaper—Its Benefits in the Family.

The times require special attention to the quality and character of the paper we read and introduce into our families. It is a mighty power either for good or evil. Papers are sought after more eagerly than formerly—the people will have a paper, and to them it becomes a vehicle of wholesome food or a deadly poison to the soul. We have labored long and much to impress upon the heads of families the duty of taking a good religious paper, such as we endeavor to make the Advocate, for the benefit of the household, earnestly contending that there is no process whereby so much can be done to enlighten the mind, to supply topics for useful conversation—to prepare our young people for going forth, and with intelligence, respectability and competence, discharging the duties of citizenship. There can be no doubt but that a large portion of our best moral impressions and sentiments have been suggested, reiterated and fastened on the mind by the family press. The pulpit is a power in the land—parental instruction accomplishes much and lasting good, but the press, the religious press is, in the present day, necessary to both.—Let any reader of a well conducted family paper open its pages and consider thoughtfully its contents. Look at the distinct articles—each one conveying an idea, a fact or a sentiment, and stated or illustrated so as to produce an effect in enlarging the reader's store of knowledge, or giving a right direction to thought, feeling, or action. Does not all this have its influence, and, in the aggregate a mighty influence upon the family as well as upon the individual reader? No reflecting mind can fail to see that the fifty two visits in a year of a carefully conducted religious paper—intelligent, correct, elevated in its moral tone, and interesting in its contents—must exert a great and blessed influence upon domestic life. Children growing up under such influences are far more likely to be intelligent, correct in their opinions and morals, and better prepared for the active duties of life, than they could possibly have been without it.

It is a lamentable fact that our people are so poorly supplied with the literature of the church. The friends of the secular press are at work, and the animal man is growing fat on secular-political food, while the spiritual man is starved into leanness for want of the bread of life. Thousands in the church are familiar with the political, but sadly ignorant of the religious movements of the age. They know the legislative enactments and party triumphs of the nation, but are wilfully ignorant of church legislation and the spiritual progress going on in our midst. It follows as a consequence that such people are more worldly-minded than spiritual. Let our preachers and all who appreciate the importance of these reflections, bestir themselves to greater diligence in circulating not only our paper but the literature of our church.

"Life and Writings of Dr. N. F. Reid."

We learn, through Bro. F. L. Reid, that this deservedly popular book will be ready for delivery at the approaching Conference—which convenes in this city, Dec. 2d. The book will contain a fine steel engraving of Dr. Reid—an elaborate biographical sketch of him—with twenty-five or thirty of his ablest sermons—among which are two thorough, analytical discourses on the much mooted subject of Baptism. The various other leading themes of the Bible are discussed in the author's logical style. In addition to the sermons, the volume will contain three of the author's able addresses, one on the missionary cause, one on Sabbath schools, and one on Masonry.

Messrs. E. J. Hale & Son of New York are doing the work, and this is a guarantee to the public that the work will be done in first-class style. Every Methodist, especially in North Carolina, ought to have a copy. We learn that all the preachers are authorized agents, and we hope that they will make an especial effort to bring up a handsome list of subscribers to Conference. Those desiring a copy of the work should hand in their names at once to the preachers and other agents. There will be two styles of binding, to be sold by retail, as follows:

French Morocco, gilt edge,	$3.50.
Extra Cloth,	2.00.

Single copies sent by mail on receipt of retail price. All orders addressed to Rev. F. L. Reid, Louisburg, N. C.

A correspondent of the Daily News, writing from Kinston, says: "Yesterday (Sunday) I attended M. E. church, South, at which the Rev. E. A. Yates, presiding elder of the Newbern District, preached morning and evening. Mr. Y. is a fluent speaker, and his discourses evinced deep thought and were listened to by large attentive audiences. There are other churches here, but the Methodists are in the ascendancy."

Notice.

The Board of Stewards of the Cokesbury Circuit will please meet me, as requested, at last Quarterly Conference at Bethany Church the Saturday before the 4th Sunday in November, for a final settling up of the financial business of the circuit.

I hope to see all the board present.

JAMES MAHONEY, Pastor.

War of Races

It suits the pleasure, because it serves the ends, of Northern fanatics and haters of the South, to draw from the disturbances that have occurred in some parts of the South, a picture of horror for their friends and a prediction that a war of races between the two populations, will ensue—a war determined upon by the Southern whites to exterminate or at least drive the negro from their borders. Without tracing them to their true causes, they seize upon acts of violence and bloodshed and with a hop-skip-and-a-jump sort of logic, spurred on by their partisan or sectional prejudices, arrive at the conclusion that the Southerner's heart is a hot-bed of animosity against his former slaves—that the torch, knife and pistol are used to carry into execution the deliberate suggestions of his malice and no hatred. Dr. Curry, of the New York Christian Advocate, venerable in years (but whose winters have failed to cool the prejudices for which he has been as much distinguished as for his abilities,) in the last issue of his paper devotes a column and a half to a review of the condition of the two races in the South, and attributes the sole responsibility of the difficulties that have occurred, to the malicious and revengeful spirit of the whites. He says: "race is arrayed against race, in all the relations of civil and social affairs. Through all those parts men know each other and are known as friends or foes, co-workers or antagonists, not according to their opinions and preferences, their creeds or pursuits, but solely as white men and black men."

He mistakes, or what is worse, misstates, the feeling of the Southern people—the animus which they have toward those whom they consider, and have been taught from their youth to regard, as their inferiors in race, intellect and capabilities. They pity the negroes for their ignorance,—and as that ignorance results in part from the condition of slavery they were formerly in, the whites are anxious to educate and elevate them to a higher intelligence They pity them, too, for the short sightedness they manifest in the selection of their political friends and the willingness and delusion with which their minds wear a partisan yoke a hundred fold more galling and degrading than the shackles which, with the close of the late war, fell from their limbs. But as for hatred, mild or intense, there are but few among their old-time masters who entertain it, and it is certainly unkind and unjust to charge that a universal or general spirit of that kind pervades the Southern people.

It is true, as we intimated, that the Southern white man regards the negro as inferior in race, intellect, and everything which makes up a claim to recognition as an equal in society. The Northern white man, too, feels it, as well as the Anglo-Saxon wherever he may be He needs not the instinct which revealed the "true prince" to Falstaff, to tell him of this inferiority in the negro, for it is stamped upon him by the hand of nature with an impression which climate, schools, colleges, elective franchise, Freedman's Bureaus, or what not, cannot efface or disguise. The Anglo-Saxon feels that a nobler blood courses in his veins—he instinctively runs over the long page of history made bright with the triumphs and works of his own race, and compares it with the blank page left by the barbarous and indolent inhabitants of Africa's deserts and jungles. Feeling this, he cannot but grow indignant when an attempt is made, through what he considers sectional hatred, to override the laws of nature and force him to that association against which he revolts.

It is a mistake that 'race is arrayed against race,' and that 'through all these parts men are known as friends or foes' according as they are white men or black men. With but few exceptions, in all sections the kindliest feeling exists between the two races.—If it be in any sense true, it is but the result of the teachings of bad men who have stirred the passions of the negro by recounting and magnifying the evils of his former condition and holding up to him delusive hopes of advantages to be gained by arraying him against the whites.

If Congress had not essayed the passage of the Civil Rights Bill (which we are glad to believe was as odious to the great majority of Northerners as it was to the Southerners) the late disturbances which have frightened Dr. Curry and others, would never have occurred. The provisions of the Bill were in themselves wrong; if not wrong they were at least impolitic. It is unstatesmanlike to disregard the feelings,—prejudices, if you like,—of a people. There are certain ones which must be respected and which legislators always find it wise to respect. It was "a decent respect for the opinions of mankind" that prompted the Declaration of American Independence and gave birth to our government, and as long as the successors of those who framed that sacred instrument, fail to entertain a like decent respect for the opinions and feelings of the Southern people, so long may disturbances be expected.

Conference.

Any member of the Conference who does not expect to attend the approaching session, will confer a favor by so informing me

A. W. MANGUM.

A Lively Conscience.

One of our religious exchanges has recently published a pointed and useful article on the great need of the churches at the present day. The following is a brief extract from the article which we commend to our readers:

The first want of the Churches is consciences. Consciences which shall make them ashamed of the paltry excuses which keep them away from evening worship, but not from evening engagements of worldly pleasure; consciences which shall make them realize the solemn nature of Church covenants, and the inexcusability of unnecessarily and voluntarily breaking them; consciences which shall make them feel an individual obligation to maintain worship by their personal participation; consciences which will not allow them to run after sensational preachers, leaving their own pastors to discourse to empty seats; consciences that will make it imperative to encourage the pastor by doing all that is possible to give him a full house, so that, as "Paul and Barnabas assembled themselves with the Church, and taught much people," he may have the support of their presence and prayers. The first want in our Churches, now, is consciences.

Fragments

There is a deal of satire beneath the surface of E. Dodson, Jr's proposition to the Religious Herald (Baptist) which is as follows:

"I wish to write a series of articles for the Herald, provided you will charge me advertising rates for all over ten lines, as you do for obituaries. I do not want to waste my time and words, and, therefore, I will pack as much as I can in ten lines and stop."

Mr. Avery, of the Piedmont Press, has for some time been animadverting strongly upon certain persons in Hickory, who annoy church going people and outrage decency by tobacco-chewing in a church at that place. He makes this final shot:

We have appealed to the men guilty of this nuisance, in every way we deemed necessary for Christian gentlemen, in vain. Nothing but law will do them. We now turn to the boys and beg you not to allow this habit to overcome all the rules of decency which your good mothers have taught you We tell you it is wrong. It is a disrespect to the House of God It is a reproach upon your mother's training and an insult and injury to the ladies who visit the Church. It matters not what old man's grown boy, country squire, church elder or school teacher, sets you the example, it is wrong, and we trust you will stop it.

A PERSON once complained to Archbishop Whately that "the thought one should not go to church to be made uncomfortable." Mr. Whately replied that he thought so too; "but, whether it should be the sermon, or the man's life, that should be changed to avoid the discomfort, must depend upon whether the doctrine was right or wrong."

Rev. Fletcher Medley of the Kentucky Conference was invited to deliver the sermon dedicating a Baptist Church, in Ohio recently. He says in a letter to the Central Methodist that he "proceeded to dedicate the church in old fashioned Methodist style" and in lifting a collection to pay off the church debt, was made happy and enthusiastic by the donation of $10 by a poor Chinaman, lately converted to Christianity.

Rev. John H. Linn, D. D. has left St. Louis and resumed his place in the Louisville Conference. On his departure the Evangelical Alliance of St. Louis passed resolutions regretting his decision to leave them for another field of labor.

Rev. W. G. Starr, President of Murfreesboro Female College, writes that he has upwards of 150 young ladies in the College the present session—which is 50 per cent. better than the past session.

By request, we reproduce in this issue, with some slight changes, the article of Dr. Burkhead in reply to Dr. Pierce on the new rule.

Religious Brevities.

Rev. J. A Cunninggim, the popular pastor of Greensboro Station, is conducting a series of interesting meetings in his church.

The evening schools held by the American Missionary Association at San Francisco for the Chinese, had, at the close of July, 405 pupils—a large increase. Thirty-five have given up idolatry, quite a number have embraced Christianity.

A MISSIONARY in Turkey is translating into the Turkish language Nelson's "Cause and Cure of Infidelity."

EIGHT HUNDRED Congregational ministers in England signed the total abstinence pledge, but at the meeting of the Cheshire Baptist Association a similar pledge received only seventeen names.

Rev. Joseph Wheeler has recently held a meeting of great interest at Rockingham. We see from the Pee Dee Courier that Bro Wheeler is in great favor with his people.

At the late annual Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of New York, the church of St. Mary the Virgin, an extreme ritualistic organization, after much discussion, was admitted by a very close vote. It had been twice refused admission in previous years on technical grounds.

To Lay Delegates.

After many years of discussion in the M. E. Church, South, after much waste of ink and some display of temper, the Church adopted the system of lay delegation in the Annual Conferences. In some sections the laity pressed the change, whilst in others they displayed no anxiety, if not indifference upon the subject. But the change was made and the laity admitted to representation on the floor of the Conferences, not to full extent of equal representation demanded by some, but to such an extent as to enable them to exercise an important influence on the legislation of the Church. What is the duty of the lay delegates under the circumstances? Obviously, the first duty is to see that every delegate is in his place when the Conference opens, in order that in the appointment of committees and the general "mapping out" of the business he may be prepared to take his share and understand every proposed action from its, very incipiency. To do this let every delegate begin from this very day to make all his business arrangements so that he can SPARE A WEEK FROM HOME. Let there be no waiting until the second or third day of the Conference. If you cannot be there the first day notify your "alternate" and stay at home. Let there be no leaving on the second or third day unless providentially called away. Go prepared to do your duty to the end, and do not think of asking leave of absence. Stay until the appointments are read and carry the news to your anxious constituents.

Secondly. It is your duty to read your Discipline carefully before you go, so that you may think over the subjects which will engage the notice of the Conference and understand in some degree the method of proceeding and rules which govern the body.

Thirdly, Make particular inquiry about the different institutions of the Conference, its institutions of learning, its periodicals, its different, beneficial and beneficiary societies, its missions, its Sunday schools, its finances, and be ready to go into a consultation with any committee to which you may be called and give your views clearly and distinctly.

You may say perhaps, "the church has elected me a lay delegate but I am a poor man and not able to spare the expense of going to Conference." If this is your objection, do not hesitate to represent the matter to your lay brethren and ask them to defray the expense for you. Those whose partiality gave you the office will also be willing to aid you. But suppose it is necessary for you to make a sacrifice. Do not the poor Methodist preachers make this sacrifice every year, and you may not be called to do it again in your life; certainly you ought not to be elected again if you prove recreant to your duty now. You may not know—and I state it here in case you do not—that all the Rail Roads and most of the steamboat lines charge delegates to the Conference only one way. So that if you will collect enough money to pay your fare up to Conference there is no danger but that you will get home again, and up to this time it has not happened in the history of the N. C. Conference that delegates were not well fed and taken care of

One thing more and I leave the subject. Make particular inquiry about the appointments near you and which you are supposed to represent, and if you find that any of them are delinquent in any way, try and have the remedy applied before Conference. Why should you go up there to be ashamed of your constituents, when the preacher states he has not received his allowance, when it is announced that the widows and orphans, the sick, the superannuated, the bishops and other funds are short on your territory? Look into the matter before you have to blush and hang your head with mortification as the announcement is made that "Turpentine Circuit," (or whatever the circuit may be named) has not paid her assessments to all these funds. We hope to see you there looking proudly conscious that your constituents have done their whole duty.—Amen!

Yours sympathizingly,

O. L. E. STYLES.

REV. J. B. BOBBITT—Editor Raleigh Christian Advocate: To enable the Methodists of Weldon and vicinity to complete their large and elegant church that they have commenced, Maj E. G. Ghio, the liberal and courteous Superintendent of the Seaboard & Roanoke Rail Road, proposes to give us an excursion train to Portsmouth the 25th Nov. Two-thirds of the receipts from the excursion he agrees to contribute to the fund of our Methodist church, and he has made or will make suitable arrangements with the Raleigh & Gaston and Wilmington Rail Roads to run their trains in connection with this train, at reduced rates. The train will leave Weldon at 8 A. M., and return the same evening by 8 P. M., at the same time leaving it discretionary with those who avail themselves of this cheap trip to the "cities by the sea" to return next morning by the express or accommodation. Fare for the round trip from Weldon to Portsmouth, $1.50.

Here is an opportunity offered all who think proper to join in this excursion not only to assist our Methodists in furnishing our church, but also offers great inducements (at a cheap rate) to our traveling people, and the lovers of fish and oysters to gratify their taste for those delicious luxuries.

By the way, I must not forget to mention in this connection, that Maj. Ghio gave us an excursion from here to Portsmouth, the 8th of this month for the same purpose, viz., to assist in building our church, and the nett proceeds for the church amounted to the handsome sum of two hundred and thirty-five dollars; and Maj. Ghio tells us if the excursion to come off on the 25th November does not yield enough to finish our church, he will give us another and another and so on until enough is raised to finish the church, and in addition to this very gracious liberality the Seaboard & Roanoke Railroad has transported, free of charge over their road, all material and supplies needed for our church from Portsmouth to Norfolk. Too much praise, therefore, cannot be lavished on Maj. Ghio and the Rail Road he so ably and faithfully represents. And now that the Seaboard & Roanoke Railroad have come to our help so generously, let our people from our neighborhood and along the lines of connecting Railroads respond to those liberal propositions like men and women, and swell our numbers to at least one thousand or more on the 25th of November, 1874; and I beg leave to remark in conclusion that all who availed themselves of the excursion of the 8th of October, speak of their trip in the highest terms of praise, and we assure our friends who choose to help us on the 25th of Nov., that the committee who will have charge of the excursion will leave nothing undone to make all necessary arrangements for their comfort and pleasure. ROANOKE.

Revival Intelligence

Rev. F. H. Wood, in charge of Wilson station, says: The third Quarterly Meeting which was held at Barefoot's Chapel, was protracted two weeks, and was accompanied with a most gracious outpouring of the spirit of God.—Seventeen souls were added to the church, such I trust, as shall be ultimately saved in Heaven. It was one of the most interesting works I ever witnessed, and of great profit.

Rev. I. W. Avent writes:

About three weeks ago, we commenced a protracted meeting at Smithville. The Lord poured out his Spirit upon the people, and up to the present writing there have been over 40 conversions, 32 added to the church, and still the work goes on with increasing interest. All glory to his name! Pray for us!

Rev. T. P. England writes:

I closed a Meeting at Pleasant Grove last Saturday night, which had lasted one week We had 8 conversions and the same number added to the church, and the membership greatly revived. To God be all the glory!

Our circuit is improving; I think spiritually. We have also improved our parsonage property. We have just finished a well on the lot which has been badly needed. We have also purchased a cook stove this year and some other things that were in demand and have paid up as we went. I could give some other items but will not at present

Rev. James Mahoney writes October 26th:

Say through the Advocate that we are still having gracious revival seasons on the Cokesbury circuit. I commenced a meeting at Averysboro yesterday, (Sunday) a week ago, assisted by Rev. Thos. W. Smith—closed Thursday; compelled to do so to meet an engagement at Salem on Friday. The meeting at Averysboro resulted in 10 conversions, 8 joined the church, one other will soon. The church was greatly revived and blessed. Brother and sister B. had the pleasure of seeing three sons and two daughters converted and added to the church; another brother had a daughter converted;—all that were converted were children of pious parents and nearly grown. The promise we know is to us and to our children.

Bro. T. W. Smith commenced a meeting for me at Salem last Wednesday. I joined him on Friday. We had a good time He had to leave me yesterday afternoon. I am carrying on the meeting; two or three conversions and four penitents at the altar last night.

Praise God from whom these blessings flow. You'll hear from me again soon

SUNDAY AFTERNOONS, A book for little people; by E. F. Burr, D. D. author of "Ecce coelum," etc., Nelson and Phillips, New York.

A good book for the Sunday-School library, containing essays on "The Soul," "The Angels," "God," "The Empire of God," "The Laws of God," and "The Work of God."

HOLINESS THE BIRTHRIGHT OF ALL GOD'S CHILDREN- by Rev. J. T. Crane, D. D., Nelson and Phillips, Publishers, New York.

HOLINESS TO THE LORD, by Rev. Lewis R. Dunn, Nelson and Phillips, Publishers, New York.

For the foregoing books, just published, we render our acknowledgments to the enterprising Publishers.

Running Notes.

——T. B. Kingsbury, Esq, has become Editor of the "Spirit of the Age." of this City, and will make it a good paper. Messrs Armstrong and Enniss are making energetic efforts to widen its circulation. Success to it and every good effort to enlighten and elevate the literary tastes of our people!

It is said to be probable that the meeting of the Federal Court will be changed from Statesville to Charlotte. Before this is done, however, we expect Bro. Hussy, of the LANDMARK, to fulminate in no weak style. ——The Southern Home thinks the publication of the Presbyterian ought to have been moved to Charlotte instead of to Wilmington, from the fact that there is a universal tendency to "centralization" and modestly (?) says "all good enterprises naturally gravitate to this business centre," (Charlotte.) ——In reading a long and interesting editorial leader in the SOUTHERN HOME on 'Africa,' our opinion of the natives was heightened by reading that "a man is valued according to the number of wives he has," but experienced a sad decline when, a little further on, we found that it was because "a wife is a piece of property, worth ten cows in the market." ——Bro. Avery, of the PIEDMONT PRESS, was charmed with the State Fair, recently held in Raleigh. His experience must have been varied, for he says, "the music, the dancing, the OYSTERS, the whole was divine." Every one who reads his paper knows he can say things finely without taking down his poetry-book, and there is both sense and poetry in the following: "There were scores of pretty girls from the rural districts, whose cheeks outbloomed the most luscious peach and whose eyes were like liquid stars, girls who had the sense to know that paint and powder on their face would be as much out of place as on the petals of a rose. There were calm eyed matrons, only less fair than their daughters. There were men strong limbed, lusty and homely." ——The Democratic papers are greatly jubilant over the recent astounding democratic triumphs in States where elections have been held, and have commenced to name the future occupant of the White House at Washington. It is generally conceded that President Grant's third-term pretensions, together with the conduct of the administration toward Louisiana and other Southern States, are the cause of the late opposition trimmphs. ——The Southern Home attributes the growth and attainment to importance of the towns, Hickory Station and Polkton, to the advertising and "puffing" powers of the newspapers published in those places, to wit, the PIEDMONT PRESS and Polkton Ansonian. True, for,

To enlarge a town or help an enterprise;
To build up a creed or have y'r fortunes rise:
The editor that espouses, patronize.
In this the talismanic secret lies:
For the hoarded wealth of past experience cries,
Your goods, your trade, your calling advertise.

In an item a few weeks since noticing the call of the Charlotte DEMOCRAT for a law requiring foreign Insurance Companies to deposit funds in the State Treasury, for the protection of insurers in this State, the ADVOCATE stated that there was a law in our statute Books meeting the case. The last issue of the DEMOCRAT courteously corrects the ADVOCATE and shows that it was half wrong in that the law referred to does not fully meet its wants. The editor publishes the act referred to which is only a reciprocal law, requiring a deposit from companies chartered in those States which require a deposit from companies organized in this State. Bro. Yates says, and rightly too: "What is needed is this: Require every Insurance Company doing business in this State to deposit with the State Treasurer $25,000 or $50,000 in money or good Bonds, or invest a similar amount in real estate within the State, free from mortgage, as security that said Company will pay to Policy-holders the losses which it promises to pay if fairly and honestly incurred."

The Kinston GAZETTE says: Mr. Chauncey Gray informs us that he has cotton growing on his place, just over the bridge, with 130 bolls on the stalk, and that 68 bolls of it weigh one pound.—This is certainly the best yield on record. Ye farmers who know how to calculate such things can tell them how much that is per acre.

Charlotte was well represented at the Georgia Fair. P. S. Whisnant of that place took premiums. The Atlanta HERALD said: "Miss Amanda Davidson, of Charlotte, exhibited three very handsome crayons. Their beauty and excellent execution is worthy of notice."

North Carolina Matters.

Mr. J. D. Forney, of Burke, has the greatest cow on record, says the "Piedmont Press," for she is only [illegible] old and has had [illegible] from five to eight gallons of [illegible] day.

Says the Piedmont Press: A Rutherford College boy sat down on the [illegible] edge of a cross-cut saw at Connelly's the other day and he now stands [illegible] and tells what he knows about the [illegible] ged edge of despair.

Seventy-five lawyers were in attendance on the Federal Court in Statesville last week, before last. The hotels were crowded with suitors and visitors, and the citizens thrown open their doors, the crowd would not have been accommodated.

Says the Charlotte Democrat: A new Certificate of Stock for $20,000 was issued to Mecklenburg county last week by the Carolina Central Railway Company, in place of the old stock of the Wilmington, Charlotte & Rutherford Railroad which was lost to the county by the foreclosure of the Mortgage in 1872.

Twenty-four stalls have been engaged by Georgia horse-owners on the grounds of the Fair of the Carolinas which opens in Charlotte on the 3d inst.

The Charlotte Democrat says: At the Federal Court at Statesville, last week, Wm. Bryant of this city was discharged from Jail on bail, after suffering a long confinement. The charge against him is counterfeiting.

The property known as the Carolina Female College, at Ansonville, was sold at public auction for $2,250, Rev. John M. Leudon, being the purchaser.

The Monroe Enquirer says the cotton crop in that section will not be an average one—tho' much more than a half crop will be made and of a better quality than that of last year.

The Hillsboro RECORDER says that Christopher Jordan was waylaid and suddenly set upon by a person who seized him by the throat, and indicated by language that robbery was not intended, but some grudge to satisfy. A struggle ensued and Mr. Jordan threatening to shoot him the assailant ran.

The tobacco sale at Parish's warehouse, at Durham, for the benefit of the Orphan Asylum netted the sum of $[illegible] which was immediately paid over to the Asylum.

The Charlotte HOME learns that Mr. Eli Hinson's little son Henry, about seven years old was killed on the [illegible] by being caught in the gearing of the cotton gin, in Mecklenburg co.

The SOUTHERN LIFE INSURANCE Company will, according to the Home, soon erect in Charlotte a large and elegant building for its purposes, to cost $50,000.

The Magnolia Record says Mr. John Boney, of Duplin, has picked from a field of three acres 3,400 lbs. of seed cotton, and will get from the same field 2,500 lbs. more.

Stockholders of the Rock Island Factory met recently in Charlotte and reorganized for the purpose of starting operations. R. J. McDowell was elected President, and A. S. Caldwell, Financial Manager, under a temporary organization.

General News.

The survivors of Gen. Grant's [illegible] reunion at Atlanta were: [illegible]

A company is forming in England with a capital of £4,000 000 sterling to develop the resources of the West Indian colonies and Jamaica in particular.

Some surprise was created among the Faculty of Yale College the other morning by seeing the statue of President Day arrayed in the airy costume of a ballet girl, with a demoralized silk hat on the head and a seedy cotton umbrella in his hand.

A French writer declares that Turkey is a much better financial condition than France. The expenditures are less per head than those of France, the taxes $20 [illegible] per head, against $5 in France, and the debt $74 [illegible] per capita, against $70 in France

The marriage of Lieutenant Colonel [illegible] oldest son of the President, with [illegible] second daughter of Mr. H. Honore, took place at the residence of the bride's father at Chicago, Illinois, on the afternoon of Tuesday October 20.

Governor Moses, of South Carolina, has ordered a change in the election board in every county in the State so as to place one Republican, one Independent Republican, and one Democrat in every board—a commendable act.

Tweed's counsel have again been foiled in their attempt to show that the statement of Blackwell's [illegible] was really committed of one misdemeanor, and that his term of imprisonment should therefore expire with the first year. Judge Brady declined to order the "correction" of the record of conviction.

A committee of nine capable persons [illegible] witnessing the phenomena of mind-reading (so called) in New Haven last week, [illegible] but the greatest part of the experiments may be repeated in the presence of a smaller audience and when specific tests may be applied."

The Pebble

I am a pebble on the shore,
Rounded in the ocean's rolling;
I am one with millions more,
And the ceaseless wave is rolling.
Pebble, thou hast had thy day:
Quiet lie thou 'neath the spray.

Once I was a granite rock,
High I crested o'er the wave;
But I heard the earthquake shock,
And it came!—like my grave—
Pebble, thou hast had thy day,
Quiet lie beneath the spray.

O'the wavy briny deep!
O' the monsters I have seen!
And the tears I learned to weep
Tangled with the seaweed green.
Pebble, thou hast had thy day;
Quiet lie beneath the spray.

There's a pebble near my side,
Polished as the crystal clear:
We companioned in the tide—
Alas! that gem lies buried here.
Pebble, thou hast had thy day:
Grateful lie for that sweet ray

Round me lie the beauteous forms
That were broken long ago
From me, in the dismal storms:
Would I never knew the woe!
Pebble, lie thou with the shells;
'Tis what ocean ever tells.

Must I then forever lie
Lone, forgotten, made a here?
Tell me if the blue, blue sky
Will e'er change the resting bier?
Pebble, I have heard them say,
There's a Builder on his way.

Well, if in some jasper wall,
Or some pearly gate my part
Be to answer His great call,
Joy again shall reach my heart—
Pebble rest! the Builder's tread—
It is coming, lift thy head.

Soothes me this. In hope I rest.
Be the waters deep or shoal,
As the seabird soon her nest
Calmly see the billows roll.
So the pebble will abide,
By the storm-wave thrown aside.

THE GREAT MASTER.—"I am my own master!" cried a young man proudly, when a friend tried to persuade him from an enterprise which he had on hand: "I am my own master!"

"Did you ever consider what a responsible post that is?" asked his friend.

"Responsible? Is it?"

"A master must lay out the work which he wants done, and see that it is done right. He should try to secure the best ends by the best means. He must keep on the lookout against obstacles and accidents, and watch that everything goes straight, else he must fail."

"Well."

"To be master of yourself you have your conscience to keep clear, your heart to cultivate, your temper to govern, your will to direct, and your judgment to instruct. You are master over a hard lot, and if you don't master them they will master you."

"That is so," said the young man.

"Now I could undertake no such thing," said his friend. "I should fail sure, if I did. Saul wanted to be his own master and failed. Herod did. Judas did. No man is fit for it. 'One is my Master, even Christ.' I work under his direction. He is regulator, and where he is Master all goes right." "One is my Master, even Christ,' repeated the young man slowly and seriously; "every body who puts himself sincerely under his leadership wins at last.'

HOW HE GOT A GREEK TESTAMENT.—The Rev. John Brown, when a poor shepherd boy, conceived the idea of learning Latin and Greek, and having procured a few old books, actually accomplished the task while tending his cattle on the hills. On one occasion he went to Edinburg, plaided and barefoot, walked into a bookseller's store and asked for a Greek Testament. "What are you going to do with a Greek Testament?" said the bookseller. "Read it," was the prompt reply. "Read it!" exclaimed the bookseller with a smile; "ye may have it for nothing if ye'll read it." Taking the book, he quietly read off a few verses, and gave the translation, on which he was promitted to carry off the Greek Testament in triumph.

An unsophisticated person once declined a plate of macaroni soup with the remark that they "couldn't palm off any biled pipe-stems on him."

Farm, Garden & Household.

The Crops in the Southwest.

The Memphis Cotton Exchange, from numerous reports on the cotton crop in Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas, estimates that in these States, from the blighting effects of the recent severe drought, the aggregate yield will be about forty-five per cent less than that of last year. This will be a severe loss to the States directly concerned; but there are still more discouraging facts in this Memphis report, viz:—Having realized advances to the extent of their interests laborers have abandoned the picking of the cotton in many instances, and as, in addition to prices of cotton being very low, very little grain or meat has been raised, there is much foreboding as to the future. This devotion of their lands and their capital exclusively, to the cultivation of cotton has for many years proved a disastrous blunder to our Southern planters. They have depended upon their cotton to supply them not only with all their household and farming utensils and implements, their clothing, furniture, &c., but to supply them with provisions, to a great extent, from the Northwest, when, for manufactures of such descriptions and for all the articles of subsistence of the temperate zone, our cotton States offer facilites and advantages which exist nowhere else in the world. To these important matters of Southern reconstruction the attention of Southern planters cannot be too earnestly directed.—Ex.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

The Source of Many Ills.

If all the ailments, bodily and mental, which torment the human family could be traced to their primary sources, it would probably be found that three-fourths of them originated in the failure of the stomach and the oil organs by which the food is converted into nutriment and applied to the purposes of life, to perform the tasks allotted to them by nature, vigorously and regularly. This being the case the vast importance of a medicine which compels these organs to do their whole duty thoroughly and efficiently, becomes at once apparent. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters may be truly characterized as a preparation of this kind, indeed as the only one which can be implicitly relied on as combining the properties of a stomachic, an alterative and an aperient in such proportions as to produce simultaneously the desired effect upon the disordered stomach, liver and intestines. This conclusion is warranted by the celerity and certainty with which the Bitters afford relief in chronic cases of dyspepsia, torpidity of the liver and constipation. The false idea that these complaints and others that grow out of them, could be cured by fierce cathartics, has at last, it is hoped, been thoroughly exploded. The sick, during the last hundred years have swallowed thousands of cons of mercury, scammony, gamboge, croton oil, jalap, &c., and tons of thousands of grains have been prematurely killed thereby. But ever since the principle of renovation, as embodied in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, was arrayed against the principle of prostration, as represented by mineral salivants and furious purgatives the latter has steadily and surely fallen into deserved contempt. The outcry against stimulation by which concoctors of depleting drenches hoped to give eclat to their disgusting and dangerous compounds has only served to increase the demand for the wholesome stimulant, tonic and alterative which for twenty five years triumphed over all opposition and is now the most popular medicine in the Western hemisphere.

Bradley's Patent Enamel Paint.

It is but little more than a quarter of a century since the art of mixing paint was confined almost exclusively to a few comparatively speaking. Now, however, through the ingenuity of BRADLEY, we are not only enabled to apply the paint if we desire, but can use the shades in advance, sample cards being furnished gratis, with the different shades of this manufacture. Those who have used the "Enamel Paint," speak from experience, that it is all that is claimed for it, and evidently supercede the "old style paint." As an evidence of the great worth of the Enamel Paint, we must respectfully request all our readers to carefully read the excellent testimonials of Mr. C. P Enright, in this paper.

GREENE'S
OXYGENATED BITTERS.

The stomach is one of the most delicate organs of the human system; and the indigestible food crowded into it by the requirements of modern society, keep it in which is followed by a resort to tonics and alteratives for relief. It unfortunately happens, however, that many of the medicines used for this purpose contain alcohol, which, poured into a diseased stomach produces irritation, creates inflamation, and does more injury than good.

OXYGENATED BITTERS CONTAIN NO ALCOHOL,

but are purely medicinal preparation, which, in cases of DYSPEPSIA, HEARTBURN, INDIGESTION, and other like disorders, at once restores the stomach to its NATURAL CONDITION OF HEALTH.

The OXYGENATED BITTERS have been the most popular remedy for the above complaints for the last THIRTY YEARS, and still maintain their UNRIVALLED POPULARITY.
